CONGRESSIONAL RECORD,

FIFTY-FIRST CONGRESS, FIRST SESSION.

the petition of about two hundred and fifty of her neighbors, among the best citizens in Adams County, Indiana, where she resides, recommending her as a person of high character and requesting the passage of this bill.

The majority of the committee recommend that the bill be amended by striking out the word "fifty," in line 8, and inserting the word "twenty-five" in lieu thereof.

During the reading of the report.

Mr. MARTIN, of Indiana, said: Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the further reading of that portion of the report which sets out the evidence be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. MORROW. Let it be printed in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. MARTIN, of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I beg the indulgence of the committee for a very few moments. I dislike to trespass upon time which is so important to every gentleman present, but I desire to ask this committee to-night to disagree to the amendment proposed by the Committee on Invalid Pensions, striking out $50 a month and inserting $25. The history of this case, which has been made known to many who are present this evening by the report which has been read, presents a most pitiful spectacle. It presents the spectacle of a wife, in August, 1864, to whom her husband was brought from the field of battle wounded, she then being in good health, and as a result of her nursing and anxiety, followed by the death of the soldier, she contracted a disease at that time, and from that day to this has never seen a well day.

For six years she steadily grew worse, and during the last nineteen and a half years she has not sat, but has crouched, in her chair in her humble home a victim of the disease which was then fastened upon her, and which, according to the testimony, would not have come upon her if she had not given this attention to her husband. I have never made any criticism and I do not desire now to make any criticism upon the line of conduct pursued by the Committee on Invalid Pensions or by the House with regard to pensioning any class of applicants, but it seems to me that this silent, plain figure which has sat in her home helpless, not able to move, not able to reach out her hand or to extend her fingers to give you a cordial welcome for nineteen and a half years last past, appeals not alone to the sympathies of this House, but to its sense of justice, and I believe that for the few years of life yet left to this woman she should have a pension of $50 a month just as much as though she had been the wife of one who commanded the armies of his country or led a regiment. Therefore, Mr. Chairman, intending no disrespect to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which I belong, I ask that this Committee of the Whole shall not concur in the amendment, but shall reject it and allow this poor woman $50 per month.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment recommended by the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Mr. MORRILL. Mr. Chairman, I feel that I ought to say a word in defense of the action of the Committee on Invalid Pensions. I desire to call the attention of this committee to the fact that pensions are granted to widows, not on account of poverty or their disability, but on account of their being widows. The general law establishes the rate of $15 per month for the widow of a lieutenant. In my experience on the Committee on Invalid Pensions we have had a great many cases brought before us that appealed strongly to our sympathies, and none more strongly than this one, for I can hardly conceive of a case that would more strongly appeal to the sympathies of the committee or the sympathies the House than this case does.

But we have doubted the propriety of going into that field and of considering the condition of each widow who applies for a pension. The law makes no distinction between the widow of a millionaire and the widow of a pauper; it makes no distinction between the woman in robust health and the woman who is confined to her bed by sickness, and we felt that we were doing all that we could do, consistent with our sense of duty, in recommending an increase of this pension to $25 per month.

I do not want to appear as opposing this proposition, and yet I think it is due to the Committee on Invalid Pensions that I should make this explanation of their action in this case. If we are to take up in that committee the case of each widow who is now on the pension-roll and grade her pension according to her condition in life or according to her physical condition, there will be no end to it.

A pension of $300 a year is a very liberal pension; it will afford this woman a very handsome support; and I do feel that the action of the Committee on Invalid Pensions in this case ought to be sustained. If it is not sustained, we shall regard your action as an instruction from the House to consider the condition of the different applicants, and the committee will be flooded and the House will be flooded with bills of this kind.

Mr. OWEN, of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, whenever the Committee on Invalid Pensions shall bring in a case parallel to this one, I believe the sentiment of the House will be in favor of granting a pension of $50 a month. This is an unusual case. Here was a young wife in perfect health. Her husband was brought home from the field of battle wounded. She sat by his side and cared for him day and night until he died. She was left at his grave, a wreck.

According to the testimony of the physicians her disability went on increasing from year to year until at the end of six years she was utterly helpless. Her knees are so stiffened that the limbs can not be moved. Her elbows are so stiffened that they can not be moved. Her fingers are drawn back so that they can not be moved. There that woman has sat or lain for nineteen years, utterly helpless, brought into that condition by her womanly, heroic, angelic devotion to her dying husband.

For my part, I want to vote a fifty-dollar pension for that man's wife, just as I would vote it for him were he in that condition to-day as the result of his army service. Therefore I support the motion of my colleague from Indiana [Mr. MARTIN], and I trust that this committee will reject the amendment of the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and will grant this woman a pension of $50 per month.

The amendment recommended by the Committee on Invalid Pensions was rejected.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

ELIZA STANTON.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 1482) for the relief of Eliza Stanton.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place the name of Eliza Stanton, mother of Lafayette C. Stanton, late of Company A, One hundred and forty-fifth Regiment of Indiana Volunteers, on the pension-roll, subject to the limitations and provisions of the general pension laws.

The report (by Mr. MARTIN, of Indiana) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 1482) for the relief of Eliza Stanton, submit the following report:

The claimant is the mother of Lafayette C. Stanton, who served in Company A, One hundred and forty-fifth Indiana Volunteers, from January 23, 1865, to January 21, 1866. Her claim has been rejected by the Pension Office on the ground that the immediate cause of soldier's death is shown to have been a wound from accidental discharge of a pistol sustained subsequent to the date of his discharge from the service. Soldier left neither wife nor child surviving him.

It appears in evidence that the soldier was a sound and able-bodied young man when he entered the service, and on his return home in January, 1866, was a great sufferer from diarrhea, in consequence of which he became much debilitated, rapidly growing worse, and being compelled to keep his room and bed the greater part of the time.

On the date of his death, May 29, 1866, he went into the room where he conducted his business, when the town marshal came in to arrest one Joseph Washburn, a boarder at the house kept by the soldier and his mother, the claimant. Washburn resisted, and after some struggling, both he and the marshal drew revolvers and both fired, the ball from the marshal's pistol inflicting the mortal wound which resulted in the soldier's death an hour later. It is the opinion of others who were present that had it not been for the soldier's enfeebled condition he could easily have gotten out the way and saved his life for a time, at least. None of his friends, however, had sustained any hope of his ultimate recovery.

The claimant is a widow without property and means. The soldier was the principal support of the family. On this point no question is raised.

The fact of soldier's debilitated condition from chronic diarrhea at discharge, and his gradual decline until his death from the wound, as well as the circumstances of the shooting, are well known to the member of this House who introduced the bill in behalf of his old and needy mother.

The committee are of opinion that the case is one entitled to the favorable consideration of Congress, and therefore return the bill with the recommendation that it do pass.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

MRS. OLIVE PADGETT.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 2173) for the relief of Mrs. Olive Padgett.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place the name of Mrs. Olive Padgett, widow of the late J. William Padgett, of Company D, First Regiment Potomac Home Brigade, Maryland Cavalry, on the pension-roll of the United States, at the rate of $12 per month.

The report (by Mr. MARTIN, of Indiana) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 2173) for the relief of Mrs. Olive Padgett, submit the following report:

The claimant in this case is the widow of John W. Padgett, who served as private in Company D, First Maryland Cavalry, from November 5, 1861, to December 2, 1864. He was a pensioner for gunshot wound of left wrist at $3 per month and died February 20, 1873, of disease of spinal cord and brain. The widow's claim has been rejected on the ground that in the opinion of the medical referee the cause of soldier's death is not shown to be chargeable to his military service.

Surg. James Willard, in charge of Harper's Ferry Hospital, where soldier was treated for his wound, testifies that at first the wound was regarded as a simple flesh wound, without injury to either bone. But as treatment therefor progressed it was discovered that the healing process was slow, probably due to the morbid state of the patient's system. The wound was slow to suppurate and excessively painful. The ordinary anodynes, singly and variously combined, were unavailing for relief and seemed to augment the general nervous irritation.

While the wound was still unhealed a very large abscess formed in the gluteal region (side not now remembered), which reduced him so much that it was feared purulent infections would result and ultimately destroy his life. He had not yet entirely recovered from this abscess when the first invasion of Maryland occurred, which occasioned the closing of said hospital and terminated affiant's connection with the same.

Soldier was under treatment from June 24, 1862, when wounded, until November 3, 1862, suffering also from pneumonia during that time, as shown by the record.

It is also shown that soldier even after discharge looked pale, was emaciated, and frequently had attacks of intense pains in the lumbar region, in close proximity to the location of the abscess.

Dr. John Reid, who treated soldier more or less during the last seven years of his life, testifies that in the attack which resulted in soldier's death the whole of the spinal column and base of the brain were involved to such an extent that he was thrown into spasms, which continued to grow worse and worse until he died.

Affiant firmly believes that the suffering from the wound and his long confinement in hospital directly caused the abscesses to form and set up in the nervous system, and particularly the spine, the irritable condition which continued through life and which rendered him at any time liable to those violent spasms, and that his death is directly traceable to the wound received in service. Soldier was temperate in all his habits.

Your committee are of opinion that the case is meritorious, and therefore report favorably on the accompanying bill and ask that it do pass.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

WILLIAM BOONE.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 4840) to increase the pension of William Boone.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, authorized and required to place the name of William Boone, of Andrews, Huntington County, Indiana, late a private in Company F of the Eighty-eighth Regiment Indiana Volunteers, at the rate of $50 per month, in lieu of the pension he now receives.

The report (by Mr. MARTIN, of Indiana) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4840) to increase the pension of William Boone, hereby make the following report thereon:

A similar bill (H. R. 3404) was introduced in the Forty-sixth Congress, to pension the claimant, and was referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, which reported recommending the passage of the bill, which report is referred to as part hereof, but not set out herein.

The bill was ordered printed and referred to the Committee of the Whole, but died there without consideration.

In the Forty-ninth Congress a similar bill (H. R. 473) was introduced and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, which made the following favorable report:

"A bill granting a pension to this claimant was reported favorably by this committee and passed the House in the Forty-eighth Congress, but failed of consideration in the Senate. Your committee, therefore, adopt the report of the committee of the Forty-eighth Congress, as follows:

"That William Boone was a private in Company F, Eighty-eighth Regiment Indiana Volunteers. November, 1862, he was taken prisoner and paroled; and while at Aurora, Ill., on parole, July 4, 1863, while engaged in firing a salute in celebration of the fall of Vicksburg, by the premature discharge of a cannon he was assisting to fire he lost his right arm, and his left hand was injured so as to render it partially and permanently useless. He testifies in his own behalf that the citizens of said town were engaged in said celebration, and that he participated therein at the special request of said citizens, because he was a soldier and because it became him so to do as a soldier and patriot.

"He has not filed a declaration in the Pension Office, because, he says, he understood there were technical objections to granting a pension in his case under the rules and regulations of the Pension Office.

"The granting of a pension is strongly urged by the late Governor Williams and other distinguished citizens of Indiana. The surviving officers of claimant's regiment unite in a petition asking that his name be placed on the pension-roll, and assert that he was a gallant soldier, and faithfully, courageously, and honorably discharged his duties as a soldier, and that by reason of his physical disabilities, which were caused and exist as above stated, his capacity to earn a maintenance for himself, his wife, and three children, who depend upon him, is almost entirely destroyed.

"This case appeals strongly to the equity of Congress, and in view of the precedents for granting a pension in such cases, your committee recommend the passage of the accompanying bill, with the following amendment: Add to the bill these words: "Subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws."

Upon this report the bill passed the House, and upon going to the Senate of the United States was referred to the Committee on Pensions, which reported the same favorably in almost the identical words of the aforesaid report of the Committee on Invalid Pensions, which recites, as is true, that said bill had been passed by the House in the Forty-eighth Congress.

This bill was vetoed by the President in July, 1886, but no action was taken upon the objections made in the veto to the passage of the bill, thus leaving it an open question for the present Congress as to whether this bill shall be passed.

In view of the fact that this bill received the favorable report of this committee in the Forty-sixth, Forty-eighth, and Forty-ninth Congresses, was passed by the House in the Forty-eighth Congress, and by both the House and Senate in the Forty-ninth Congress, and that the injury suffered was received by the applicant without fault on his part and while he was a private soldier of the United States Army, is destitute, and sick, and wounded, therefore the bill should be passed.

Your committee further report that the applicant has been drawing a pension at the rate of $4 per month since July 29, 1887, which was increased to $6 per month since June 19, 1889, for disease of the urinary organs, rheumatism, and piles, but was refused anything on account of the loss of his hand and injury of his other hand.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

MRS. ELIZABETH BURRESS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 2175) granting a pension to Mrs. Elizabeth Burress.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll the name of Mrs. Elizabeth Burress, widow of John J. Burress, late a private in Company G, One hundred and eighty-ninth Regiment Ohio Volunteers, and pay her a pension, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the pension to commence from the date of her husband's death.

The report (by Mr. MARTIN, of Indiana) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 2175) granting a pension to Mrs. Elizabeth Burress, submit the following report:

The claimant is the widow of John J. Burress, who served in Company D, One hundred and sixty-eighth Pennsylvania Drafted Militia, from October 16, 1862, to July 25, 1863, and in Company G, One hundred and eightieth Ohio Volunteers, from February 28, 1865, to September 7, 1865, when discharged from general hospital at Huntsville, Ala. He died in January, 1866, of disease of lungs.

The widow's claim has been rejected on the ground that soldier's fatal disease originated after discharge.

The records of the Surgeon-General show that the soldier was under treatment for chronic diarrhea prior to and at the date of his discharge. There is no evidence that he suffered from disease of lungs during service or at discharge. It is shown, however, by the testimony of Dr. Moncrief, of Orrville, Ohio, a reputable physician, taken by a special examiner of the Pension Office, that the soldier came under his treatment on September 23, 1865, for disease of lungs, and was treated therefor, more or less, until January 21, 1866, when he died of acute pneumonia. The dates of treatment are taken from the records in possession of the doctor.

Disease of lungs is a recognized sequence of chronic diarrhea, in particular when followed closely upon treatment for the latter. In this case there is only an interval of about two weeks between the treatment therefor at the hospital and the treatment for lung troubles after the soldier's arrival at home. The widow, therefore, should have the benefit of any doubt that may exist as to the army origin of disease of lungs shown in September, 1865. Acute pneumonia, following upon an already diseased condition of the lung due to the service, is accepted by the Pension Office as pensionable death-cause.

Your committee are of opinion that the evidence is sufficient to connect the soldier's death-cause with his military service, and therefore report favorably on the accompanying bill, and ask that it do pass, amended, however, by striking out all after the word "laws," in line 8.

The amendment recommended by the committee in the concluding paragraph of the report was read and agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

STEWART HERBERT.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 2168) granting an increase of pension to R. Stewart Herbert.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, at the rate of $20 per month, the name of R. Stewart Herbert, late a private in Company A, Seventh Regiment Maryland Volunteer Infantry.

The report (by Mr. MARTIN, of Indiana) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 2168) granting an increase of pension to Stewart Herbert, submit the following report:

Stewart Herbert is a pensioner at the rate of $8 per month for loss of sight of left eye from gunshot wound received in action in the Wilderness, May 5, 1861. In 1865, after having been discharged from the service, he was thrown from a mule, striking on his face, breaking the bones near and destroying the only remaining good eye.

Although totally blind he can only get pension for the loss of the sight of one eye. Had he lost the sight of one eye prior to his enlistment, the injury in the service and consequent loss of the sight of the other would have entitled him to $25 per month from June 6, 1866, to $31.23 from June 4, 1872, $50 from June 4, 1874, and $72 from June 17, 1878.

The equities are as strong in the one case as in the other, and it would seem but proper that some relief should be afforded this unfortunate pensioner. The committee therefore report favorably on the accompanying bill and ask that it do pass, amended, however, by striking out the word "twenty," in line 5, and inserting therein the word "forty," also by inserting, after the word "infantry," in line 7, the words "in lieu of the pension now received by him."

The amendments recommended by the committee in the concluding paragraph of the report and an amendment striking out "R." before "Stewart," in line 5, were read and agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

JOHN NAGLE.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 1865) granting a pension to John Nagle.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of John Nagle, late of Company C, Ninety-second Regiment of Illinois Infantry.

The report (by Mr. FLICK) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 1865) granting a pension to John Nagle, have examined and considered the same and report it back to the House with a recommendation that it do pass.

The said John Nagle was a private in Company C, Ninety-second Regiment of Illinois Infantry, and filed a claim for pension upon the ground of cerebral hemorrhage, resulting in paralysis and hernia, which was rejected by the Pension Department because there was no record of his injury in service and his inability to furnish the legally required evidence of the origin of his disabilities.

From the evidence and affidavits on file it appears that on the night of the 29th day of November, 1864, he was one of a detail ordered to go to a railroad station some distance away for the purpose of acquiring certain information in regard to the whereabouts of the enemy, and Nagle claims that in the dark, and when not actually seen by any of his comrades, his horse, in attempting to jump a ditch, fell with and upon him, and thus caused the injuries which finally resulted in the disabilities complained of. He is quite well supported in this claim indirectly, but perhaps not directly. The colonel of his regiment swears to ordering the detail for the purpose stated, and that Nagle was one, and has some recollection of hearing at the time that Nagle was injured.

J. N. Nichols, a soldier in his company, swears to a recollection of the detail and that when it returned Nagle complained of his injury and was given a "lay off" of thirty days on account of it.

Luther Gedding, another member of the company, testifies that he was one of the detail, and that in crossing a ditch Nagle's horse fell and that Nagle complained of being injured, and he also says that according to his best information Nagle's horse died from the effects of the fall.

Allen McClure, also a member of his company, testifies to a recollection of the detail and that Nagle complained of his injury upon his return.

It is also shown by acquaintances that Nagle was a healthy man when he went into the service, and that when he returned to his home in June, 1865, he was very much broken down in health and suffering with paralysis, and one Anton Giebelstein heard Dr. Fairbanks, who was attending him, tell him that his paralysis was from his army service.

Quite a good showing is made of the reasons for not having more evidence from his army officers, his captain being dead, his first lieutenant was not with the regiment at the time, his second lieutenant does not recall the facts, and he has been unable to find the whereabouts of his first sergeant, letters directed to him to his supposed place of residence coming back uncalled for.

With respect to treatment after he returned home, it appears from his testimony that his first physician was Dr. Repke, who left the country, going to Germany, and whom claimant has been unable to reach, and that then he was treated by Dr. Fairbanks up to the time of his death in 1873. Dr. J. F. H. Sugar was then his family physician for five years, and he testifies to the existence of rupture and cerebral paralysis, and that he was not during this time able to work.

Dr. E. H. Hayen testifies to having examined him and finding him suffering from paralysis.

Upon this showing we believe that it is fully established that the disabilities exist as claimed, and that there is every presumption that these disabilities were acquired as a result of an injury in service as claimed, and that failure to establish it in the Department is more technical than real, and that it is a case that fully warrants giving the soldier the benefit of any doubt that may exist.

Your committee recommend the passage of the bill.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

LAURA A. YOURTEE.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 1471) granting a pension to Laura A. Yourtee.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll the name of Mrs. Laura A. Yourtee, widow of Samuel L. Yourtee, late chaplain of the Fifth and Eighty-third Regiments Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate prescribed by law for a chaplain's widow, from April 8, 1869.

The report (by Mr. FLICK) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 1471) granting a pension to Laura A. Yourtee, submit the following report:

The proposed beneficiary was a pensioner on account of the death of Clinton W. Searce, late chaplain Ninety-fifth Ohio Volunteer Infantry, which occurred August 20, 1863, from malarial poisoning. On April 8, 1869, she remarried one Samuel L. Yourtee, who also had been chaplain both in the Fifth and Eighty-third Regiments Ohio Volunteers. Yourtee at the time of his marriage to the claimant was in good circumstances, but by trying to help others he lost all, and left her dependent upon her own efforts. Being now sixty years of age, she is no longer able to keep up the struggle of life.

It also appears that claimant's second husband came home from service in broken health and was never thereafter a stout man, and died after a short illness of disease of lungs and heart. His death may be directly due to his army service, but he having failed to apply and furnish evidence in support of a claim for pension, it would be very difficult for his widow to establish now title under the general law. Her character is shown to be of the best. There is no one now drawing pension on account of either of said husbands, nor has there been since March 4, 1876, when the youngest child by the first husband became sixteen years of age.

The circumstances surrounding the case, coupled with the widow's dependent condition, appear to your committee as sufficient for favorable action on the accompanying bill, and they therefore return the same with the recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. MORRILL. This bill, I observe, grants arrears. I move to amend by striking out all after the words "volunteer infantry," in line 7.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

GUSTAVUS ALONZO DRAPER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 2131) granting a pension to Gustavus Alonzo Draper.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Gustavus Alonzo Draper, son of the late General Alonzo G. Draper.

The report (by Mr. FLICK) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 2131) granting a pension to Gustavus Alonzo Draper, submit the following report:

Gustavus Alonzo Draper is the son of General Alonzo G. Draper, of Lynn, Mass., who lost his life on the battle-field. He has been for two years an inmate of the insane department of the Lynn almshouse, having previously been confined in the Danvers Asylum for the Insane. He is twenty-seven years of age, is mentally and physically incapable of caring for himself, and, as he has no relatives able to support him, is entirely dependent upon public charity.

General Alonzo G. Draper left a widow, but the proposed beneficiary was and is his only child. The widow, Sarah E. Draper, was in receipt of a pension as widow of General Draper up to February 14, 1896, when she died and said pension ceased. All of which appears from the records and affidavits submitted in this case. Therefore your committee, to whom was referred the above case, in view of the foregoing facts respectfully recommend the passage of said bill with the amendment that said pension pass to his legally constituted guardian, and that he be allowed $18 per month.

The amendment recommended by the committee, adding to the bill the words "and pay to his legally constituted guardian a pension at the rate of $18 per month," was read, and agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

CLARA FREY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 6865) granting a pension to Clara Frey.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Clara Frey, widow of George Adam Frey, deceased, late of Company I, Fourth Regiment of Missouri Cavalry.

The report (by Mr. LANE) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6865) granting a pension to Clara Frey, submit the following report:
Clara Frey is the widow of George Adam Frey, who enlisted September 3, 1861, and was honorably discharged July 10, 1865, and died August, 1875, from disease contracted in the service and in line of duty. The claim was rejected in the Pension Office on the ground that when the records of the Southern army in and about Andersonville were captured it appeared that a person by the name of Adam Frey had enlisted in said army in January, 1865, and it was supposed that it was this soldier.

While there is no proof of that fact, it is in evidence that this soldier was wounded in battle while in the Union Army, and that he was afterwards captured in 1861, and was for many months in Andersonville prison, where he was taken sick with chronic diarrhea, and a comrade who was there with him at the time testifies in the record that he told him, the soldier, that if he did not get out of prison he would die, and that it was his opinion he would die at any event.

There is no evidence how he got out of prison, but he joined his regiment in June, 1865, and was honorably discharged July 10, 1865, and there can be no question from the testimony that the soldier continued sick and endured great suffering of this disease until he died of the same. There is no testimony in the record that identified this soldier as the one mentioned in the records of the rebel army as Adam Frey, but it is wholly left to inference, and the committee think that it is at least due to the memory of the soldier and his family that there should be some testimony more than a mere supposition or probability that this was the same person mentioned in this rebel army record.

This man served nearly four years; was a very stout man; was wounded in battle; was taken prisoner and placed in Andersonville prison, where he remained for many months, and finally contracted the disease of which he died. The writer of this report is acquainted personally with the claimant in this case, and knows of his own knowledge that this woman supported herself and the infant children of this soldier, after the soldier's death, at the wash-tub, at 50 cents per day; and that she is now well advanced in age, and unable to labor as she once did, and in the ordinary course of events can not live long.

In view of the facts of this case, we respectfully submit that this widow should be placed on the pension-roll, and therefore recommend that the bill do pass.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

HENRY STUMPF.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 6863) granting a pension to Henry Stumpf.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Henry Stumpf, late a private in Company F, Fifteenth Regiment of Missouri Volunteers.

The report (by Mr. LANE) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6863) granting a pension to Henry Stumpf, submit the following report:

The soldier enlisted June 26, 1861, and was discharged September 21, 1864. It is in evidence in the record that at Stone River, Tennessee, December 31, 1862, while in battle the soldier received a gunshot wound in the head, which has disabled him from the performance of mental and physical labor, and is rated at one-half total disability. The claim was rejected in the Pension Department for the reason that there was no record of the disability and the claimant was unable to furnish the testimony of comrades who knew of the incurrence of the disability.

There is no question that when this soldier entered the service he was a sound and healthy man, and after the battle mentioned he was injured in the head by gunshot wound. The soldier states that he was shot in less than fifteen minutes after the battle began and that he is not able to name or find any person who saw him when injured. From the facts of the case this committee has no doubt of these statements.

The high character of the soldier is fully proven by affidavits filed with the committee and on file in the record, and that he has been a great sufferer for many years, and is now of unsound mind at times because of this injury; he is now about fifty-five years of age, married, and very poor.

The gentleman who introduced this bill informs the committee that the soldier's wife is compelled to take in washing in order to support the soldier and their children.

We therefore recommend that the bill do pass.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

THOMAS N. MAXWELL.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 4532) for the relief of Thomas N. Maxwell.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll the name of Thomas N. Maxwell, late of Company I, Ninety-eighth Illinois Infantry, at the rate of $50 per month, in lieu of the pension he is now receiving.

The report (by Mr. LANE) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4532) granting an increase of pension to Thomas N. Maxwell, submit the following report:

Thomas N. Maxwell was a private in Company I, Ninety-eighth Illinois Volunteers, and is drawing a pension at the rate of $10 a month, commencing May 22, 1890, for injury to testicles and resulting varicocele of left side. From the evidence on file this sum is wholly inadequate to the soldier's disability and it seems that the Commissioner of Pensions can not grant him any greater relief.

Affidavits have been filed by A. N. Walker, Thomas J. Fithian, H. K. Powell, George W. Fithian, W. L. Bridges, Jacob Eck, John Hawk, Charles H. Smith, C. W. Marsh, S. W. Clark, and Robb Ross, all neighbors of the said Thomas N. Maxwell, that the said Thomas N. Maxwell's physical condition is such as to render him totally unable to perform manual labor of any kind.

Affidavits have recently been filed by Drs. C. Booker, J. H. Maxwell, and Z. Allen, and comrades T. C. Dodd, Arch Poor, and others, that said Thomas N. Maxwell is now and for some time has been wholly confined to his bed by reason of his disability, and that he is in such condition that he constantly requires an attendant to care for him.

In the opinion of this committee this is a case that so strongly appeals to the generosity of this nation that it would be a great wrong and injustice to refuse the relief asked for in this bill. We therefore recommend that the bill do pass.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. MORRILL. I move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. MORROW having resumed the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. ALLEN, of Michigan, reported that the Committee of the Whole House, having had under consideration the Private Calendar, had directed him to report sundry pension bills, some with and some without amendments, with the direction that they be passed as reported.

BILLS PASSED.

House bills of the following titles, reported from the Committee of the Whole without amendment, were severally considered, ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, they were accordingly read the third time, and passed, namely:

- A bill (H. R. 4527) granting a pension to Daniel M. Dull, late a soldier of the Mexican war;
- A bill (H. R. 2435) increasing the pension of Mary Minor Hoxey;
- A bill (H. R. 2175) granting a pension to Mrs. Elizabeth Burress;
- A bill (H. R. 2168) granting an increase of pension to Stewart Herbert;
- A bill (H. R. 1471) granting a pension to Laura A. Yourtee; and
- A bill (H. R. 2131) granting a pension to Gustavus Alonzo Draper.

Senate bills of the following titles, reported from the Committee of the Whole, were severally considered, ordered to a third reading; and being read the third time, were passed, namely:

- A bill (S. 801) granting a pension to Miss Elizabeth A. Tuttle;
- A bill (S. 806) granting a pension to Cyrus Tuttle;
- A bill (S. 807) granting a pension to Mary E. Noll, widow of Philip Noll;
- A bill (S. 810) granting a pension to Eliza A. Talbott; and
- A bill (S. 813) granting a pension to Stephen Schiedel.

LUCY HALE.

The next bill reported from the Committee of the Whole with amendments was the bill (H. R. 2423) granting a pension to Lucy Hale.

Mr. TURNER, of New York. I ask a separate vote on that bill. I do not think it ought to pass, in its present form, at least.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The first question is on agreeing to the amendments reported from the Committee of the Whole.

The amendments were adopted.

Mr. KILGORE. I would like to know what merit there is in that bill. It does not say how old the beneficiary is.

Mr. O'DONNELL. I can tell the gentleman she is sixty-seven years old.

Mr. KILGORE. Married?

Mr. O'DONNELL. No, sir; a widow.

Mr. KILGORE. The provision of the bill is such that if she marries the pension will still continue during her natural life, as the bill now provides.

Mr. COLEMAN. Does the gentleman think there is much chance of a lady who is sixty-seven years old getting married?

Mr. KILGORE. Oh, well, they never get too old for that. [Laughter.]

Mr. O'DONNELL. I can say to the gentleman from Texas that her father was a soldier in the Revolutionary war, and she cared for him in the latter part of his life, when he was blind. It is not likely that she will be married again.

Mr. KILGORE. But there may be some fellow "laying around" for that pension right now. [Laughter.] I will not make objection, but I think this is going pretty far. You ought to strike out that portion of the bill giving it to her during her natural life.

Mr. O'DONNELL. Do you want it given to her for her unnatural life?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill as amended.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. MORRILL moved to reconsider the several votes taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

GENERAL HORACE BOUGHTON.

The next business reported from the Committee of the Whole was the bill (H. R. 3954) granting a pension to General Horace Boughton, with favorable recommendation.

Mr. BAKER. I ask unanimous consent that this bill be considered, the previous question ordered upon its passage, and made the special order for next Monday morning immediately after the reading of the Journal, debate for fifteen minutes on each side.

Mr. KILGORE. The gentleman does not state the whole agreement in the committee. The understanding was that it shall be made the special order for Monday, the previous question being ordered upon its passage, and that fifteen minutes' debate shall be allowed on each side, with the privilege of amendment.

Mr. BAKER. Certainly.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. In the absence of objection that order will be made.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BOOTHMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to discharge the Committee of the Whole from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 3983) granting a pension to Daniel Sterling, and put it upon its passage.

Mr. MORRILL. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. BOOTHMAN. I hope the gentleman will yield for a moment. I was here on the last evening and was the last man on the list.

Mr. MORRILL. The bill of the gentleman can be easily reached on next Friday evening, and it is now half past 10 o'clock.

Mr. BOOTHMAN. Two or three minutes remain yet, and it will take but a short time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman insist on his motion?

Mr. MORRILL. I do.

Mr. LANE. I demand the regular order.

The motion of Mr. MORRILL was agreed to; and (at 10 o'clock and 29 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

Under the rule, the following executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows, namely:

IMPROVEMENT OF CYPRESS BAYOU, LOUISIANA.

Letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Chief Engineer, report in relation to the improvement of Cypress Bayou, Louisiana, in reply to resolutions of the House of Representatives of February 6—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

RIGHT OF WAY ACROSS ST. AUGUSTINE MILITARY RESERVATION.

Letter from the Secretary of War, returning the bill (H. R. 5972) granting to the Jacksonville, St. Augustine and Halifax Railway a right of way across the United States military reservation at St. Augustine, Fla., with report of Chief of Engineers expressing the views of the Department and maps—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

MARY E. METTE, ADMINISTRATRIX, VS. THE UNITED STATES.

Letter from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a copy of the findings of the court in the case of Mary E. Mette, administratrix of H. H. Mette, vs. The United States—to the Committee on War Claims.

SENATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following Senate bills and concurrent resolution were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

The bill (S. 606) to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building thereon at La Fayette, in the State of Indiana—to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, March 8, 1890.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

CO-OPERATION WITH MEXICO IN PURSUING HOSTILE INDIANS.

Mr. MCCREARY. I desire to make a privileged report from the Committee on Foreign Affairs. I am directed by that committee to report the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk, and request that it be adopted.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the President be requested to communicate to the House of Representatives, if in his opinion it is not incompatible with the public interest, any correspondence with the Mexican Government in regard to the employment in the regular Army of the United States of Indian scouts for the purpose of pursuing hostile Indians in their raids in the territory of the United States and of Mexico, and in regard to the proposed transfer of the Apache Chiricahua Indians from Mount Vernon Barracks, Alabama, to Fort Sill, Ind. T.

The Committee on Foreign Affairs, to whom was referred the resolution requesting the President of the United States of America to communicate to the House of Representatives, if in his opinion it is not incompatible with the public interest, any correspondence with the Mexican Government in regard to the employment in the regular Army of the United States of Indian scouts for the purpose of pursuing hostile Indians in their raids in the territories of the United States and in Mexico, and in regard to the proposed transfer of the Apache Chiricahua Indians from Mount Vernon Barracks, Alabama, to Fort Sill, Ind. T., have had the same under consideration, and report it to the House of Representatives and recommend that the resolution be adopted.

The SPEAKER. The question is upon the adoption of the resolution.

The resolution was adopted.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT LANSING, MICH.

Mr. BREWER. On Thursday last the House passed the bill (S. 306) for the erection of a public building in the city of Lansing, in the State of Michigan. The bill (H. R. 6943) for the same purpose has been reported and is upon the Calendar. I ask unanimous consent that it be laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

There was no objection.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, on motion of Mr. BREWER, leave of absence was granted to Mr. ALLEN, of Michigan, for this day.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The morning hour begins at sixteen minutes after 12.

Mr. DINGLEY. On Thursday last I asked unanimous consent—

The SPEAKER. The morning hour has commenced, and unanimous consent can not be asked in that hour; but without objection the Chair will hear the gentleman.

Mr. DINGLEY. I simply desire to ask that, as the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries was passed on Thursday in the absence of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS], on account of sickness, and its time taken by another committee, it may be allowed to retain its place in the call of committees without prejudice.

Mr. CUMMINGS. I object.

Mr. DINGLEY. I think if the gentleman from New York understood that this request was made on account of the absence of the gentleman from Illinois on account of sickness he would not object.

Mr. CUMMINGS. I object, Mr. Speaker.

COMPULSORY ATTENDANCE OF WITNESSES BEFORE LAND OFFICERS.

The SPEAKER. The bill before the House is the bill (H. R. 7216) providing for the compulsory attendance of witnesses before registers and receivers of land offices; and the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. COBB], having offered an amendment, is recognized.

[Mr. COBB withholds his remarks for revision. See Appendix.]

Mr. COBB. Mr. Speaker, I propose now, as I said in the outset, to withdraw my pending amendment, and to offer in lieu of it the one I send to the desk.

The Clerk read the amendment, as follows:

Amend by striking out all of section 3 down to the word "provided," in the ninth line, and inserting the following:

"That any person willfully neglecting or refusing obedience to such subpoena, or neglecting or refusing to appear and testify when subpoenaed, his fees having been paid if demanded, shall be proceeded against as follows: The register or receiver shall, if required so to do by the party in whose behalf the witness is summoned, return the original subpoena and the affidavit of the person who executed the same, together with a statement from such register or receiver that the witness failed to obey the subpoena, to the district court of the United States; which court shall, on motion by said party who caused the subpoena to issue, cause a conditional judgment in the sum of $100 to be entered against said defaulting witness; which judgment may be made absolute, in whole or in part, if said witness fails, on notice issuing from said court and served upon him at least ten days previous to final hearing, to make sufficient excuse, either in person or by evidence deemed satisfactory by the court. Said conditional and final judgment shall be in the name of the United States and the recovery shall be disposed of as a fine collected in said court."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PAYSON. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question upon the engrossment and third reading of the bill as amended.

Mr. COBB. I ask the gentleman to withhold that for a moment. I want to offer an amendment to the third section which I presume the gentleman will accept.

Mr. PAYSON. What is it, in substance?

Mr. COBB. It is, in substance, providing for depositions where the party lives out of the county or is a female.

Mr. PAYSON. I have no objection to that. That may be inserted by unanimous consent. Then I demand the previous question, Mr. Speaker.

The previous question was ordered.

Mr. LIND. Mr. Speaker, I desire to offer an amendment, which I send to the desk.

The amendment was read, as follows:

In section 3, strike out all after the word "act" in the twelfth line, being the second proviso in the section.

Mr. LIND. I do not desire, Mr. Speaker—

The SPEAKER. The previous question has been ordered. The question is upon agreeing to the amendment of the gentleman from Minnesota.

A MEMBER. Let the proviso proposed to be stricken out be read.

The proviso was read, as follows:

Provided further, That in case any party to a contest shall be unable to pay witness fees and shall make and file with the register or receiver an affidavit that he is unable to pay said fees and that he has a meritorious cause, and set forth in said affidavit what he can prove by said witnesses, if the register or receiver shall believe and so certify that the testimony so set forth is material to the issue, said witnesses shall be subpoenaed and attend without first having their pay, and in such case the subpoena issued shall state that the witness is required to attend without prepayment of fees or mileage, and all the provisions of this act, for the attendance of witnesses, shall apply to said witnesses, and they shall receive certificate of attendance from the officer before whom he is subpoenaed, which certificate shall be a liability of the person at whose instance they were subpoenaed.

The question was taken on agreeing to the amendment; and the Speaker declared that the yeas seemed to have it.

Mr. LIND. I ask for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 70, noes 44.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. PAYSON moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is upon the passage of the bill.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, has not the hour expired?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it has not quite expired.

Mr. PAYSON. The indicator shows that the hour began at 12.17, and it is only fifteen minutes past 1.

The SPEAKER. The previous question is operating, which will carry the matter through.

The question was taken upon the passage of the bill; and the Speaker declared that the yeas seemed to have it.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I ask for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 81, noes 29.

So the bill was passed.

Mr. PAYSON moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table. The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. Sixty minutes of the morning hour having elapsed, in accordance with the order of the House it is now in order for the gentleman from Maine [Mr. MILLIKEN] to move to go into Committee of the Whole.

Mr. CLEMENTS. Mr. Speaker, I ask whether it is in order now to present a privileged report from the Committee on Appropriations. It will take but a moment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maine [Mr. MILLIKEN] has preference under the order of the House.

Mr. MILLIKEN. I move that the House now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the consideration of bills reported from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, Mr. PAYSON in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole for the consideration of bills reported from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds under the special order, and the gentleman from Maine [Mr. MILLIKEN] has the floor.

PUBLIC BUILDING, NEWARK, N. J.

Mr. MILLIKEN. I call up for consideration the bill (H. R. 7156) to provide for the increase of the limit of cost of site and public building at Newark, N. J.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act of Congress approved March 1, 1888, be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to authorize and direct the Secretary of the Treasury to acquire, by purchase or condemnation, such land as he may deem necessary in addition to the site of the custom-house and post-office building; to remove the present custom-house and post-office building, and to erect, in addition to the building known as the Church building, a suitable, commodious, and substantial building, including fire-proof vaults, heating and ventilating apparatus, elevators, and approaches, complete, for the use and accommodation of the United States custom-house, post-office, and other Government offices, in the city of Newark and State of New Jersey; and for said purposes the limit of cost of site and buildings be, and the same is hereby, increased from $350,000, fixed by act of Congress approved March 1, 1888, to $650,000; and that the sum of $300,000, in addition to the sum of $350,000 appropriated by act of Congress approved March 1, 1888, be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any moneys in the United States Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. HOLMAN. I rise to a question of order.

Mr. BLOUNT. I wish to reserve the point of order that this bill makes an appropriation of money.

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to know when that bill was introduced. I wish to raise a question of order that it makes an appropriation of money.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is advised that it was introduced on the 18th of December. For that bill the pending proposition was reported as a substitute.

Mr. HOLMAN. The Chair laid some stress on the time the bill was introduced; that perhaps it was introduced before the present rules were adopted.

Mr. MILLIKEN. If the gentleman will allow me I will move to amend the bill by striking out all of that portion of it against which the gentleman makes his point of order, commencing in line 20, and which is as follows:

and that the sum of $300,000, in addition to the sum of $350,000 appropriated by act of Congress approved March 1, 1888, be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any moneys in the United States Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The CHAIRMAN. By unanimous consent that can be done.

Mr. BLOUNT. I would be glad to take the Chair's ruling on the question of order.

The CHAIRMAN. If the motion of the gentleman from Maine prevails to strike out that portion of the bill on which the point of order is made, of course argument on that point would be unnecessary.

Mr. BLOUNT. But if the amendment should be voted down, then under the practice prevailing here it would be too late to make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order may be reserved, and if the amendment the gentleman proposes to make be voted down then the point of order can be made.

Mr. BLOUNT. The object I have, Mr. Chairman, is to get the ruling of the Chair on this point. I am not reasoning on the saving of the amount of money in this particular bill, but I think it proper that the practice in relation to this class of bills should be fixed.

Mr. MILLIKEN. If we can have a vote on that point of order now I will withdraw my amendment; but if that point of order is to be discussed for two or three hours, I prefer it should be discussed at some other time than that allotted to this bill.

Under the new rules the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds can not get in unless they have days set apart for them. When our committee is called we take up only bills on the Calendar of the House. The bills coming from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds have to be considered in the Committee of the Whole, and if we can save time I will agree, as I have already said, to strike out that portion of the bill making an appropriation. I do not object to the point of order being made if we can have the vote on it at once.

Mr. BLOUNT. Under the rules to which I refer the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds having the right to report at any time is another reason why we should discuss the questions of order when they come up, so we may ascertain the correct mode of procedure. I think my friend from Maine will save time if he will allow the point of order to be decided.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the proposition made by the gentleman from Maine it would still be in order to raise the point of order.

Mr. BLOUNT. I am not undertaking to determine whether the amount of appropriation is too large or too small. I am trying to ascertain what the rule is.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment strikes out the appropriation, and if agreed to it will strike from the bill that portion against which the point of order is made.

Mr. BLOUNT. I understand that. It is quite clear to me. What I am endeavoring to do is to get the ruling on the question of order raised by myself. The amendment may or it may not be adopted.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Let us have a ruling.

The CHAIRMAN. This is an important question, and if the Chair is called upon to decide it he desires the fullest opportunity should be given to discuss the question of order and at such length as gentlemen wish. The gentleman from Maine is recognized and will take such course as he may think proper.

Mr. BLOUNT. I have raised a question of order, which I insist is in order before the amendment of the gentleman from Maine.

Mr. DIBBLE. I ask whether it is not in order to concede the point of order for the purpose of facilitating business. I propose that the point of order be conceded. We consent that the section be struck out on the point of order.

Mr. BLOUNT. That would be a novel performance.

Mr. DIBBLE. There can be no possible objection, if we concede the point of order.

Mr. BLOUNT. I do not know whether the gentleman has the right to take from the Chair the duty of ruling upon the point. If the Chair thinks so, I am content.

The CHAIRMAN. The difficulty, under the suggestion made by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. DIBBLE], is that, while he may be willing to concede the point for himself, he can not do so for the Committee of the Whole or for the Chair.

Mr. BAYNE. I submit that the rules which we have adopted were intended to facilitate business. I submit, moreover, that when a bill is in charge of a committee and of the chairman of the committee and a point of order is raised against one feature of it, and the chairman of the committee in charge of the bill, representing that committee, is willing the provision against which the point of order is raised should be stricken from the bill—

The CHAIRMAN. But let the Chair interrupt the gentleman at this point to say, Suppose the majority of the Committee of the Whole should not be willing that the provision be stricken from the bill?

Mr. BAYNE. Then let a vote be taken. As the Chair suggested, the point of order might be reserved, and if the paragraph be not stricken from the bill the point of order can be discussed by the gentleman from Georgia and others.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia insists that he has the right to present the point of order at this time and have it argued and disposed of in a parliamentary way.

Mr. BAYNE. Notwithstanding the fact that the chairman of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds and the committee itself are willing that the provision against which the point of order is raised shall be stricken from the bill?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman think that the chairman of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds or that the committee itself can waive a point which the Committee of the Whole has the right to act on?

Mr. BAYNE. Undoubtedly not, but the Committee of the Whole can dispose of the proposition in the summary way now proposed and can eliminate this paragraph from the bill, thus obviating the waste of considerable time in the discussion of the point of order.

Mr. DIBBLE. I ask unanimous consent that the paragraph objected to be stricken out under the point of order.

Mr. BLOUNT. I object, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. BAYNE. Yes, there it is!

Mr. MILLIKEN. I ask a vote on my motion.

Mr. DIBBLE. Now, as no objection is made to striking out this paragraph—

The CHAIRMAN. But objection is made by the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. DIBBLE. The gentleman from Georgia can not object for this reason: that he is himself moving to strike out the paragraph on a point of order; therefore he can not object to its going out.

The CHAIRMAN. But the gentleman from South Carolina submits a request for unanimous consent; that request is submitted to the Committee of the Whole, and the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] objects. That ends the request of the gentleman from South Carolina.

Mr. DIBBLE. But the Chair will permit one remark. The gentleman from Georgia when he makes a point of order against this paragraph moves in effect that it shall go out of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. By the decision of the Chair. It is not a motion.

Mr. DIBBLE. It is not a motion; but the effect of it is to carry the paragraph out of the bill on a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. By the decision of the Chair.

Mr. DIBBLE. Now, when unanimous consent is asked that this paragraph go out of the bill on the point of order, unanimous consent is asked to accomplish the precise thing that the gentleman has undertaken to accomplish by his point of order, and he can not be on both sides of the same question at the same time.

A MEMBER. Oh, yes, he can.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is inclined to think that is a matter of personal consistency of which the gentleman from Georgia is entitled to be the sole judge. [Laughter.]

Mr. GEAR. Is it competent to move to strike out the paragraph?

The CHAIRMAN. It is when the bill has reached a stage which will allow that motion to be entertained. But the bill has been read for general debate only; it has not yet been read by paragraphs for amendment. The Chair expresses the wish that the gentleman from Georgia would allow the gentleman from Maine to take the course indicated; and, if the motion should not be sustained, all rights of the gentleman from Georgia will be reserved.

Mr. BLOUNT. I would like very much to accommodate the Chair personally; but I have an object in debating this question of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. BAYNE. I ask for the regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. The regular order is the point of order made by the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. BAYNE. Before the bill is read?

The CHAIRMAN. The bill has been read.

Mr. BAYNE. But before the bill has been read for consideration by paragraphs, is it competent to raise this point of order?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the point of order may be entertained now. In order that the Chair may be understood, the committee will please give attention, and the Chair would be glad to have the attention of the gentleman in charge of the bill.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Will the Chairman listen to me for one moment?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has been endeavoring to have the gentleman from Maine listen to him.

Mr. MILLIKEN. The suggestion I wish to make to the Chair, if I may be pardoned a moment, is that I understand this is a question of order raised by the gentleman from Georgia, and that the argument upon it is a matter within the discretion of the Chair as to duration.

The CHAIRMAN. Undoubtedly.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Now I move, if in order, to strike out the paragraph in order to save the time of the committee. I have nothing whatever to conceal—

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Maine that at present that motion is not in order, the bill not having reached the condition where the motion could be entertained.

The Chair wishes to state, and to be understood by the members of the committee when he states, that when the point of order was made against the bill on the last day when reports from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds were under consideration, it was submitted by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] and embodied precisely the same point that is now made by the gentleman from Georgia. At that time, however, the bill had been read, the general debate had been practically closed, and the gentleman from Maine in charge of the bill had been recognized to move to lay the bill aside with favorable recommendation. Then the point of order was submitted by the gentleman from Illinois, and the Chair held that in the parliamentary condition of the question then prevailing, whatever might have been the decision of the Chair if the point of order had been made at an earlier stage of the proceedings, the judgment of the Chair was that it then came too late. That was the decision of the Chair at that time and the extent of the decision only.

The point of order of the gentleman from Georgia, however, is now interposed when the bill is first presented for consideration; and, as it embraces a question of considerable importance, the Chair desires to hear the gentleman from Georgia and other gentlemen who may wish to submit their views upon the question. The gentleman from Georgia is recognized.

Mr. BLOUNT. It is not my purpose, Mr. Chairman, to exhaust the time allowed to the committee, nor do I think it necessary to occupy any considerable length of time in presenting the reasons why this point of order should, in my judgment, be sustained.

It is not by any means a new question here. It is a question of jurisdiction which has been raised between the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds and the Committee on Appropriations. It has been raised in former Congresses, and I raise it here because I believe it to be in the interest of the public service that it should be raised and decided by the Chair at the present time for the guidance of the House in future.

Under clause 3 of Rule XI the jurisdiction of the Committee on Appropriations is specifically defined. It provides that all subjects relating—to appropriation of the revenue for the support of the Government, as herein provided, namely, for legislative, executive, and judicial expenses; for sundry civil expenses; for fortifications and coast defenses; for the District of Columbia; for pensions; and for all deficiencies: to the Committee on Appropriations.

I need scarcely say to the present occupant of the chair that one of the features of the sundry civil appropriation bill specifically mentioned in this paragraph of the rule has always been a provision making appropriation for the construction of public buildings.

Clause 21 of this same rule provides for and defines the jurisdiction of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds:

That all proposed legislation relating to the public buildings and occupied or improved grounds of the United States, other than appropriations therefor, shall be referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

There is first a direct committal of jurisdiction and the creation of jurisdiction of the appropriations for public buildings and grounds to the Committee on Appropriations. Then there is a distinct denial to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds of the right to frame appropriation bills for public buildings. The language of the rule is clear and specific in both of these clauses, and I think there can be no question about the correctness of the statement I have made.

As I have said, it is not a new question to-day. It has been contended in prior Congresses that because the House had permitted a bill to go to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds providing for the construction of a building, and in addition thereto providing for an appropriation to pay the cost of construction, it gave to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds jurisdiction thereof.

I say, Mr. Chairman, that question was raised in a former House and every argument was urged in favor of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds; and the Chair has uniformly, so far as my present recollection goes, sustained the jurisdiction of the Committee on Appropriations as against the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds. The Chair will observe that it would be a difficult thing to keep a bill of this character from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, as a part of the subject-matter embraced in the bill belongs in the language of the rule to that committee, to wit, the authorization of the building itself. It is so in this case. A part of this bill embodies a subject which that committee has unquestionable jurisdiction of, and the Speaker rightly referred it there; but will the Chairman undertake to say that the mere reference of the bill under these circumstances indicates a purpose on the part of the House to do away with the rules of the House on this question and confer jurisdiction upon a different subject?

Again, sir, the importance of this subject demands that we give a proper construction to the rule. You have a Committee on Appropriations of this House and a system by which the appropriations are referred to that committee, a system originating in a wise and conservative purpose, that is, to submit to one committee of the House, as a general proposition, all matters of expenditure for this great Government. They are the guardians of the Treasury in that regard.

Mr. DIBBLE. Mr. Chairman, I submit that the gentleman is not speaking to the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is overruled.

Mr. BLOUNT. I am somewhere about there, as my friend from Texas sitting near me suggests.

That Committee on Appropriations is charged with the duty of admonishing the House of the condition of the Treasury and the amount of the appropriations that are proper. The jurisdiction of the Committee on Appropriations ought to be carefully guarded, more carefully guarded—that and the Committee on Ways and Means—than that of any other of the committees of this House, because they are charged with regulating the burden to be imposed on the people of the country. And when this rule was created and placed among the methods of procedure in this House, and when the policy has been pursued in prior Congresses, during a long series of years, by the same animating spirit, the present occupant of the chair appreciates too well its force to permit by inadvertence the whole policy of the House to be destroyed. Why, sir, are you bound, in directing the proceedings of this House, by a flimsy technicality, or will you with strong hand hold the committees of this House to the jurisdiction assigned by the rules of the House? I do not care, sir, to occupy further the time of the House. If it were a new question I might ask to be heard further upon it.

The CHAIRMAN. Before the gentleman from Georgia concludes the Chair desires to hear from the gentleman his opinion, and the reason therefor, as to where the bill should have been referred when it was first introduced.

Mr. BLOUNT. This bill, one part of it, the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds has jurisdiction of, and one part only, to wit, the authorization of a public building. The Committee on Appropriations has jurisdiction after that authorization is made—

Mr. DINGLEY. If the gentleman from Georgia will pardon me a moment, does the gentleman mean to say that a bill could be divided, one-half part committed to one committee and the other half to another? I understand that is a point that has been decided in the House frequently, that a bill can not be divided, but must be referred either to one committee or the other as a whole.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Would not that then make the reference of a bill depend upon the will of each individual member? By putting in separate clauses he would obtain jurisdiction for a committee which would not otherwise have jurisdiction. For instance, the Committee on Ways and Means might get jurisdiction of an appropriation and the Committee on Appropriations of a question of taxation.

Mr. DINGLEY. It would be impracticable to divide a bill which was pending before the House for reference. Must it not be referred as an entirety?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. If I understand the position of the gentleman from Maine, then his question would lead to this result: That simply so much of the bill as is lawfully within the jurisdiction of a committee is referred to that committee and so much of it as refers to or comes within the jurisdiction of another committee should go to another committee, and those portions of the bill of which the committee has not jurisdiction could not be taken consideration of by that committee.

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Chairman, I believe I have the floor.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I beg the gentleman's pardon; I did not know that he desired to retain the floor.

Mr. BLOUNT. The gentleman from Maine, knowing that the declaration of this House in its rules is that the Committee on Appropriations shall have jurisdiction of questions relating to public buildings and that the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds shall have jurisdiction only of matters relating to the authorization of buildings, would have a response from me that, notwithstanding these rules, the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, because the gentlemen saw fit to couple one matter within the jurisdiction of that committee to another not within the jurisdiction of the committee, would thereby have conferred upon it jurisdiction which it had not under the rules.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia will pardon the Chair for suggesting a question. If a bill is introduced, say in the precise form of this one, involving a proposition for the erection of a building and making appropriation to pay for it, it being introduced by a member under his right, in the judgment of the gentleman, where should that bill be referred under the rule?

Mr. BLOUNT. I would unhesitatingly say that it ought to be referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and for two reasons.

The CHAIRMAN. That much of it?

Mr. BLOUNT. Certainly. I want—

The CHAIRMAN. Then, if it may be properly—

Mr. BLOUNT. If the Chair will allow me. I want to say that part of it which relates to the authorization of a public building ought to be referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and that part containing the appropriation belongs to no committee of this House. Then, if that properly were referred to the Committee on Appropriations in anticipation of the law, if reported upon by that committee, it would be subject to a point of order, even if referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The CHAIRMAN. Then, does the gentleman from Georgia think that a bill proposing to make an appropriation for a public building in contemplation of legislation for its erection can not be introduced and referred in any event?

Mr. BLOUNT. I do not say that it can not be introduced and referred, because the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds would have jurisdiction of it; but the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds has not jurisdiction of the question of appropriation, because it is expressly denied to it by the House.

The CHAIRMAN. Suppose the House should send it there, then what?

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Chairman, if the House should by inadvertence send a bill to that committee what has that committee to do? What has it done in the past? The House has trusted the committee to send it back. What is the plan now? You have provided that in three days a member of any committee may get up and have the reference corrected. You have directed the method of getting at it. The introduction and reference of a bill do not give jurisdiction; the power of correction is left, and it may be made at any time within the limit of the rule; but the provision of a mode of correcting a reference to the committee rightfully having jurisdiction does not repeal the rule conferring jurisdiction upon the committee where there has been no purpose manifested to give that committee jurisdiction of it. But, Mr. Chairman, this is not a new question. It has been in every Congress in which I have had the honor to serve from the Forty-fourth on down until now; and for sixteen years, so far as I have been able to observe, the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole has invariably given the construction that the mere reference of a bill to a wrong committee did not give that committee jurisdiction of it.

When the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds had a bill referred to it, containing an appropriation for a building, it has on a question of order been the practice to rule it out. So that we are not left in the construction of this language to the literal terms of it. If there was a desire to adopt that, and while an exact construction of it pointed in that way, this language will be construed in the light of the precedents and of the course of the House for all time past.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will be glad if the gentleman from Georgia would state an instance in the line he has suggested. The Chair was unable last night to find any in the line that the gentleman suggests.

Mr. BLOUNT. I can not just now cite any. I was not expecting to have to cite any instances of the kind; but the chairman of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds during the last Congress knows the proceedings on this question. I had not expected to have anything to say or to have any occasion to bring these cases to the attention of the House.

Mr. DIBBLE. I would like to ask my friend one question.

Mr. BLOUNT. Certainly.

Mr. DIBBLE. During the Fiftieth Congress the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. COWLES] moved a reference of a revenue bill for the repeal of the tobacco tax to the Committee on Appropriations. Under the rules it unmistakably would go to the Committee on Ways and Means. Now, do I understand when the House had referred that bill—a revenue bill—to the Committee on Appropriations it is the opinion of my friend that the Committee on Appropriations could not report it because it would be obnoxious to a point of order?

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Chairman, the case there cited by my friend is very far off. There was a distinct issue made in this House in a most aggressive form. The manifestation was a clean, clear, and unmistakable purpose of the House; and it was so referred. The matter of appropriations for public buildings was never brought to the attention of this House, and it only develops when these bills are being read here to-day. And I say, if the Chair takes the rules and the spirit of the rules as the mode of procedure by the House, and being bound to execute them in letter and spirit, for the purpose of carrying out the intention of the House, the Chair will not rule because of this sort of reference—this unconscious reference of this matter to a committee—as he would where the distinct issue had been raised. So that I think the illustration of my friend is very far off.

I think he would have been much more apt if, instead of going off to that question in which high feeling was evidenced, he had followed his own history in debate on jurisdiction of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds and cited as instances from that.

Mr. Chairman, I do not care to occupy further time. This is all I expect to have to say about these public buildings, and it is for this House to determine for itself whether it shall lay the bars down and make the appropriations in all of these bills, ignoring the check and restraints made by their reference to the Committee on Appropriations, and recklessly and carelessly and unprecedentedly vote money out of the public Treasury.

Mr. DINGLEY. I wish simply to remind the gentleman from Georgia and the Chair that this point has been repeatedly decided, and decided to this effect: that whatever the House or the organ of the House may refer to a committee the committee thereby obtains jurisdiction. The last ruling on this point was by Speaker CARLISLE on the 29th of February, 1884. The Committee on Military Affairs reported a bill, as a substitute for another bill, granting a pension to General Pleasanton. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BAYNE] made the point of order that the Committee on Military Affairs had not jurisdiction of the subject of pensions; whereupon the Speaker [Mr. CARLISLE] ruled:

The Speaker overruled the point of order on the ground that it was competent for the House to refer a bill to any committee that it pleased, and the committee thereby obtained jurisdiction of the matter.

I have nothing further to say.

Mr. BURROWS. I would like to ask the gentleman a question on this point. There can be no doubt of the power of the House at any time to refer a bill to whatever committee it may deem proper. But under our present rules bills are not referred in any public manner; the House knows nothing about the reference unless members take occasion to look over the RECORD. Now suppose this bill providing for the erection of a public building, referred as it was, had contained a provision on the subject of taxation, a provision for raising revenue by the imposition of duties on imported articles, would the gentleman contend that the bill having gone to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds there would be no way of avoiding the consideration of the question of taxation on that bill? Would not a point of order lie against it?

Mr. DINGLEY. It has been decided otherwise. And I may say, in reference to the gentleman's suggestion, that under our new rules the act of the Speaker in referring a bill is the act of the House. Whatever power the House had in that direction is now given to the Speaker.

Mr. BURROWS. My friend will allow me just one other word. Rule XI of our new code provides:

All proposed legislation shall be referred to the committees named in the preceding rule as follows, namely: Subjects relating—

To the public buildings and occupied and improved grounds of the United States, other than appropriations therefor: to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. DINGLEY. Precisely.

Mr. BURROWS. The question of appropriations for these purposes is expressly excluded.

Mr. DINGLEY. But at the same time the gentleman will remember that in the last Congress, notwithstanding our rules specifically provided that revenue bills should be referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, a bill relating to internal revenue was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and that committee thereby obtained jurisdiction of it.

Mr. BURROWS. Yes, sir.

Mr. DINGLEY. Now, the Speaker in referring bills acts as the organ of the House; whatever he may do is the act of the House. But I am informed that the bill now under consideration was referred by the House.

Mr. LEHLBACH. It was referred December 18, 1889, before the adoption of the new rules.

Mr. BLOUNT. Whether the Speaker referred this bill or whether the House referred it—

Mr. DINGLEY. I understand that the bill was referred by the House.

Mr. BLOUNT. Whether the Speaker referred it or whether the House referred it, is there anything in the proceeding indicating any purpose on the part of the House or the Speaker to make any reference of this bill other than that provided in the rules?

Mr. DINGLEY. But if there had been a mistake in the reference, there is a method of correction provided by the rules, and that method of correction was not availed of for the purpose of changing in any manner the reference of this bill. Now, this is a question which has been repeatedly decided.

Mr. BURROWS. I did not quite comprehend the answer of my friend from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY] to my question. Suppose there had been in this bill a section proposing to raise the amount necessary for the construction of this building by imposing an additional duty upon imported articles. Does the gentleman claim that we would now be obliged to go on with a consideration of that question upon this bill and that a point of order would not lie?

Mr. DINGLEY. I make no statement with respect to anything that might arise in that way. I simply say that this bill is in the same position as though it had been referred by the House; and I understand the bill was in fact so referred; and it has been repeatedly held and is established as a matter of precedent that when a bill has been referred to a committee and no steps are taken for a correction of the reference—of course in regard to such a matter as that suggested by my friend from Michigan steps would undoubtedly be taken to make a correction, either by the committee which had received the bill or by the committee which claimed jurisdiction of that portion of the bill—but I am referring to the decision of this simple question, and I say that when the House has referred a bill to any committee, whatever may be contained in that bill, the committee obtains jurisdiction of it unless there shall be a correction of the reference. That principle has been repeatedly affirmed in the House. I have here the opinion of Mr. CARLISLE on this precise subject.

Mr. BURROWS. I have no doubt that where the House refers a bill the rule is as the gentleman from Maine states.

Mr. BOUTELLE. This bill was referred by the House on the 18th of December.

Mr. BURROWS. I understood the gentleman to say that it was referred by the Speaker.

Mr. BOUTELLE. It could not have been; our present rules were not adopted at that time.

Mr. CANNON. I desire to ask my friend from Maine a question. Here is a bill authorizing the construction of a public building—in other words, a bill containing legislation. By virtue of the clause of the rules which has been referred to, clause 21 of Rule XI, this bill goes to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. DINGLEY. That is, the Speaker, as the organ of the House, refers it there.

Mr. CANNON. Well, I do not see that there is any difference between the Speaker referring it and the House referring it.

Mr. DINGLEY. No; there is no difference.

Mr. CANNON. Now, under clause 3 of the same rule this bill, which appropriates $350,000, would go to the Committee on Appropriations. I ask the gentleman, could this bill be referred to both committees?

Mr. DINGLEY. It could not. The bill must be referred as an entirety to some one committee. That has been repeatedly decided.

Mr. CANNON. Then, that being the case, I ask the gentleman whether it is not true that a motion made by direction of the Committee on Appropriations under the rule would take this bill from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds and refer it to the Committee on Appropriations because it contains a provision which, under the rules, would give the Committee on Appropriations jurisdiction?

Mr. DINGLEY. If the House should by vote change the reference of the bill to the Committee on Appropriations, that action, under the repeated decisions which have been made upon this question, would, as to that particular bill, give the Committee on Appropriations jurisdiction.

Mr. CANNON. Precisely. I now understand the gentleman's position. So that, according to the gentleman, it is in the power of any member of this House, by putting into a bill different propositions which should go to different committees, to give any committee of the fifty-one jurisdiction of the measure by having the bill referred to that committee.

Mr. DINGLEY. It is undoubtedly in the power of the House to refer any bill containing any subject-matter to any committee that the House may choose. That has been repeatedly held. The reference of a bill is a matter for the House to determine.

Mr. KERR, of Iowa. I wish to ask the gentleman whether there is anything in the third clause of Rule XI defining the jurisdiction of the Committee on Appropriations that requires any such bill as this to go to that committee.

Mr. DINGLEY. Only a usage, that is all. And I may say with reference to this whole question that it is not an uncommon thing for almost every committee of the House to report occasionally a bill authorizing a particular thing to be done, and then to include in the bill itself an appropriation for the object. So that if the House has given jurisdiction in this case there can be no question of the right of the committee to take it. The question whether a particular matter shall be referred to one committee or another is simply a question of convenience and orderly proceeding. The rules provide in this case a method of orderly proceeding, and the intention always is to refer measures in accordance with the rule. But it frequently happens that a single bill contains subject-matter a part of which may appropriately go to one committee and a part to another, and the general rule is in such cases to refer the bill to that committee which has jurisdiction of the subject which seems to be the predominant or main subject in the bill.

Gentlemen understand very well that there have been in the House bills containing provisions some of which would appropriately go to the Committee on Banking and Currency and some to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures; and the question has in such cases frequently been submitted by the Speaker to the House whether the bill should be sent to one committee or the other. It is entirely competent for the House to determine where it will send any bill. In this particular case, the House having sent the bill to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, that committee, under the invariable practice, has obtained jurisdiction as a matter of order. As to the question of the abstract propriety of the reference, that should have been raised, if any member desired to raise it, at the beginning; but there never was any step taken toward a correction of the reference.

Mr. CLEMENTS. I wish to inquire whether this bill was sent to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds by a vote of the House.

Mr. DINGLEY. It was, I understand. But it would make no difference whether the reference was by the House or by the Speaker, the Speaker being, in reference to this matter, the organ of the House. But I understand that this particular bill was referred by a vote of the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will allow the Chair to say that his last statement is not quite correct. This bill was introduced on the 18th of December, in open House, read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, but not by a formal vote of the House.

Mr. DINGLEY. I understand that, but it was the act of the House; it was done in the presence of the House.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Let us have a ruling.

Mr. DOCKERY. In view of the fact that the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds has only one day remaining—

Mr. BOUTELLE. Only half a day now.

Mr. DOCKERY. Very well. As the time of the committee is so limited, I shall not trespass upon it or the patience of the House at any great length.

Mr. Chairman, it does seem to me that there is no occasion for any unusual construction of the rule, for, in my judgment, the rule construes itself by the mere statement of its terms. The question involved is solely a question of jurisdiction. The Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds can not possibly exercise jurisdiction over appropriations unless the authority be given by the language of the rule or by a direct vote of the House, and, so far as I am advised, this view has not heretofore been seriously called in question.

It is not denied that the House has the power to make any reference of a bill that it may desire, regardless of the express terms of the rule, but this action is taken on a motion after discussion and a thorough understanding of the text of the bill. The reference of the bill proposing a repeal of the tobacco tax to the Committee on Appropriations during the last Congress was thus made, and, of course, gave that committee full jurisdiction despite the rule requiring such propositions to be referred to the Committee on Ways and Means.

The CHAIRMAN. On that point will the gentleman from Missouri be kind enough to advise the Chair as to what the difference is in practice between the reference of a bill by a direct vote of the House and a reference such as there appears to have been in this case, in accordance with the former practice, because the new rules had not then been adopted? In this case the bill was read a first and second time by its title and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds in open House, and with the acquiescence of the House, but without a direct vote.

Mr. DOCKERY. Why, Mr. Chairman, the difference is material. In the one case the House acts advisedly in thus suspending the rule; in the other, the reference is made upon the reading of the title, and is, in fact, pro forma, with the full purpose, however, of maintaining the integrity of the rules.

Now, Mr. Chairman, when this bill was referred I venture to say that as a matter of fact no gentleman on this floor, including the Speaker, knew that bill carried an appropriation, because the title failed to make any reference to the fact, and the Speaker therefore properly referred it to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds. Indeed, sir, such reference should have been made even though the title revealed the presence of an appropriation, for legislation must precede appropriation.

The CHAIRMAN. The title of the bill is "to provide for the increase of the limit and cost of site of public building at Newark, N. J."

Mr. DOCKERY. The reading of the title verifies my statement. In other words, the bill provided for legislation, and, as the Committee on Appropriations had no authority to report legislation, the bill was properly referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds. Of course the House can, as heretofore stated, by a formal vote on a question of reference, suspend its rules, but in this case no such action was taken, and we must therefore look to the language of the rule to determine the question of jurisdiction.

What does the rule say, Mr. Chairman? The answer is plain and its meaning unmistakable. The rule provides that:

Subjects relating to the public buildings and occupied or improved grounds of the United States, other than appropriations therefor, shall be referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Now, then, Mr. Chairman, if you can not refer "subjects relating to appropriations" to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, how is it possible for that committee to lawfully report appropriations for public buildings?

This rule is binding upon the House and upon its presiding officer, and should be strictly construed, especially in view of the fact that under the new rules the House is practically without power to correct an improper reference until the question is presented on the report of a committee.

The point of order presented by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] raises the question of jurisdiction, so that the rule may be preserved in its integrity.

I have no desire to express any opinion on the policy involved in this new departure, but leave that for the consideration of gentlemen on the other side. My plea is for such a construction of the rules as will secure the orderly disposition and consideration of legislation. In the absence of definite action by the House the only safe guide for the Chair and the members on this question is the plain terms of the rule which declares that appropriations for public buildings shall not be referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds. The point of order if sustained will simply operate to correct an improper reference.

Mr. BOUTELLE. It is too late to make that point now.

The CHAIRMAN. Before the gentleman from Missouri takes his seat, the Chair would like to have his opinion as to that mode of reference.

Mr. DOCKERY. When was it?

The CHAIRMAN. December 18.

Mr. DOCKERY. That was before the new rules were adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. But rules were then adopted for this purpose.

Mr. DOCKERY. The bill was referred under the practice which obtained under the old rules.

The CHAIRMAN. The bill was read a first and second time by its title, and then it was referred. The Chair asks the gentleman from Missouri whether in his judgment that was the action of the House or simply action by the Speaker?

Mr. DOCKERY. I do not think it was action by the House in such a sense that an improper reference would give jurisdiction.

The CHAIRMAN. The Speaker had no power to make a reference under the rule.

Mr. DOCKERY. If the Chair holds that view—

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not hold any view.

Mr. DOCKERY. If the Chair is inclined to hold that view he will see at once the point made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] a moment ago, that the effect of such a construction of the rule would be to give the right to any member on the floor of the House to nullify the rules of the House.

Such a construction makes the title of a bill conclusive as to its contents, and it matters not how misleading it may be, the reference would confer jurisdiction despite the plain language of the rule. It can not be that the rules contemplate such a flexibility of construction as would give to the Public Buildings Committee the power of appropriation, not as a result of deliberate judgment, but by error, the result of a misleading title to a bill. I sincerely hope that the Chair will hold the point of order to be well grounded, for the contrary view, in my opinion, will lead to much confusion and involve frequent controversies on the floor, growing out of the question of jurisdiction.

Mr. BYNUM. I will occupy the time of the committee but for a moment. I take it, Mr. Chairman, that this bill was referred by the Speaker under the rules and in accordance with the rules. Of course jurisdiction could only be conferred in accordance with the rules. Now it is quite different where a bill is referred by action of the House. The ruling of the Speaker has always been that it is within the power of the House to refer a bill to any committee, notwithstanding the rule conferring jurisdiction of the subject-matter on a particular committee.

A MEMBER. The House had the power to change it.

Mr. BYNUM. It is in the power of the House by affirmative action, by a vote of the House, to refer a bill to any committee. In short, the bill is referred, notwithstanding the rule of the House, but where it is presented in a regular way and in a regular course of proceeding it is referred by the Speaker under the rules of the House.

In the one case it is referred outside of the rules of the House, by the House itself, and in the other case it is referred by the Speaker of the House in accordance with the rules. Now, the question is, which is the proper reference? Unquestionably the Speaker had no power to refer this bill to the Committee on Ways and Means, for it is a bill providing for the erection of a public building. By that reference, with this provision embraced in the bill to make the appropriation, it did not confer jurisdiction on the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds to make the appropriation. Here is a bill therefore appropriately referred in one sense and improperly referred in another sense, the jurisdiction of the committee, so far as the passage of a law for the construction of the public building is concerned, being unquestioned, and the reference of that portion of the bill to that committee no one will question; but in the same bill was and is embraced another and a distinct proposition, namely, making an appropriation for the construction of a building of which this committee had no jurisdiction whatever.

Could that committee have come into the House and stated that there was an improper reference of the bill and ask that the bill be otherwise referred? Unquestionably not, because they had jurisdiction of that portion of the bill providing for the erection of a building and were the only committee that could have jurisdiction of that portion of the bill. But when the bill is brought back and taken up for consideration and the question of order is raised that it was improperly referred, because of the fact that it contained an appropriation, that presents one aspect of the case while the right of the committee to make an appropriation presents another, and if the point of order is made against that right it would unquestionably be decided under our rules in the negative. It is just the same in that case as in any other bill. If the Committee on Appropriations come in with a bill including legislation, although embracing items which had been properly referred to the committee in the estimates or otherwise, they are subject to questions of order when the bill is under consideration by sections, the point of order being made on the specific item. And it seems to me that this bill, having been properly referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds for the exercise of its jurisdiction in making provision for the erection of the building, can not be objected to because of a provision contained in it making an appropriation.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Let me interrupt the gentleman to ask if it is not a fact that every Senate bill which provides for the erection of a public building carries with it an appropriation?

Mr. BYNUM. I believe so.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Is it not properly referred to our committee?

Mr. BYNUM. Certainly.

Mr. LEHLBACH. And have we the right to report favorably upon it?

Mr. BYNUM. Of course.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Then how do you make the distinction between that and the House bill?

Mr. BYNUM. Because our rules apply only to our own action. Whenever an appropriation bill is sent from the House to the Senate for action by that body, they may include in it legislation, because that is a privilege conferred upon their committee. But in the H use our rules expressly provide against such things, and such provisions could be stricken out on the point of order.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Then Senate bills have a privilege over House bills?

Mr. BYNUM. Certainly. We have deprived ourselves of jurisdiction and the Senate have retained it.

Now, one of the difficulties at this time is the fact that our bills are referred without being presented to the House in open session. It is impossible for any member of the House to know what a bill contains, because he is not privileged to demand its reading before its reference. It is referred under the rules, and the committee to whom it is referred takes jurisdiction and reports it back. If there is any specific matter in the bill of which the committee has not jurisdiction, the point of order would be directed at the proper time to the specific matter, and the Chair can rule it out, which settles the whole matter.

Mr. CASWELL. Mr. Chairman, I think that we are altogether too technical about this question of jurisdiction. My idea is that the rules of the House are simply directory, and that the committee to whom a bill is referred takes jurisdiction if a bill is referred by proper authority until the bill is withdrawn.

Now, we have numerous instances where there is a part of a bill embracing the subject that should go to the Appropriations Committee and part to the Committee on the Public Buildings and Grounds or some other committee. What are we to do in such cases: divide the bill and destroy its object and purposes or shall we decide to refer it to one or the other of the committees? And the very committee to whom it is sent takes jurisdiction, and jurisdiction is retained by that committee until the bill is withdrawn.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I wish to make a single suggestion. It is necessary that there shall be two distinct and separate acts before a public building is erected: One is the act authorizing its construction and the other is the act appropriating the money for its construction. Now, the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds has jurisdiction of the first and the Committee on Appropriations jurisdiction of the second branch of the subject. The provisions to carry out both of these acts may be included in the one bill, and it ought to be sent to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds because that committee must necessarily act primarily before the appropriation is made.

The CHAIRMAN. If the gentleman from Kentucky will permit an interruption just there, in view of what he is saying—

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Certainly.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the Chair understand the gentleman from Kentucky to say that in this class of cases he understands the Committee on Appropriations to have jurisdiction solely of the second proposition?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Certainly.

The CHAIRMAN. Then is it the opinion of the gentleman from Kentucky that the Committee on Appropriations under the general rule would have jurisdiction of the question of appropriation before the public building is authorized?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I think not; and hence an item making an appropriation for the building may be included in the same bill, and that bill goes to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, which must first act and provide that the building shall be authorized by law and specify its location and dimensions and other data in reference to it before the Committee on Appropriations can report a bill appropriating the money. So the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds returns the bill favorably as to the provisions over which it has jurisdiction, to wit, the authorization of the construction of the building, and the House acts upon that. Then by operation of the rules of the House the matter goes to the Committee on Appropriations, which returns the appropriation in the sundry civil bill. And it does not seem to me that there is any conflict of authority or trouble about the question; that it is the natural and ordinary sequence of legislation.

A bill is introduced. The Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to which it is referred, determine whether it is a proper expenditure, whether at that particular site a public building ought to be erected, the amount to be spent in such erection, and report it favorably to the House. The House acts upon it, and, if favorably, the matter, under the rules of the House, goes to the Appropriations Committee, which makes the appropriation, and the House, through the sundry civil bill, appropriates the money.

The CHAIRMAN. That, however, has never been the practice, the Chair is informed.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I think that it has been the universal practice, with a few exceptions, when occasionally gentlemen put into their bills this provision to appropriate the money for a public building, hoping thereby they may get their appropriation quicker than they would otherwise do by following the routine of legislation. Ordinarily the bill does not make provision for the appropriation of money, and it takes its ordinary course. The bill is introduced, goes to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, comes back, and then goes to the Committee on Appropriations under the estimates, because it is necessary to carry out the law; and in my four years I know of no exceptions, except occasionally, where this question has arisen as it has to-day, by some gentleman shrewdly putting into his bill for the erection of a public building a clause providing for the appropriation.

Mr. WADE. Will the gentleman permit me there?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Not just now. And then it comes back, and we have this point of order made and this same discussion, and so far as I know it has been uniformly the practice that it must go out of the bill and come up in a regular way.

Mr. WADE. I would just like to suggest to the gentleman from Kentucky that the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds want to strike out all the appropriation clauses in these bills.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. So far as I am concerned I am perfectly willing to grant the committee that privilege. Personally I do not want to make the point of order, but it looks too important, because, if you adopt the principle which you seem to be inclined to, it simply gives to each individual member on the floor a chance of utterly setting aside the rule as to the reference of bills if any gentleman who sees fit to do so can by putting in a clause that ought to be avoided, and then handing it in to the Clerk, have it referred by the Speaker, it is to give jurisdiction to the committee which the committee had not and has not under the rules.

Mr. MCCREARY. Will my colleague permit me to ask him a question before he takes his seat?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Certainly.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE] still has the floor.

Mr. MCCREARY. I understand my colleague to say that the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds can provide for the erection of a building and then the Committee on Appropriations appropriates the money. That was the way, I believe, he divided the authority to each committee. Now, if the Committee on Appropriations is intrusted with the appropriation of the money, I would like to know under which of these heads the Committee on Appropriations will be authorized to make that appropriation. Under Rule XI it is declared:

All proposed legislation shall be referred to the committees named in the preceding rule, as follows, namely: Subjects relating to appropriation of the revenue for the support of the Government, as herein provided, namely: For legislative, executive, and judicial expenses.

Now, this bill was not under that head.

For sundry civil expenses.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. There. The simple way in which this is done is this: This, being legislation, goes to the Secretary of the Treasury for the purpose of making an estimate; it comes from the Supervising Architect to the Secretary of the Treasury in what is known as the Book of Estimates, which is printed and referred to the Committee on Appropriations and the Committee on Appropriations, in the sundry civil bill appropriates for these public buildings.

Mr. MCCREARY. Mr. Chairman, my point is this: There is no heading in this rule which defines the authority of the Committee on Appropriations that gives that committee the power to appropriate in such cases as this.

Mr. CLEMENTS. The sundry civil bill.

Mr. MCCREARY. The sundry civil appropriation bill is suggested by the gentleman from Georgia. Now, this does not refer to anything that is contained in the sundry civil appropriation bill. It does not pertain to "fortifications," to "coast defenses." It does not come under the head of "the District of Columbia," of "pensions," or of "general deficiencies," for there is no deficiency; and these are all the heads contained under that rule.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. It does come under the head of the sundry civil appropriation bill; and if the gentleman will turn to page 14, Rule XXII, clause 2, he will find—

No appropriation shall be reported in any general appropriation bill, or be in order as an amendment thereto, for any expenditure not previously authorized by law.

Therefore, any appropriation reported in a general appropriation bill which has been previously authorized by law, which comes in the Book of Estimates from the Secretary of the Treasury to the Speaker of the House, is referred by the House to the Committee on Appropriations to pass upon; and it is for that committee to make the appropriation.

Mr. MCCREARY. But in this case the appropriation is previously authorized by law, because the bill simply authorizes the erection of a building.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. But whenever the erection of a building is authorized, it is authorized by law.

Mr. MCCREARY. They then would make the appropriation.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. It being authorized by law.

Mr. SAYERS. Do you find any jurisdiction given to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds except to authorize the building? That is the question.

Mr. MCCREARY. But that was not the question I asked the gentleman from Kentucky. I was simply asking the gentleman from Kentucky under what head of appropriations the Committee on Appropriations would get jurisdiction of this bill.

Mr. SAYERS. But that is not the question involved in this case.

Mr. MCCREARY. Where is the power given to the Committee on Appropriations?

Mr. SAYERS. It is not the question involved in this case.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I would like to inquire if the Chair is satisfied as to the bearing of this question, whether it is possible that debate can be continued interminably.

The CHAIRMAN. All these matters are in the discretion of the Chair. The Chair has invited discussion, but the Chair is ready to rule on the question. [Cries of "Rule!"]

Mr. BUCKALEW. Mr. Chairman, when the committee that has charge of these bills, through its chairman, has signified its willingness to dispose of this subject and dispose of it virtually on the point which has brought up this dispute, why should we have debate upon an abstract question about which gentlemen are not agreed? Why not take them at their word and end it? [Cries of "Amen."]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will please address himself to the point of order.

Mr. BUCKALEW. And why cause the Chair to give an abstract opinion virtually, as I understand it, in a ruling that this provision in a bill is in order, virtually repealing the rule which provides expressly that these appropriations shall not go to this committee. That is the rule. If a proposition like this can be contained in a bill authorizing the erection of a public building, you are breaking down the rule; and you had better wipe it out if, because this bill was formally referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds relating to the construction of a public building, it is to confer jurisdiction upon that committee which was not conferred upon it by the rules. Under the rule for correcting a reference this could not have been referred anywhere else. It had to go to that committee; and I presume that neither the Speaker nor the House knew what was in the bill. I submit, sir, that when a bill of this kind goes to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds they should hereafter do what the Chairman suggests now, eliminate that feature and report the bill, and then we shall have no more controversies.

The CHAIRMAN. The bill for which the pending bill is a substitute is the bill H. R. 565, introduced by the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. LEHLBACH] on the 18th of December, 1889, prior to the adoption of the new rules. The indorsement upon the bill is: "Read twice, referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and ordered to be printed." The Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds took jurisdiction of the bill. The point of order is made as against that clause of the bill which provides for an appropriation, because of the provision in clause 21 of Rule XI, which is:

All proposed legislation shall be referred to the committees named in the preceding rule, as follows, viz: Subjects relating, to the public buildings and occupied or improved grounds of the United States, other than appropriations therefor: to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

It is claimed that, because of the prohibition in the rule as to the reference to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds of matters involving appropriations for public buildings or for the occupied grounds in the United States, the point of order can be made against that provision in this bill which provides for an appropriation. It must be remembered that the House is now acting in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, considering a bill which has been reported by the committee, to which a bill substantially like this one has been referred. It has been frequently decided—and the Chair refers to the one decision covering the question—that a point of order as to the reference of a bill can not be made for the first time in Committee of the Whole. On the 10th day of May, 1879—the Chair reads now from a collection of decisions made by Mr. Speaker RANDALL—

Mr. John T. Harris, from the Committee on the Revision of the Laws, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 1493) defining the duties of reporter of the Supreme Court of the United States, fixing his compensation, and providing for the publishing and distribution of said reports, reported the same without amendment.

Mr. Garfield made the point of order that the bill was not in order to be reported from the Committee on the Revision of the Laws, on the ground that the subject-matter of the bill was, under the rule, committed to another committee. The Speaker overruled the point of order on the ground that it was too late to raise the question of the proper reference of a bill when the same was reported for consideration, the question of reference being in order only after its second reading, when, under the rule (Rule CXVIII), it was read for commitment or engrossment, which question of reference was not then raised.

It must be remembered that the fact is, as the Chair thinks, that the reference of this bill on the 18th day of December last was the act of the House of Representatives, and was not the individual act of the Speaker, nor the act of the Speaker in his position as Speaker alone. The bill, in legal contemplation, was read a first and second time, and then referred, as was assumed, under the rule. The question has been presented in the arguments whether or no that was the proper reference. Now, it is conceded by gentlemen who are in favor of sustaining the point of order that the subject-matter of the bill, which is the erection of a public building, was properly referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and could have been properly referred to no other committee.

It is suggested in argument that as the bill embraced two propositions, one of which might properly go to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds and the other involving an appropriation, which, as suggested by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE], ought properly to go to the Committee on Appropriations—in this view it has been suggested that some action should be had by which that kind of division should be made. But it has been repeatedly held that a bill can not be so divided. The Chair reads from the Manual and Digest:

It has been uniformly held that a bill can not be divided among two or more committees, although it contains subject-matter which legitimately belongs under Rule XI (the rule under consideration) to several committees; but must be referred to one committee as an entirety.

Therefore, under the decisions and under this opinion in the Digest collating the decisions, the reference of this bill to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds was, in the judgment of the Chair, a proper reference. The question is one of jurisdiction. The Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds has, by the formal action of the House itself—not by a formal vote of the House, but by action which, in the judgment of the Chair, was tantamount or equivalent to a vote of the House—received jurisdiction of this bill.

The bill being before that committee and involving a matter upon which the House has power to act, namely, to provide for payment for the erection of a public building at the same time that it provides for its erection, the committee alone had power to act upon the bill, because it is conceded, as the Chair understands, by all gentlemen who have taken part in the debate that the Appropriations Committee would not have jurisdiction of this appropriation until after the erection of the public building had been authorized, when the Committee on Appropriations would have the power, under the rule, to make the appropriation in pursuance of existing law and to include the amount in the sundry civil appropriation bill.

Clearly, the proposition for the appropriation for this building must go to some committee, and the Chair is of opinion that, under the rules of the House as they stand now and under the rules of the House of Representatives in the last Congress, there is no committee of the House to which a proposition for the appropriation of a sum of public money to pay for the erection of a public building might properly be referred under the rule in the first instance. None has been suggested in the argument, so far as the Chair knows. The Chair has made inquiry of two or three gentlemen having the floor as to what committee, in their opinion, this bill could have been referred to except the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Clearly it could not go to the Committee on Appropriations, because in general appropriation bills nothing is allowable except appropriations for expenses incurred in pursuance of existing law. As the bill had to go somewhere; as it did go to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds; as that committee has reported the bill, and it has been committed by the House to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and is now under consideration in Committee of the Whole, the Chair is of opinion that it is properly cognizable here and that the point of order should be overruled.

In connection with this question the Chair desires to say that a matter of the correction of a reference or taking any advantage of any improper reference is purely a matter for the House itself. Under the existing rules, if this bill had been referred by the Speaker without the knowledge of the House—furtively, as suggested—perhaps by the influence of some member who desired the bill to go to a committee that had not jurisdiction—if a bill under those circumstances should be referred to a committee not having jurisdiction, it would be because the rules gave the Speaker that power. But the rules also provide that any improper reference of a bill may be corrected in any one of three ways: Either by unanimous consent, or upon request of the committee claiming jurisdiction, or upon the report of the committee to which the bill has been referred.

Because this bill was referred by the House to this committee—and not improperly, as the Chair thinks, for the reasons which have been stated—and because it is under consideration in Committee of the Whole, the Chair thinks this point of order must be overruled.

Mr. MILLIKEN. I now withdraw my amendment and move that the bill be laid aside to be favorably reported to the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The bill is before the Committee of the Whole for general debate.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, if this report is not long, I ask that it be read in my time.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 355) to increase the appropriation for the improvements and changes of the public building in Newark, N. J., and for the purchase of additional land, respectfully report:

An appropriation for the purchase of additional ground in Newark, N. J., adjoining the custom-house and post-office building, and for the improvement of buildings, etc., of $350,000 was passed during the Fiftyeth Congress, and the act was approved March 1, 1888. The Secretary of the Treasury purchased for the use of the Government the church building adjoining the present post-office site, and the same has been altered so as to make it suitable for the transaction of the public business.

The Supervising Architect on examination found that it would be unprofitable to attempt to make additions to the present post-office building and that it would be more economical and to the best interests of the Government to remove the same and erect a new building in place thereof. He prepared plans and specifications, and it has now been ascertained that the amount available is insufficient to pay for the cost of the erection of a new building. According to the plans already prepared the building will adjoin a two-story structure on Broad street now being used as a dry-goods store. There would be no space between the buildings, and it is the judgment of the Supervising Architect that this property should be purchased in order that the customary open space can be secured. For the purchase of this land and for the additional amount necessary to erect the building in the manner proposed $300,000 additional to what has already been appropriated is needed.

Newark is a city of nearly 200,000 inhabitants. Its postal receipts are over $200,000, yielding a net revenue to the Government of about $150,000. The postal business is steadily increasing. The internal-revenue bureau is located there, and the amount collected in this district is one of the largest in the country.

The United States courts are authorized to hold sessions in Newark for the convenience of the northern part of New Jersey and for the accommodation of over 80,000 of its citizens, and the plans provide for a suitable court-room.

Your committee is of the opinion that the appropriation asked for is proper, and therefore recommend that the accompanying substitute for bill H. R. 355 do pass.

Mr. HOLMAN. It will be seen from this report that the Government has already a public building in Newark, N. J., and has had, I believe, since about 1857 a four-story building. Two years ago we passed an act appropriating $350,000 for the public building in Newark, N. J., which I ask may be read by the Clerk.

The Clerk read as follows:

An act to authorize the purchase of additional ground in Newark, N. J., adjoining the custom-house and post-office building, and for the improvement of the building thereon, and the erection of additions thereto.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized to purchase or acquire by condemnation sufficient additional land adjoining the United States custom-house and post-office building in Newark, N. J., and cause such changes and improvements to be made in the building thereon, and to erect such addition thereto as, in his judgment, may be necessary to render the same suitable for the transaction of the public business; and for the purpose herein mentioned the sum of $350,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be immediately available, be, and the same is hereby, appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. HOLMAN. Now, Mr. Chairman, it will be observed that this act appropriating $350,000 for the improvement of this building and the purchase of additional ground was passed two years ago. We have now before us a bill proposing to appropriate the additional sum of $300,000 for the same general purpose. I concede that this is not a singular case. There are upon the Calendar instances of the same kind from the State of New Jersey. The amounts are small, I believe; yet in three separate instances in the single State of New Jersey it is proposed by bills pending on the Calendar to enlarge the amount of previous appropriations for public buildings.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I have talked to a gentleman from the city of Newark who is very familiar with this subject. I have from him this statement: That the original site of the public building in Newark was 140 feet by 106 feet 8 inches; that was the original site on which the present building was erected. Under the authority of the act just read, the Secretary of the Treasury purchased an additional body of land of the same width, immediately adjoining the tract I have already mentioned, this additional tract being 78 feet 9 inches in length, and of course 106 feet 8 inches in width. He paid for this additional tract, I believe, $90,000, and $30,000 more for the purpose of carrying out this act by the improvement of the property. On this additional land there was a Baptist church, which has been repaired and fitted up for the purposes of the public business. That is the state of the case as it stands now. That left still in the hands of the Secretary of the Treasury $270,000 for the further improvement of this property. Now, in addition to that $270,000, it is proposed to appropriate in this bill $300,000, so that after making the purchase of the land and after repairing the building now on it there would be, if this bill should pass, the enormous sum of $570,000 still remaining to improve this property. Now I do not feel that this is just and fair to the balance of this country. Year after year—and the practice is growing worse almost every year—we are appropriating such large sums in particular localities that the number of these buildings is necessarily limited, for gentlemen must remember that notwithstanding the supposed surplus in our Treasury there is a limit to the amount of money to be appropriated. And you will see that the Committee on Appropriations will find it necessary to restrict very severely the amount of money to be expended upon public buildings under the various acts which have been passed.

Now, let me inquire why should this additional sum of money be appropriated in this case within two years after a large sum has already been appropriated? Why should it be appropriated in derogation of other sections of this country? As I have said, there are three bills of this character on the Calendar from the State of New Jersey. I admit that New Jersey is one of the finest and most prosperous States of the Union, but why should three different localities in that State be asking for an increase of the amount of their appropriation in derogation of the rights of every other locality in this country?

Mr. LEHLBACH. If the gentleman had read the report he would very readily have seen the answer to his inquiry. New Jersey has not asked for anything extraordinary. We have asked for the city of Newark altogether an appropriation of $650,000. It is a city about as large as Milwaukee, which has an appropriation of $1,200,000 and is asking an additional appropriation of $800,000. Another city in New Jersey to which the gentleman refers is Hoboken, a city of about 50,000 inhabitants, for which an appropriation of $60,000 was made last year and which now requires $15,000 additional to put up the building. Is that too much?

Mr. HOLMAN. The last Congress thought the appropriation then made was enough.

Mr. LEHLBACH. I want to defend New Jersey, because we have been modest in our requests. For Paterson, a city of nearly 90,000 population, an appropriation was made last year of only $80,000. The Supervising Architect found that he could not do anything with that amount. He could not purchase a site and have enough money left with which to erect one story of a building. The Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds proposes an additional appropriation of $75,000 for that city.

Now, New Jersey has asked for nothing extraordinary; and I did think that after the reading of this report no gentleman on this floor would object to this bill, especially not the economical gentleman from Indiana, because it is a modest bill and such a bill as our city of 200,000 inhabitants has a right to demand. Newark is a large manufacturing city, doing a greater manufacturing business, in comparison to its population, than any other city in the United States. The amount of goods annually manufactured there exceeds in value $100,000,000. I do not wish to occupy the time of the committee by discussing the merits of our city. I would call the attention, however, to the fact that there are about two hundred employes in this building, and we collect between four and five million dollars of internal revenue. The post-office business amounts to twenty millions of pieces of mail matter annually, and it turns over into the Treasury $100,000 a year.

Mr. HOLMAN. That is a very good showing.

Mr. LEHLBACH. I hope time will not be consumed. Already a great deal too much has been spent on this bill. I hope, Mr. Chairman, the vote will be taken and the bill passed.

Mr. HOLMAN. I am not responsible for the time consumed up to this point. I have taken up little of it myself. The effect is this: When Congress appropriates $350,000 the money is invested as far as it can be done. Sixty thousand dollars were paid for additional grounds and $20,000 for additional expense on that purchase. With the $200,000 left it seems to me they ought to be able to go forward in the erection of a suitable building. But instead of that they come here and ask at the very next Congress for the sum of $300,000.

You gentlemen need not indulge the hope that there is no limit to the surplus in the Treasury. Expenses are swelling by bills which are being passed in the two Houses of Congress—bills which are calling for the consideration of Congress, and which will pass this House and the other branch early, and when they do pass there will not be a dollar left in the Treasury. Then, instead of an enormous surplus, there will be little left. Gentlemen should not deceive themselves. If they continue to make these appropriations they will discover before Congress terminates there will be little margin left.

What is this building to be used for? I understand what it is for. The report of the committee leaves an impression on the House, unintentionally, of course, that a Federal court is held at Newark. Will my friend from New Jersey say that a Federal court is held at Newark?

Mr. LEHLBACH. I will say that at the last Congress—

Mr. HOLMAN. I am asking the question whether there is a Federal court held there or not.

Mr. LEHLBACH. The reason it is not held there now is that there is no accommodation for it in the present building. The people of Northern New Jersey, having a population of 800,000, are entitled to a United States court for their accommodation as much as the people of Indiana.

Mr. HOLMAN. In Indiana and other Western States men go eighty to a hundred miles to attend court.

A MEMBER. But they do not like it all the same.

Mr. HOLMAN. The impression created by the reading of the report in this case, unintentionally, of course, was that a Federal court was held there. The act which passed at the last Congress simply provides that, where both parties consent to it, the judge may order the trial of the case in the city of Newark. That is all there is about it. If both parties consent, of course the case may be tried there.

What is the next object of this bill? It is mentioned by my friend that there is an office of internal revenue there. Well, that does not require a very large building. The district I represent pays $3,000,000 of internal revenue and it does not cost the Government more than $25, or, at the furthest, $40 a year for rent. The office is held at Lawrenceburgh in my own district.

I believe Newark is also a port of delivery, but so little business is done there in the way of importation that no very large accommodation is required.

I can not see from the position of the city and the limited amount of commerce so far as importations are concerned what necessity there is for the erection of this costly building. Then we are told it is required for post-office purposes. We already have an expenditure of $20,000—for what?

Mr. LEHLBACH. Temporary use.

Mr. HOLMAN. Twenty thousand dollars for the temporary use. Is that the way the Architect of the Treasury expends the public money—expending $20,000 on the building bought in addition to the old site?

But I have said enough on this question. I hope this is understood. When I am satisfied of that fact I feel I have occupied all the time that is necessary. I ask why, after appropriating $300,000 less than two years ago, we should now propose to appropriate $650,000 for this building? In my own State cities and towns which in justice and fairness are entitled to attention are asking comparatively small sums of money, with little prospect of having their requests complied with. I think the amount appropriated in this bill should be reduced one-half. I think it should not pass, but I hardly feel justified in making a motion which would manifestly fail. I therefore move to reduce the amount of appropriation.

The CHAIRMAN. General debate is now progressing, and the gentleman will withhold his amendment until the proper time.

Mr. HOLMAN. I will move to reduce it to $150,000, and we will leave it in this form. We will leave it with the additional lands purchased at a cost of $60,000.

If this amendment is adopted it would leave this building as improved by the expenditure of $20,000, it will leave as a balance $270,000 of the money originally appropriated in the Treasury; and adding to that $150,000, you will have a sum of about $420,000 to improve this building or to construct a new one, if that shall be the determination of the Supervising Architect. That certainly it seems ought to be ample, when the amount proposed to be appropriated is reduced one-half, and at the proper time I shall make that motion and trust in justice to other portions of the country that it will be accepted by the committee.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Mr. Chairman, a word only in answer to the remarks of the gentleman from Indiana. The Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds of this House have made no appropriations or recommendations of any appropriations for the erection of public buildings in any part of the country for the benefit of New Jersey or any other State, as intimated by the gentleman. The committee recognize what they regard as a proper principle to guide them in recommending appropriations for such purposes, and that principle is, What is the need of the public service? That has been their guide. The Government makes an appropriation of money for this purpose, not to benefit any town or city or State, but for its own public service.

Now, the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, without regard to any other section of the country, looking only to the public service and to its benefit, recommend that this appropriation be made by this act for this great and very rapidly growing city of Newark, and we did not believe that it was an act of economy to recommend an appropriation which was entirely inadequate to meet the demands of the public service there. I know and the committee believed that in recommending these appropriations they should be guided as a man would be guided in the administration of his own private affairs, not to be extravagant, but to appropriate enough to meet the exigencies of the public service. That has been the rule of the committee. That has been the line laid down in its reports to this House, and I hope therefore, in view of the fact that the committee gave this matter a thorough investigation, that the amendment recommended by the gentleman will not be adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. The bill will now be read by sections for amendment and debate under the five-minute rule, unless some gentleman desires to be heard further upon the general debate.

The bill was read at length.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out all of the bill beginning with the word "and" in the twentieth line and including line 25.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Chairman, I hope that amendment will be voted down.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois submits an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

Mr. CANNON. I offer that amendment in good faith and for a proper purpose.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the following words:

"And the sum of $300,000, in addition to the sum of $350,000 appropriated by the act of Congress approved March 1, 1888, be, and the same is hereby appropriated, out of any moneys in the United States Treasury not otherwise appropriated."

Mr. CANNON. My object, if I can have the attention of the committee for a moment, is to try to get the committee to adopt a policy touching appropriations in connection with public buildings hereafter—

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Chairman, in order to avoid further delay, I will accept the amendment so as not to prevent the passage of other bills. I personally have no objection that the Committee on Appropriations should control this matter, and I hope the amendment will be agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman can not accept the amendment for the committee. The gentleman from Illinois offers an amendment which must be considered by the committee.

Mr. CANNON. It merely strikes out the appropriating clause.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. CANNON, it was adopted.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move to strike out the words "six hundred and fifty thousand dollars," in the nineteenth and twentieth lines, and insert the words "five hundred thousand dollars."

I hope the committee will not misunderstand this bill. Under the appropriation made two years ago there has been an addition made to the site of this public ground in Newark, an addition purchased at a cost of $60,000, known as the Baptist Church property, which is 78 feet and 9 inches in length and 106 feet and 8 inches in width. The bill here contemplates a further purchase of land at that point. Gentlemen will observe that the original site was 140 feet in length and 106 feet 8 inches in width. Then under the act passed two years ago the addition named, to which I have just referred, this piece of property, some 78 feet 9 inches in width, and known as the Baptist Church property, and 106 feet and 8 inches in width, was also acquired. This, I say, has already been done, and this bill is conferring not simply the power to increase the cost of the building, but also to acquire more land.

Mr. BUCHANAN, of New Jersey. To separate it from other buildings.

Mr. LEHLBACH. And the reason is distinctly set forth in the report.

Mr. HOLMAN. And having already this amount of land, 218 feet 9 inches in length by 106 feet 8 inches in breadth, and with the $500,000 appropriated, and now an additional appropriation of $150,000, it would still leave for the construction of the building or the repair of it, as may be hereafter decided, all of the $500,000 originally appropriated, except about $70,000, which would be a total of $430,000 for that purpose.

And this bill, if you notice, gentlemen, does not contemplate an entire new structure, because the Baptist Church property, which is already purchased, is by the terms of the bill proposed to be repaired and used for the purpose of the post-office as far as practicable.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Chairman, I hope the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana will be voted down. I will not occupy the time of the committee to discuss it, for I think every man present understands the importance of the appropriation, although the gentleman from Indiana does not seem to understand the needs of Newark—

Mr. HOLMAN. Oh, I understand it very well.

Mr. LEHLBACH. I think the rest of the committee understand it and can vote intelligently upon it.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. HOLMAN, the committee divided; and there were—ayes 11, noes 81.

Mr. HOLMAN. I believe there is no quorum, but I wish to say—

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman make the point of order that no quorum has voted?

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to say in that connection that the majority is so decisive that while there is no quorum voting I do not feel justified in making the point.

Mr. LEHLBACH. I move that the bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

The motion was agreed to.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT CEDAR RAPIDS, IOWA.

Mr. MILLIKEN. I now call up bill (S. 903) for the erection of a public building in Cedar Rapids, Iowa.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to purchase or otherwise provide a suitable site, and cause to be erected thereon, at the city of Cedar Rapids, in the State of Iowa, a suitable and commodious public building, with fire-proof vaults, for the use and accommodation of the post-office and for other Government uses. The site, and the building thereon, when completed according to plans and specifications to be previously made and approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, shall not exceed the cost of $200,000, nor shall any site be purchased until estimates for the erection of a building which shall furnish sufficient accommodations for the transaction of the public business, and which shall not exceed in cost the balance of the sum herein limited after the site shall have been purchased and paid for, shall have been approved by the Secretary of the Treasury; and the site purchased shall leave the building unexposed to danger from fire in adjacent buildings by an open space of at least 40 feet, including street and alleys; and for the purposes herein mentioned the sum of $200,000 is hereby appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury: Provided, That no part of said sum shall be expended until a valid title to the said site shall be vested in the United States, and the State of Iowa shall cede to the United States exclusive jurisdiction over the same, during the time the United States shall be or remain the owner thereof, for all purposes except the administration of the criminal laws of said State and the service of any civil process therein.

When the Clerk had read to the twenty-first line of the bill,

Mr. MILLIKEN said: The part of the bill which follows is simply the appropriation clause, and if it is in order to make that motion now, I will move to strike it out.

The CHAIRMAN. It is not in order at this stage of the proceedings, but will be in order after the reading of the bill.

The reading of the bill was resumed and concluded.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask that the report be read.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana is recognized, and the report will be read in his time.

The report was read, as follows:

The committee to which Senate bill 903 was referred report that they have had the same under consideration, and also House bill No. 299, on the same subject. Accompanying House bill is the following report, which we adopt:

"The Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 299) providing for the erection of a public building at Cedar Rapids, Iowa, report that they have had the bill under consideration and recommend its passage.

"Cedar Rapids is situated in the Fifth district of Iowa, which has a population of 200,000 and has no public building. It is the center of a very extensive railroad system embracing through lines of the Milwaukee and St. Paul Railroad, the Chicago and Northwestern Railroad, and is the center of the Burlington, Cedar Rapids and Northern Railroad system with 1,200 miles of road, and which employs 2,500 employes. Forty-three railroad mails on various lines are received and distributed at this office every day.

"The population of the city is from 20,000 to 25,000. The gross receipts of the office is $42,000 a year and the net income $27,000. Two hundred and twenty-five thousand registered letters and packages have passed through the office in the last three years. One million nine hundred thousand letters and packages were delivered by carriers last year, and about the same number directly from the office.

"Besides this the office is the distributing point of mail over the vast railway mail system centering there and is the headquarters of thirty-four railway mail clerks.

"Cedar Rapids has expended $275,000 for school buildings.

"It has a Masonic library building which cost nearly $50,000.

"It has the Holly system of water-works, costing $175,000.

"It has a system of electric lights and gas-works, and many miles of street railways.

"It has the largest pork-packing establishment in the State of Iowa, with perhaps the exception of Sioux City, packing annually in the neighborhood of 200,000 hogs.

"It also has a large number of manufacturing establishments. The resources of the city are equalled by few inland cities in the country. It has abundance of capital, having five strong national banks, and has never had a broken bank.

"Congress unanimously reported in favor of a term of the United States court at Cedar Rapids, and the expense of transporting witnesses and prisoners, amounting to $6,000 a year, warrants the location of the court on the ground of economy."

Your committee therefore recommend the passage of the Senate bill, and that the House bill on the same subject do lie on the table.

Mr. HOLMAN. In view of the action of the House on the last bill, for a public building at Newark, I do not feel justified in any extended discussion of this measure. It is obvious, however, to the House that this bill is for a post-office. The town, a very prosperous town, has a population which may amount to 20,000. It is said to be from 20,000 to 25,000 in the report. Therefore I take it it may be taken as a city of 20,000 people; but I will say that this may require the same amount of post-office accommodation under our free-delivery system that a city four times that population would require. So I can not vote for this bill upon the ground that its population is from 20,000 to 25,000; but I think, sir, that for a post-office the sum of $200,000 is more than ought to be appropriated in justice to other cities of the country. I have the honor to represent a city of more than half that population. The Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds reports a bill in favor of that location and recommends an appropriation of $40,000. I am not complaining about it. The proposition of a committee in appropriating for public buildings is to give the sum of three times as much as the gross revenues of the office. Now, will my friend from Iowa, who I think hears me, state whether or not this is substantially the proportion which has been considered by the committee, that the sum to be appropriated for a public building in any given locality should be three times the gross revenues?

Mr. GEAR. I do not understand the gentleman's motion. Will he please restate it?

Mr. HOLMAN. I move to strike out $200,000 and insert $150,000. I think $100,000 would be the appropriate amount; but I will ask my friend, does that committee expect to act upon the idea that the amount appropriated for a given public building shall be equal to three times the amount of the gross revenues of the post-office?

Mr. KERR, of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I will state a fact or two, and if the gentleman insists and my friends from the State insist, in view of these facts after I make the statement, then I will submit the question. The gentleman says we have no courts. The committee in the Forty-ninth Congress, when the district was represented by my predecessor, Mr. Frederick, reported in favor of a court at Cedar Rapids, and twenty adjoining counties have all asked for the location of a court there. The only reason why it has not been established is because there is no suitable place there for the holding of the court. Now, as I understand, in our delegation from Iowa there is no one who is opposed to the location of a Federal court at that place; and for these reasons I do not think the gentleman's motion ought to be sustained.

There is another thing. The gentleman says his city has much larger receipts. The receipts of this post-office are $42,000 a year.

Mr. HOLMAN. And three times that would give $126,000.

Mr. KERR, of Iowa. The increase in the receipts during the last twenty years has been at the rate of $8,000 every five years. It is in the Cedar Valley, the most beautiful valley in the world, in the center of one of the richest countries in the world, and it has better railroad communications than any city in our State; and I believe in a few years it will have a population of forty or fifty thousand.

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to call the attention of the gentleman to a fact.

Mr. KERR, of Iowa. My own colleagues of the State who are asking for public buildings insist that I should consent to the motion of the gentleman from Indiana; and in view of that fact, although it will send the bill back to the Senate, I accept it.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope the gentleman—

Mr. CANNON. I will go the gentleman from Indiana fifty better, and move that it be made $100,000. I think that is enough.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move to strike out, where it occurs, "two hundred" and insert "one hundred and fifty."

Mr. CANNON. And I move to strike out "one hundred and fifty" and insert "one hundred;" and I want to say a word about it.

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to call the attention of the gentleman from Iowa to a fact; and I wish to say to him that I am entirely impartial in this matter, and there is no gentleman upon the floor of this House whose bill I undertake to antagonize with greater reluctance than the gentleman from Iowa.

Take my own State; in the case of the city of New Albany, which is a much larger city than Cedar Rapids, we thought that $100,000 was ample for that public building, and there is a Federal court there, and had been for twenty-five years, and also a large and extensive public post-office business, and in addition to that it is a port of entry and delivery, I believe; at least, it has a Federal court and the post-office, if nothing more. Yet I gave my consent to fixing it at that sum notwithstanding the location is in my own State and bordering my own district. We consented to an appropriation of $100,000. Experience has demonstrated that the appropriation was ample, not only for a court-house, but also for the post-office. I shall cordially support the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois to reduce the amount of the appropriation to $100,000.

Mr. CANNON. I hold in my hand the Sixth Auditor's report, from which it appears that the gross revenue at this post-office—and remember it is a post-office alone that is asked—is $40,000 for the year 1889. I pick up the census of 1880 and I find that the population of Cedar Rapids was 15,000. I presume it has increased since that time.

Mr. GEAR. Cedar Rapids is a city of considerably over 20,000.

Mr. CANNON. Probably. I speak of the population as shown by the census of 1880. I am not aware that any census has been taken since, but I presume the city may now have 20,000; I do not know; I never was in Cedar Rapids. The report says the population is 20,000 or 25,000, and the report may be right.

Now, Mr. Chairman, as public buildings go, I am free to confess that I think there ought to be a public building in Cedar Rapids for the post-office, but I submit that $100,000 is sufficient to build a post-office in a city where the gross postal revenues are only $40,000 per annum. It is said that they have spent $275,000 for school-houses in that city to house probably 2,000 or 2,500 or 3,000 children. I do not think that that is any argument in this matter, but it would appear that $100,000 ought to provide a sufficient building to house one postmaster, five deputy postmasters, and eleven agents or letter-carriers, and still leave sufficient room to receive and deliver the mails. Certainly, I would be very glad to see the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KERR] have $150,000 for this purpose, if that is the amount that ought to be given under the circumstances; but I pick up a bill which will follow this, for a building in the city of Burlington, Iowa, and I find an appropriation of $100,000 for that.

Now, I know what my friend, Governor GEAR, thought when he saw that. The postal receipts of Burlington are larger than those of Cedar Rapids and the population is greater, and Burlington is the center of this great system of railways that Cedar Rapids is the center of. [Laughter.] In fact, every town all through that country is the center of that system of railways. [Laughter.] Now, if Cedar Rapids is entitled to $150,000 for a public building, Burlington is certainly entitled to $150,000, and I suggest to my friend, Governor GEAR, that he had better have this appropriation cut down $50,000 and $50,000 added to his bill.

Mr. GEAR. The gentleman may rely upon it that I shall ask for the city of Burlington all I think it ought to have, whether it be $100,000 or $150,000 or $200,000.

Mr. CANNON. Precisely, and I think you will be very apt to get it. In fact, I do not know but what I shall vote for it myself. [Laughter.]

Mr. GEAR. Probably you will, and you will have an opportunity.

Mr. CANNON. But I want to say that I do think that $100,000 is enough for a public building for Burlington, for which a bill is soon to follow, and that $100,000 is enough for Cedar Rapids, both buildings being intended for post-offices and post-offices only.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. The question is on the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] to the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN].

The question was taken; and the amendment was rejected—ayes 10, noes 77.

The amendment of Mr. HOLMAN was then agreed to.

Mr. CANNON. I desire to submit an amendment. I have not the Senate bill before me, but I move to strike out these words:

And for the purposes herein mentioned the sum of $200,000 is hereby appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. KERR, of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I entirely agree with the opinion of the Chair, rendered to-day, that the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds has ample power to report an appropriation, and I do not see any sense in asking that an appropriation which has passed the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds shall be afterward submitted to the Committee on Appropriations. I can not see any reason in the world for that. If any good reason could be shown, I would favor it, but I have heard no reason, and consequently I must resist this amendment.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I want, if possible, to see the policy of the House settled touching appropriations for public buildings. Gentlemen have said to me, "Why, Mr. CANNON, you want to have these appropriations referred to the committee of which you have the honor to be chairman, so that you can recommend the appropriation of the money." Now, I want to be entirely frank with this committee. I have no desire to see these appropriations for public buildings, after they are authorized, referred to the Appropriations Committee unless it is to the interest of the House and of the country that they should be so referred.

But, as I have said, I want the policy of the House settled. I do not know how many public-building bills there are to pass here; I believe there are seventy or eighty now upon the Calendar. Nor is it material to discuss most of those public appropriations now, because after they are authorized the buildings will not be completed within the next fiscal year; but I think it is entirely proper that the appropriations for these public buildings should go to some one committee that can inquire fully as to what amount can be properly and judiciously expended during the coming fiscal year for such purposes, and can report the facts for the consideration of the House, and let the House amend the action of the committee, increasing it or decreasing it, as it sees proper. And this is true not only as to this Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, but as to other committees. The Committee on Commerce, for example, has jurisdiction of legislation establishing light-houses. There is a light-house established at Seal Rocks that we have been building for ten or twelve years past, and it will take ten or twelve years more to complete it; and so it is at other points throughout the country.

You establish a light-house; it takes time to build the foundation; it takes time to put up the structure. Now, if this committee should report full appropriations for public buildings, it might just as well report full appropriations for light-houses, and so on through all the different committees. The result would be that before Congress adjourned you would pile up millions upon millions in the shape of appropriations that could not be expended during the next fiscal year.

I think the former policy of the House has been correct; that all these matters after they have been authorized should be referred to a single committee, that it may inquire in good faith what amount is required from one fiscal year to another to carry on the work and report the necessary appropriation under the rules of the House.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. CANNON. Certainly.

Mr. MILLIKEN. I do not care very much about this matter; I am not opposing the gentleman very much; but I would like to ask him whether it is not true that, should the whole amount of money be appropriated at once, it will only be used as fast as required.

Mr. CANNON. Precisely.

Mr. MILLIKEN. And that the public Treasury will not suffer one particle more if the appropriation be made now than if it be made by and by? The only result is that the amount appropriated looks large in the appropriation bill; that is all.

Mr. CANNON. Let me ask the gentleman a question. Suppose that for public buildings, light-houses, and various other improvements we authorize at this session an aggregate expenditure of $40,000,000, as has been authorized at former sessions of Congress, and appropriate the whole amount; who can tell how much is to be expended? Some one committee having jurisdiction of this matter, after the legislation authorizing these works has been had, should inquire how much can be expended for the next year and should report the appropriation. I think that is good policy. Certainly I do not care to urge this matter as a mere question of the jurisdiction for my committee.

Mr. KERR, of Iowa. If the gentleman will waive any further remarks, I will accept his amendment. Mr. Chairman, as this bill was introduced by the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate, I will accept the gentleman's amendment and consent that the provision indicated by him be struck out.

Mr. CLUNIE. I want to say a word on this question. [Cries of "Oh, no!"]

The CHAIRMAN. The pending question is on the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Illinois, to strike out the words he has indicated.

Several MEMBERS (to Mr. CLUNIE). Let it go.

Mr. CLUNIE. I have a right to vote on this question, and I do not propose to accept the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate on the amendment is exhausted.

Mr. CLUNIE. I move to amend by striking out the last word.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I want to say a word. I do not often trouble the House.

There is a law on the statute-book providing that before you can proceed with any of these public buildings you must get the site, and your building must come within the appropriation. Now, if we go on and pass these public-building bills and the Committee on Appropriations should see fit to appropriate only $50,000 it means nothing; and I want every member—

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman allow me a moment?

Mr. CLUNIE. Certainly.

Mr. CANNON. When the Committee on Appropriations reports its bill to the House, the House can increase, decrease, or strike out.

Mr. CLUNIE. That does not answer the question. Congress has passed a law providing that unless you come within the appropriation—for instance, in the case of San José—unless you can buy the ground and erect the building for $200,000 you can not do anything; your hands are completely tied. So it is with every public building. If the course suggested by the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations [Mr. CANNON] should be adopted, we can not do anything. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is upon the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MILLIKEN. I move that this bill be laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

The motion was agreed to.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT SCRANTON, PA.

Mr. MILLIKEN. I now call up the bill (H. R. 3331) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the purchase of a site and the erection of a suitable building for a post-office and other Government offices in the city of Scranton, Pa.," approved July 27, 1882.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the amount heretofore fixed as the limit of cost for the purchase of a site and the erection of a suitable building for a post-office and other Government offices in the city of Scranton, Pa., be, and the same is hereby, increased to $300,000; and that sum is hereby fixed as the limit of cost for the erection of said building.

SEC. 2. That the sum of $225,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this act, be, and the same is hereby, appropriated out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The amendments reported by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds were read, as follows:

In section 1, line 7, strike out "three hundred" and insert "two hundred and fifty;" so as to make the sum $250,000.

In lines 8 and 9, strike out the words "the erection of said" and insert the words "site and;" so as to read: "that sum is hereby fixed as the limit of cost for site and building."

In section 2, strike out, in line 1, the words "two hundred and twenty-five" and insert "one hundred and seventy-five;" so as to make the sum $175,000.

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. MILLIKEN. I move that this bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask that the report be read.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] demands the reading of the report. He will be recognized and the report will be read in his time.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 3331) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the purchase of a site and the erection of a suitable building for a post-office and other Government offices in the city of Scranton, Pa.," approved July 27, 1882, submit the following report:

The Forty-seventh Congress, by act of July 27, 1882, authorized the purchase of a site and the erection of a suitable building for a post-office and other Government offices at Scranton, Pa., limiting the expenditure to $75,000. Of this amount $35,000 has been used in purchase of a site, leaving insufficient provision for construction of a building that will provide the accommodations required, and so inadequate that the Supervising Architect of the Treasury Department in his annual report for 1884, and annually since, has called attention to the deficiency, and states that he had not felt justified in recommending the preparation of plans.

By the census of 1880 Scranton was the fourth largest city in the State of Pennsylvania and the thirty-eighth in size upon the list of cities of the Union. Since 1880 its phenomenal growth is stated by its board of trade in its published reports, as follows:

The directory of Scranton for 1880 contained 10,323 names. The census of that year gave us a population of 45,850. This gave a multiple of 4.4 to use in ascertaining the population in succeeding years. The directory for 1889 contains 23,576 names. Multiplied by 4.4 this would give the present population of Scranton at 105,054. It is therefore not without reason that the claim of a population of 100,000 is made. The increase is tremendous, but other things bear out this evidence of remarkable advance.

In 1880 our buildings numbered.....	6,329
In 1889 our buildings numbered.....	12,749
The assessment of 1880 was.....	$9,062,000
The assessment of 1889 was.....	$16,623,637
Dun's agency for 1889 for Scranton gives business concerns at.....	1,324

The increase in rating after making all necessary deductions averages, in round numbers, over $13,000,000.

Such growth has no parallel in Eastern cities, and that its prosperity is substantial and gives promise of a great future it is only necessary to recite that it is located in the very center of the great northern anthracite coal fields, surrounded by a rich and practically inexhaustible mineral deposit. One-third of the entire anthracite tonnage comes from the Lackawanna district, of which Scranton is the center and from which point it is shipped.

Seven important railroad lines center at Scranton.

Two Bessemer-steel works are located there, with capital stock of $4,000,000, which made during 1889 one-fourth of all the steel rails produced in the United States, and more than were manufactured in any one place in the world.

The amount of capital invested in the industrial enterprises operating at Scranton is stated at upward of $23,000,000, and the steady increase for several years past has averaged 10 to 15 per cent. annually. The average line of its bank deposits is $5,000,000.

In 1886 sessions of United States circuit and district courts were established at Scranton, necessitating a three-story building, for which the Supervising Architect advises this committee $300,000 will be required. It is evident to this committee that suitable provision should be made for a building for Government uses in Scranton, commensurate with the size and importance of the city and its undoubted growth in the immediate future.

Your committee therefore report favorably on this bill, and recommend its passage, with the following amendments. In section 1, line 7, strike out the words "three hundred" and insert "two hundred and fifty;" and in line 8 strike out the words "the erection of said" and insert the words "site and;" and in section 2, line 1, strike out the words "two hundred and twenty-five" and insert in lieu thereof "one hundred and seventy-five."

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE SUPERVISING ARCHITECT,
Washington, D. C., January 25, 1890.

SIR: At the request of Hon. J. A. SCRANTON I have estimated amount required for the construction of United States court-house and post-office at Scranton, Pa., commensurate with the necessities of the public service and the size and importance of that city.

In my judgment, the limit of cost should be increased to $300,000 for a site and a suitable building, with third story for the accommodation of the courts, the limit to include the cost of heating apparatus, approaches, and elevator.

Yours, respectfully,

JAS. H. WINDRIM, Supervising Architect.

Hon. SETH L. MILLIKEN,

Chairman Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds,
House of Representatives.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, I wish to say a few words in regard to this bill. I see that the committee have recommended a reduction of the amount in the bill from $300,000 to $250,000. Now, Scranton, it must be admitted, is one of the marvels of our country for its rapid growth and development, and a suitable building should be erected at that point. It seems, however, that this is for post-office purposes alone. I believe you have no Federal court there.

Mr. SCRANTON. We have.

Mr. HOLMAN. Then this building is designed for the accommodation of the Federal court and the post-office. Of course, the internal-revenue office will not require much space.

Now, what I desire is that the facts may be presented to the committee. In 1882 it will be admitted that Scranton was not as large as it is now, although then it was a prosperous city. In 1882 the House thought, and it was a Republican House, that $75,000 was enough for a proper public building at Scranton, and it appropriated that amount of money for the purpose. I concede with the present drift of sentiment in this House that that seems to be a small amount, but that was the judgment of the House of Representatives only eight years ago, that for a building for Scranton, Pa., $75,000 was sufficient. Thirty-five thousand dollars was expended for a site, leaving $40,000. I admit, in the present condition of Scranton, that $40,000 is not sufficient.

In my own State about five years ago there was an appropriation made of $100,000 for New Albany, a leading city of Indiana, and an elegant building was erected there. The Federal court has been held there for many years. The building was for the Federal court and post-office. The city is, I think, a port of entry, but I am not certain as to that. That sum, I understand, was found to be ample, and the building has been completed for that expenditure of money.

The amount now remaining of the appropriation for Scranton is $40,000. If you fix the limit at $200,000, which I shall propose, you will have $215,000 for the purposes of this bill; the site has been purchased for $35,000. I think $200,000 ought to be the limit, an increase of $125,000. It is a sufficient sum to appropriate.

I wish to call attention, Mr. Chairman, to this fact, that while there has been a large surplus in the Treasury, which is a state of things always perilous to frugal and honest legislation, that surplus is rapidly melting away. By your laws you have wisely provided that the Committee on Invalid Pensions shall have the right to report general pension bills at any time. I think the distinguished gentleman from Kansas, chairman of that committee, ought to bring before the House at an early hour bills giving proper pensions to the soldiers of the Union Army and providing properly for their widows and children. These measures are of the highest importance and will certainly sooner or later receive proper consideration; such measures will necessarily involve the appropriation of a large sum of money.

I submit that until we know what that legislation will be in behalf of the Union soldiers and their widows and children, until we know what sums will be appropriated by Congress towards the payment of that debt of national justice and gratitude, we ought to move a little moderately in appropriations for costly public buildings which can very well be dispensed with. We have fifty or sixty bills already before us for public buildings, and there are others getting ready to swell the Calendar, and in this carnival of extravagance there may not be left any surplus in the Treasury to meet these higher obligations we owe to the defenders of the Union, or at least such a reduction of the surplus as will be urged as justifying only partial relief.

I hope gentlemen will remember that we have not reached that important legislation. I hope the proper pension bills in contemplation and which the public judgment demands will be reported at an early day, that the House may understand to what extent it may apply the public funds to the erection of costly public buildings and other objects of similar character, and yet do justice to the soldiers of the Union Army, their widows and children.

I move to amend the amendment of the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The bill is not before the committee for amendment, but for debate. By unanimous consent, it may be considered before the House for amendment.

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to reduce the amount of the limit from $250,000 to $200,000.

Mr. LEHLBACH. The gentleman misunderstands the bill. It does not call for an appropriation of $250,000, but it increases the limit of cost.

Mr. HOLMAN. It is the same thing.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Oh, no.

Mr. HOLMAN. I do not misunderstand the terms of the bill. It increases the original limit of $75,000 to $250,000 and fixes the latter sum as the amount which is to be appropriated ultimately. Now, we take it for granted, from our past experience, that whatever is the limit of the law will be reached beyond question. I never knew a less sum appropriated during my service here than was fixed as the limit of the cost of the site and building. No; we may safely determine that the sum named will be ultimately appropriated.

The committee, I say, proposed to fix the limit at $250,000. My motion is to make the limit $200,000, instead of $250,000. This is an increase of $125,000.

I observe the anxiety of the distinguished gentleman who represents the Scranton district, and his friends, that a fair and proper bill should pass, and I am free to say, Mr. Chairman, that no gentleman on this floor will go further than I will, consistent with what is just and proper to the public service, to carry out the wishes and views of the gentleman from that district [Mr. SCRANTON].

That excellent gentleman, so far as personal consideration could govern our actions in disposing of the public funds, would certainly succeed in getting all that he might ask for this building. But public considerations intervene and these ought to govern, notwithstanding the wish that many of us entertain, and none more sincerely than myself, that the wishes of the gentleman from the Scranton district should be granted.

Mr. McCORMICK. Will the gentleman yield for a moment?

Mr. HOLMAN. Certainly.

Mr. McCORMICK. If the amendment to the amendment prevails, the sum appropriated for the building, as I understand the gentleman, will be $240,000?

Mr. HOLMAN. I believe that is correct.

Mr. McCORMICK. The gentleman is mistaken, if he will permit me to say so. This is an amendment to the act of 1882. That act made the limit of the appropriation $75,000. This bill makes it $300,000, and the committee propose an amendment to limit the amount to $250,000, which was the entire cost of the building. So that if the amendment of the committee prevails it would be $250,000.

Mr. HOLMAN. And $40,000 of that is still on hand.

Mr. McCORMICK. Forty thousand dollars of the original limit; but, if the gentleman's amendment prevails, then the amount of the entire cost of the building would be limited to $200,000 instead of $240,000 as the gentleman states.

Mr. HOLMAN. That may be the result—

Mr. LEHLBACH. I will state, so that the gentleman will understand it—

Mr. HOLMAN. I think that there is no misunderstanding about the matter. The original limit was fixed at $75,000. The proposition here is to make it $250,000. My motion is to make it $200,000, and this bill appropriates $175,000.

Mr. SCRANTON. One hundred and seventy-five thousand dollars. Mr. HOLMAN. That is correct, $175,000, and the $40,000 remaining, and available, would make the total sum $215,000.

Mr. LEHLBACH. That is correct; $215,000. That is the correction I wanted to make, and the gentleman would not allow it.

Mr. HOLMAN. The effect of my proposition would be that the limit of the cost of the building and site, the site having been secured by an expenditure of the original appropriation to the amount of $35,000, instead of being $75,000 as originally provided it would be $215,000. I think that in justice to other sections of the country and to the public Treasury that sum is sufficient.

Mr. SCRANTON. Mr. Chairman, when this bill first came up in the Forty-seventh Congress—and the gentlemen here want to understand that at that time the Government was not erecting buildings in every little cross-road village, but only in the large commercial centers and seaboard cities—when this bill first came up in that Congress I was a member of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds of which one of my Pennsylvania colleagues was the chairman. I acceded to his request to allow the sum to be reduced to $100,000. When it came up by unanimous consent in the House the same gentleman who is opposing me to-day, the gentleman from Indiana, rose in his place and objected to the consideration of the bill, and sent me word over to our side of the House that if I would reduce it to $75,000 he would withdraw his objection and the bill might pass. I told my colleagues that that would not more than pay for the site, as I thought at that time. They said, "All right, let it go; get your building established." So I consented to the reduction proposed by the gentleman.

In the census of 1880 this city was thirty-eighth in the Union, and yet the cost for the public building there was limited to $75,000. The Government went on and acquired the site, for which it paid $35,000. That site to-day would sell under the hammer for $150,000, showing the advance in property and the rapid growth of that city.

Now, ever since then we have been knocking at the doors of Congress for the purpose of getting the building. Every report of the Supervising Architect from that time to this has called attention to the building and that the amount was entirely inadequate. The construction has been delayed, and so for eight years we have waited and waited—the thirty-eighth city in population by the census of 1880. Since that time at least one hundred and fifty public buildings have been authorized by Congress, one hundred and forty of them at least in cities less in size and importance than the city of Scranton.

Now, it makes me tired [laughter] when I see the cheap statesman from the West get up here and talk about what he does not know anything about. He never was in our country and does not know anything whatever about it. We need $300,000 for this building and we are going to have it ultimately.

Now, the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds has been very kind in this matter in this Congress. True, they cut me down $50,000, but they would not have done it if they had had the facts and the figures before them, when they considered the question, that I desired to submit. The gentlemen constituting the subcommittee, the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. LEHLBACH] and my colleague [Mr. DARTINGTON], when the matter came up, had not the statistics before them which I desired them to have.

Mr. CLUNIE. And the committee did not have them.

Mr. SCRANTON. So that they cut the amount down from $300,000 to $250,000. If there had been no motion made to reduce the amount here, I would have quietly accepted the recommendation of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds; but as it is, I ask gentlemen not to agree to the amendment of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds and to give us the amount that the bill calls for, $300,000. That is the amount that we need, and I am satisfied if the House will consider the matter for a few moments they will not object to it.

The CHAIRMAN. The debate upon the pending amendment is exhausted.

Mr. SPINOLA. I move to amend by striking out the last word, and shall ask the attention of the committee for two or three minutes. The gentleman having the bill in charge has made complaint that the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds reduced the amount appropriated by his bill from $300,000 to $250,000, but he has neglected to inform the House of the fact that the original appropriation was only $75,000. From that they have sprung up to $300,000, and the committee reduced the amount by $50,000. Now, sir, as a matter of practical legislation, governed by common sense, if I had charge of the bill, I would accept the proposition made by the gentleman from Indiana, and accept it so quickly that it would make your head swim.

Mr. SCRANTON. What do you know about it?

Mr. SPINOLA. I know about as much about it as you do.

Mr. SCRANTON. You do not know anything about it.

Mr. SPINOLA. I do know. I know your city, and I have been in your city, and if you take members of this House to be ignoramuses you will be very much mistaken. [Laughter.]

Mr. SCRANTON. The gentleman from Indiana does not know anything about it.

Mr. SPINOLA. I want to tell you he would not be here if he did not know what is required in these cities, and I say to the gentleman that he ought to accept the offer that has been made to him.

Mr. SCRANTON. I would like to tell the gentleman something.

Mr. SPINOLA. You can tell it in your own time. Now, I wish to say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that in my judgment he is making a great mistake. There will be another year, and then he may have votes enough in this House to have a majority.

Mr. SCRANTON. We have been waiting eight years.

Mr. SPINOLA. Suppose you have waited eight years. The Government gave you $75,000 eight years ago and you thought that was sufficient.

Mr. SCRANTON. We did not.

Mr. SPINOLA. That is what your Representative said.

Mr. SCRANTON. I said at that time that it would not be enough.

Mr. SPINOLA. You asked $100,000, and Congress gave $75,000, thinking that that was sufficient at that time. Now you are here and ask for $300,000.

Mr. SCRANTON. No.

Mr. SPINOLA. For $200,000 more.

Mr. SCRANTON. For $175,000 more.

Mr. SPINOLA. Take my advice. If you want to get a vote and pass this bill to-day, take this proposition that the gentleman from Indiana has offered; and I will say to you if you do not you may have the question of no quorum brought up against your bill. Take the proposition made by the gentleman from Indiana is my advice.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Indiana.

The question was put, and the Chairman announced that the "noes" seemed to have it.

Mr. HOLMAN. Division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 12, noes 100.

So the amendment offered by Mr. HOLMAN was rejected.

Mr. CANNON. I move to strike out the second section of the bill, which is the section making the appropriation.

The CHAIRMAN. The first section of the bill contains an amendment proposed by the committee that must be first acted upon.

Mr. SCRANTON. Inasmuch as the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] and the gentleman from New York [Mr. SPINOLA] have made an attack on this bill, as I believe and know that $300,000 is needed and will have to be given in the end, why not give it to us at once, as a matter of business, and settle this matter? Therefore I hope that this committee will stand by me and not adopt the amendment of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds; and in this connection I wish to say that I have the consent of the chairman and members of that committee to make this appeal to the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman is entirely mistaken when he says that he has the consent of the chairman of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds to do anything of the kind. The committee cut down the bill to what they thought ought to be appropriated. Now, I will state that I had a bill for my own district, and in order to accommodate the gentleman from Pennsylvania I have passed over my own bill and called up his in the place of it. I submit that I do not think after having done that that the gentleman should provoke all this discussion. I hope his amendment will be voted down.

Mr. SCRANTON. Mr. Chairman, I think it is due me to say to the House that before I proposed to make this objection I consulted the chairman of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds in regard to it; and I told him at that time that I felt under obligation to him personally and to the members of the committee for reporting this bill at this early date; that I thought they had made a mistake in reducing the amount from $300,000 to $250,000, and that as bills were going here in towns of less importance it ought to be restored to $300,000, and I would object to their amended bill. Mr. MILLIKEN told me to go ahead and object, it was all right; that he had no objection to the Committee of the Whole taking action on the bill.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Now, Mr. Chairman, I do not want to raise a question of veracity with the gentleman; but he is utterly mistaken in what he says.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the first amendment offered by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the second amendment of the committee.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the words "the erection of said" and insert "site and;" so as to make it read: "that sum is hereby fixed as the limit of cost for site and building."

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

In section 2, strike out "two hundred and twenty-five," and insert "one hundred and seventy-five;" making it read: "That the sum of $175,000," etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CANNON. I move to strike out section 2, it being the section making the appropriation. I do not desire to say anything concerning it.

Mr. MILLIKEN. I will say so far as the committee is concerned they will accept that amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

PUBLIC BUILDING, CHESTER, PA.

Mr. MILLIKEN. I call up the bill (H. R. 766) to provide for the erection of a public building at Chester, Pa., and I ask unanimous consent that the Senate bill S. 859, an act for the erection of a public building at Chester, Pa., be considered in its stead.

There was no objection.

The bill was read, as follows:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to acquire, by purchase, condemnation, or otherwise, a site, and cause to be erected thereon a suitable building, including fire-proof vaults, heating and ventilating apparatus, elevators, and approaches, for the use and accommodation of the United States post-office and other Government offices in the city of Chester and State of Pennsylvania, the cost of said site and building, including said vaults, heating and ventilating apparatus, elevators, and approaches, complete, not to exceed the sum of $100,000, which said sum of $100,000 is hereby appropriated for said purpose, out of any moneys in the United States Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Proposals for the sale of land suitable for said site shall be invited by public advertisement in one or more of the newspapers of said city of largest circulation for at least twenty days prior to the date specified in said advertisement for the opening of said proposals.

Proposals made in response to said advertisement shall be addressed and mailed to the Secretary of the Treasury, who shall then cause the said proposed sites, and such others as he may think proper to designate, to be examined in person by an agent of the Treasury Department, who shall make written report to said Secretary of the results of said examination and of his recommendation thereon and the reasons therefor, which shall be accompanied by the original proposals and all maps, plats, and statements which shall have come into his possession relating to the said proposed sites.

If, upon consideration of said report and accompanying papers, the Secretary of the Treasury shall deem further investigation necessary, he may appoint a commission of not more than three persons, one of whom shall be an officer of the Treasury Department, which commission shall also examine the said proposed sites, and such others as the Secretary of the Treasury may designate, and grant such hearings in relation thereto as they shall deem necessary; and said commission shall, within thirty days after such examination, make to the Secretary of the Treasury written report of their conclusion in the premises, accompanied by all statements, maps, plats, or documents taken by or submitted to them, in like manner as hereinbefore provided in regard to the proceedings of said agent of the Treasury Department; and the Secretary of the Treasury shall thereupon finally determine the location of the building to be erected.

The compensation of said commissioners shall be fixed by the Secretary of the Treasury, but the same shall not exceed $5 per day and actual traveling expenses: Provided, however, That the member of said commission appointed from the Treasury Department shall be paid only his actual traveling expenses.

So much of the appropriation herein made as may be necessary to defray the expenses of advertising for proposals, actual traveling expenses of said agent, and the compensation and actual traveling expenses of said commissioners, and other expenses incident to the selection of the site, and for necessary survey thereof shall be immediately available.

So much of said appropriation as may be necessary for the preparation of sketch-plans, drawings, specifications, and detailed estimates for the building by the Supervising Architect of the Treasury Department shall be available immediately upon the approval by the Secretary of the Treasury of such site.

No money appropriated by this act shall be available, except as hereinbefore provided, until a valid title to the site for said building shall be vested in the United States, nor until the State of Pennsylvania shall have ceded to the United States exclusive jurisdiction over the same, during the time the United States shall be or remain the owner thereof, for all purposes except the administration of the criminal laws of said State and the service of civil process therein.

After the said site shall have been paid for and the sketch-plans and detailed estimates for the building shall have been prepared by the Supervising Architect and approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, the Secretary of the Interior, and the Postmaster-General, the balance of said appropriation shall be available for the erection and completion of the building, including fire-proof vaults, heating and ventilating apparatus, elevators, and approaches.

The building shall be unexposed to danger from fire by an open space of at least 40 feet on each side, including streets and alleys.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask that the report in that case be read.

Mr. SPRINGER. I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the reading of the report.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] has been recognized and has demanded the reading of the report, and it will be read as a part of his remarks.

The report (by Mr. DARLINGTON) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to which was referred the bill S. 859, has duly considered the same and recommends its passage, with an amendment to conform it with H. R. 766, already reported (House Report 215), as follows:

Strike out the words "one hundred thousand" wherever they occur in the bill and insert in lieu thereof the words "eighty thousand."

Mr. HOLMAN. I observe from the reading of the report that the amount is reduced to $80,000.

The CHAIRMAN. By unanimous consent the bill will be regarded as before the committee for consideration and amendment. The question is upon the amendment proposed by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the appropriation section of the bill.

Mr. DARLINGTON. I am willing that that shall be done.

Mr. BYNUM. Mr. Chairman, upon that motion I desire to be heard. In order that the House may understand the importance of this bill, I desire to have read what I have marked in the RECORD of a former Congress, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. EVERHART. It is for a public building in Chester, Pa. I may say, Mr. Speaker, with verity, that such an improvement is essential on account of the importance of the city. On account of its population, which, with the suburbs, will be accommodated, amounts to some 35,000 souls; and of its postal business, which will aggregate quarterly over $10,000; and of its domestic and foreign trade, employing some three hundred vessels yearly, and its harbor, wider, deeper, and nearer the sea than Philadelphia. On account of its industrial works, textile, iron, and chemical, its famous plants for the construction of steel and wooden vessels, and its great refineries of oil. On account of its schools, miscellaneous, military, and theological, and its churches, banks, and newspapers, and its various associations of loyalty and charity. On account of its situation, bounded on the front by the Delaware River, teeming with fish and ventures, with the rolling land behind it exuberant with crops and cattle, while three great lines of railway send numerous loaded trains through it daily to all points of the compass. On account of its history, as the seat of William Penn's first legislative council, where he organized his commonwealth of free suffrage and free worship and proclaimed his immortal policy of peace. On account of its growth, which has duplicated its extent, its correspondence, and resources within a score of years. On account of its necessities, because the present buildings are merely leased and inconvenient in size, arrangements, and locality, for the transaction of the public affairs. [Applause.] Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I ask that this bill be considered and passed. [Applause.]

[Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON].

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

PUBLIC BUILDING, TROY, N. Y.

Mr. MILLIKEN. I call up the bill (H. R. 605) to increase the appropriation for the erection of a public building at Troy, N. Y.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the amount heretofore fixed as the limit of cost for the erection of a public building by the United States Government at Troy, N. Y., be, and the same is hereby, increased to $500,000, and that sum is hereby fixed as the limit of cost for the erection of said building and for the payment for the site thereof; and said additional sum, to wit, the sum of $300,000, is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be used and expended for the purposes provided in this act.

SEC. 2. That the officers of the United States Government having charge of the erection of public buildings are required to be governed by the limitation hereby prescribed in making plans and contracts for said building.

SEC. 3. That the provisions of existing law relating to said building be so amended as to require an open space of not less than 20 feet in lieu of 40 feet, as provided by the act of February 14, 1885.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask for the reading of the report.

The report (by Mr. QUACKENBUSH) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 605) to increase the appropriation for the erection of the public building in Troy, N. Y., having had the same under consideration, respectfully report as follows:

At the second session of the Forty-eighth Congress a bill was passed appropriating $200,000 for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building thereon in the city of Troy, N. Y. At the second session of the Forty-ninth Congress an additional sum of $100,000 was appropriated to the same object, the limit of cost of said site and building being increased by act of Congress to $300,000.

A plot of ground on the corner of Fourth street and Broadway, 131 by 150 feet, in the midst of the most active business section of the said city, has been purchased as the site of said building at a cost of $103,000, including sundry incidental expenses connected with such purchase, leaving the sum of $197,000, which, under the present limit, is the sum available for the complete construction of the said building and the approaches thereto. The site has been cleared of the structures heretofore occupying it, and active work on the Government building is contemplated early in the coming spring.

The superintendent of construction of said building gave expression to his views in a letter of which the following is a copy:

TROY, January 14, 1888.

DEAR SIR: It is the generally expressed opinion of the citizens of Troy that the amount appropriated for the proposed Government building to be erected in this city is insufficient. In this opinion I concur. Two hundred thousand dollars will pay for a good brick building, but the structure to be erected here by the United States Government should be built of granite and be made fire-proof, and to so build it will require, in my judgment, a sum double the amount of the present appropriation.

Respectfully,

M. F. CUMMINGS,

Architect and Superintendent of Construction U. S. Post-Office, Troy, N. Y.

Hon. E. W. GREENMAN.

The Supervising Architect says:

THE TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE SUPERVISING ARCHITECT,
Washington, January 20, 1889.

SIR: I have the honor to state in regard to the bill (H. R. 605) increasing limit of cost of the building at Troy, N. Y., transmitted to you on the 19th instant by the chairman of the Subcommittee on Public Buildings and Grounds, that the present limit would only permit of the construction of a non-fire-proof building, with barely sufficient floor space for the present need of the post-office business. To secure the floor space necessary for the proper transaction of the post-office business, which is rapidly increasing, basing this statement upon what will be required at the expiration of fifteen years, and erecting a fire-proof building, the limit of cost for site, building, and approaches complete should be extended to $500,000.

Should the action be taken as indicated by the bill referred to it will be necessary to decrease the fire limit to 20 feet.

Respectfully, yours,

JAS. H. WINDRIM, Supervising Architect.

The SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY.

The city of Troy and its suburbs are among the most active and flourishing manufacturing centers in the United States, the output of goods exceeding in value the product of many cities of greater population.

The population receiving mail at the Troy post-office was 73,500, according to the census of 1880. At the present time conservative judges estimate it at 90,000, said census and estimate including the villages of Lansingburgh and Green Island and a part of the towns of Brunswick and North Greenbush, all of which receive mail from the Troy office. The gross receipts of said office for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1888, were $100,631.02. A money-order business of about $500,000 is yearly transacted, and not less than 16,000,000 pieces are annually handled by the carriers and employees.

The citizens of Troy have for many years contributed a much larger sum of money annually to the Government in the way of internal-revenue tax than very many cities of larger population.

In answer to the suggestion of the Supervising Architect that the fire limit should be reduced to 20 feet, your committee would state that since the purchase of the site for the Government building the parcel of land north of and adjoining said site has been sold to the Union National Bank, and said corporation has erected thereon a three-story and attic fire-proof banking house, 25 feet in width and extending the full depth of the lot, namely, 131 feet; so that, although the open space between the Government building and the banking house should be reduced to 20 feet, yet the distance between the former and a non-fire-proof structure would be greater by 5 feet than is provided or required by the act of February 14, 1885.

In view of the foregoing facts your committee respectfully recommend the passage of the bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, this is rather an unusual bill. Two hundred thousand dollars was appropriated in the first place for this public building in the Forty-eighth Congress, I believe; then $100,000 more, and now $200,000 more is asked for. That is going on pretty rapidly. What will be the demand in the next Congress? I observe, too, that there is no provision in the bill that this appropriation shall be in full. I do not understand our Supervising Architect of the Treasury. The spirit of the law is that he shall make his plans according to the appropriations made by Congress, but judging from these reports his opinion seems to be conclusive, and he appears to be recommending increases all along the line. The Forty-eighth Congress thought that $200,000 was enough for this public building; the next Congress thought that $100,000 should be added to that amount; and now the Fifty-first Congress is expected to add $200,000 more. The site for the building has been purchased, if I understand correctly, for $97,000; so that there is already $203,000 available for the construction of this building, and, judging from the past action of Congress, I should not believe that double that sum, or $403,000, would be thought necessary.

I observe that motions to reduce these appropriations are not received with very much favor, but still, this being so unusual a case, I will venture to move to reduce the amount by $100,000, fixing the limit at $400,000, instead of $500,000.

The CHAIRMAN. By unanimous consent the bill will be regarded as before the committee for consideration and amendment, and the gentleman from Indiana moves to strike out "$500,000" and insert "$400,000."

The amendment was rejected—ayes 16, noes 80.

Mr. BUCKALEW. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the second section of the bill, which is entirely unnecessary.

Mr. MILLIKEN. The appropriating clause?

Mr. BUCKALEW. No, sir; the provision that this amount shall not be exceeded. I ask for its reading.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. That the officers of the United States Government having charge of the erection of public buildings are required to be governed by the limitation hereby prescribed in making plans and contracts for said building.

Mr. BUCKALEW. If we put that into this bill it will raise the presumption that when we do not put it into other bills these officials may exceed the limit.

Mr. MILLIKEN. I do not object to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Mr. Chairman, I move that the appropriating clause of the bill be stricken out.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT COLUMBUS, GA.

Mr. MILLIKEN. I now call up the bill (H. R. 188) for the erection of a public building at Columbus, Ga., and appropriating money therefor.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to purchase a site for, and cause to be erected thereon, a suitable building, for the use and accommodation of the post-office and other Government offices at the city of Columbus, Ga. The plans, specifications, and full estimates for said building shall be previously made and approved according to law, and shall not exceed, for the site and building complete, the sum of $150,000: Provided, That the site shall leave the building unexposed to danger from fire in adjacent buildings by an open space of not less than 40 feet, including streets and alleys; and no money appropriated for this purpose shall be available until a valid title to the site for said building shall be vested in the United States, nor until the State of Georgia shall have ceded to the United States exclusive jurisdiction over the same, during the time the United States shall be and remain the owner of the same, for all purposes except the administration of the criminal laws of said State and the service of civil process therein.

SEC. 2. That the sum of $150,000 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, from any money in the Treasury of the United States not heretofore appropriated, to enable the Secretary of the Treasury to carry out the provisions of this act, which sum shall be immediately available.

The amendments proposed by the committee were read, as follows:

In line 10 of section 1, strike out the words "and fifty," so as to make the sum "$100,000."

In line 1 of section 2, strike out the words "and fifty," so as to make the sum "$100,000."

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask for the reading of the report.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] is recognized, and the report will be read in his time.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 188) for the erection of a public building at Columbus, Ga., submit the following report:

Columbus is at this time the center of eight important railroads, at the head of steam-boat navigation on the Chattahoochee River, and is the seat of numerous factories, steam mills, foundries, iron works, and other industries of various kinds. Its population is rapidly increasing. A post-office building has at all times been rented, and the sum of $1,200 per annum is now paid as rental.

The population of Columbus is about 24,000, being an increase of over 100 per cent, since the census of 1880, and, including the suburban population, it will exceed 35,000. It is a large manufacturing city, perhaps the largest in the State, including in this cotton and woolen mills, oil mills, bagging factory, iron works, fertilizing factory, and scores of other enterprising institutions, employing as many as 5,000 operatives. The annual cotton receipts of this place vary from 70,000 to 110,000 bales. A free-delivery system was here established in July, 1887. The gross revenue of the post-office at this place for 1889 was $19,201.52, showing a very healthy increase over years previous. The money-order business will compare favorably with other offices supplying a like population.

The population within the delivery of the office is fully 35,000. From this it will be clearly seen that the prospects of a very rapid increase is reasonable. There are eight railroads running into this city. There are several others chartered which will be soon under contract. There is located here the largest iron foundry in the South, besides other foundries of lesser magnitude. With a large banking capital and a surplus of about half that sum, Columbus has bright prospects. The assessed value of city real estate is over $8,000,000.

A bill for a public building at this place, with the same amount of expenditure which this report recommends, passed the House in the Fiftyeth Congress.

In view of the growing importance of this place, your committee are of the opinion that, as a matter of economy, the erection of a public building is warranted by the increasing importance of this growing city, situated as it is at the head of navigation on the Chattahoochee River, which flows to the Gulf of Mexico, and which has so large and increasing a wholesale and retail trade. The water-power here is known as the Coweta Falls, and is unsurpassed in the South. The Judiciary Committee have agreed at the present session to recommend the passage of a bill to require terms of the United States courts to be held here.

Wherefore your committee recommend that the bill do pass with the following amendments:

Amend by striking out the words "and fifty" in the tenth line of the first section of said bill and by also striking out the words "and fifty" in the first line of the second section of said bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The first question is upon agreeing to the amendments proposed by the committee.

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. MILLIKEN. I move to amend by striking out the second section.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MILLIKEN. I move that this bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

The motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. CANNON. It is now nearly 5 o'clock, on Saturday afternoon. It seems to me it is time for the committee to rise. [Cries of "Oh, no!"] I make the motion that the committee rise.

Mr. MILLIKEN. I hope that motion will not prevail.

The motion was rejected.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT DALLAS, TEX.

Mr. MILLIKEN. I now call up the bill (H. R. 848) to authorize the construction of an addition to the public building in Dallas, Tex.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to construct a wing or an addition to the public building in the city of Dallas, in the State of Texas, on the lot of land now belonging to the Government of the United States, and for this purpose the sum of $100,000 is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the same to be used in the construction of said wing or addition and providing necessary fire-proof vaults, heating and ventilating apparatus, elevators, etc. Said sum of $100,000 shall be immediately available.

The CHAIRMAN. By unanimous consent the bill will be regarded as before the Committee of the Whole for consideration and amendment.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think the report should be read.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana is recognized, and demands the reading of the report. It will be read in his time.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 848) for the construction of an addition to the public building in Dallas, Tex., beg leave to report:

The committee finds that the city of Dallas had in 1880 10,000 inhabitants. In 1885 its population had increased to 31,000. Its present population is about 65,000. The city is lighted by both gas and electricity. It has 13 miles of street railways operated by horse-power, 10 miles of rapid transit operated by steam, and 5 miles of railway operated by electricity.

It has eight national banks and four private banks. The active banking capital of the national banks is over $3,000,000. The Dallas clearing-house report for the year 1889 shows gross exchanges of over $45,000,000. Dallas has over $3,000,000 invested in factories of various kinds, which give employment to over 2,200 laborers.

It has eleven railroad outlets, which give it direct connection with all the cities north and east, and with all the cities of the Pacific Slope, the Gulf coast, and the city of Mexico.

On July 7, 1882, Congress passed an act authorizing the erection of a public building in said city, not to exceed in cost the sum of $75,000. Subsequent thereto two additional acts were passed, each allowing $25,000 more, making in the aggregate the sum of $125,000.

A building 55 by 85 feet was constructed, but not completed and made ready for use until the early part of 1889.

The growth of the city in population and business had been so rapid and extraordinary that the building when completed was found to be wholly inadequate to serve the purposes for which it was erected.

The circuit and district courts of the United States each hold two terms annually and are compelled to occupy the same court-room. The United States district attorney, marshal, clerk, and other officers and employees of the Government have their offices in said building.

The collector of internal revenue for the fourth collection district of Texas has his headquarters and principal offices in said building. In this service, in the fourth collection district, there are six deputy collectors, one clerk, one gauger, and four store-keepers. Of these thirteen persons four are permanently located in Dallas and have their offices in said building. The internal revenue collected for the year ending June 30, 1889, amounted to $84,093.43.

The first floor above the basement is used as a post-office, the floor area of which is wholly insufficient for the proper handling of the mail, as will more fully appear from the following statement of the business of said post-office:

There are employed in said office, clerks.....	16

Gross receipts.....	$79,404.21
Expenses.....	30,876.39
Net revenue.....	48,527.82

In view of the facts in this case the committee recommend the passage of the bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. I would be very glad if the gentleman representing the district in which Dallas is located would give the Committee of the Whole a statement as to the amounts heretofore appropriated, how that money has been expended, and when, so that there may be a better understanding as to the necessity for the appropriation of this additional $100,000; for the truth is, Mr. Chairman, that notwithstanding the efforts of the Chair to preserve order it is practically impossible to hear the reading of these reports.

Mr. ABBOTT. Mr. Chairman, I was authorized by the committee to offer an amendment striking out the word "one," in line 7 and inserting "two," but because of the fact that in other bills the appropriating clause has been stricken out I will also include a proposition of that kind in this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the amendment.

The Clerk read, as follows:

Amend by striking out all after the word "State," in line 7, and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "not to exceed in cost the sum of $200,000, including fireproof vaults, heating and ventilating apparatus, elevators, and approaches, etc.; and the Secretary of the Treasury may add another story on the old building if he deems it necessary for the public service."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to this amendment.

Mr. HOLMAN. Before the amendment is acted on I should be very glad if the gentleman representing that district would state the amount of the appropriations heretofore made, the character of the buildings erected, when erected, and how it happens that we are asked to increase this appropriation $200,000 over and above the amount recommended by the Committee on Appropriations and provided for in the original bill.

Mr. ABBOTT. Mr. Chairman, I will state to the gentleman from Indiana and to the committee that in 1882 there was an appropriation of $75,000 for this building; subsequently an act was passed making an additional appropriation of $25,000; and still later $25,000 more was appropriated, the total being $125,000. The work on this building began in the early part of 1883, but was not completed until some time last year. When the work was commenced the city of Dallas had a population of about 12,000. It has now grown to be a city of 65,000 inhabitants.

A MEMBER. Since when?

Mr. ABBOTT. Since 1883. Mr. Chairman, I have numerous letters from public officials whose offices are located in that building and who inform me that with an appropriation of $100,000 additional no sufficient accommodations can be provided there. There are now employed in the post-office there 16 clerks, besides 17 letter-carriers. The circuit and district courts of the United States are held in that building. The collector of internal revenue for the fourth collection district of Texas, with 13 employes, has his headquarters and principal offices there, and four or five of those officers are permanently located in this building.

In view of all these facts, in view of the fact that the officers residing there and having charge of the public business have informed me it is impossible with $100,000 to erect an addition to this building of sufficient capacity to enable them to carry on the public business, I went before the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds and asked their authority to offer this amendment in the House, and the committee very kindly agreed to the proposition.

Mr. LANHAM. Unanimously.

Mr. ABBOTT. Unanimously. I therefore trust the House will support the amendment.

Mr. HOLMAN. Now, if I understand my friend from Texas correctly, the present building has been erected since 1882 at a cost of $125,000. There is, of course, a court-room in addition to the post-office, and a portion of the other offices of the Federal Government are in that building now.

Mr. ABBOTT. I will state to the gentleman that the marshal and clerk of the United States court also reside in that city and have their offices in that building.

Mr. LANHAM. For the whole of the northern judicial district of Texas.

Mr. ABBOTT. Yes, sir.

Mr. HOLMAN. Now, I wish to ask for what purpose is this additional $200,000 to be expended. Is it for erecting an additional building?

Mr. ABBOTT. For an addition to the building and to elevate this building one story higher. I will say to my friend that if he could see the miserable structure erected there he would not hesitate a moment to assent to this appropriation of $200,000. This building was in process of construction from 1882 to 1889; and during that time by some means or other most of the appropriation which the Government allowed was squandered.

Mr. BLOUNT. What has been the increase in the postal receipts between 1883 and the present time?

Mr. ABBOTT. I have not the figures before me at the present moment, but I can get them in a little while. The present receipts are $779,000. In 1883 the gross receipts amounted to $30,000. If desired, I will get the facts and present them to the House. [Cries of "Vote!"] They are growing rapidly, as everybody knows, in this flourishing place.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask for a division on the amendment.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 104, noes 2.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MILLIKEN. I move that the bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

PUBLIC BUILDING, ATCHISON, KANS.

Mr. MILLIKEN. I now call up for consideration the bill (S. 2406) to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building thereon at Atchison, in the State of Kansas.

The Clerk proceeded with the reading of the bill.

Mr. MILLIKEN. I ask by unanimous consent that the formal portions of the bill be omitted in the reading.

Mr. HOLMAN. I shall not object to that, but shall insist on the reading of the report.

There was no objection, and the formal portions of the bill were omitted in the reading.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to acquire, by purchase, condemnation, or otherwise, a site, and cause to be erected thereon a suitable building, including fire-proof vaults, heating and ventilating apparatus, elevators, and approaches, for the use and accommodation of the United States post-office and other Government offices in the city of Atchison and State of Kansas, the cost of said site and building, including said vaults, heating and ventilating apparatus, elevators, and approaches, complete, not to exceed the sum of $100,000, which said sum of $100,000 is hereby appropriated for said purpose, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Proposals for the sale of land suitable for said site shall be invited by public advertisement in one or more of the newspapers of said city of largest circulation for at least twenty days prior to the date specified in said advertisement for the opening of said proposals.

Proposals made in response to said advertisement shall be addressed and mailed to the Secretary of the Treasury, who shall then cause the said proposed sites, and such others as he may think proper to designate, to be examined in person by an agent of the Treasury Department, who shall make written report to said Secretary thereon, and the reasons therefor, which shall be accompanied by the original proposals and all maps, plats, and statements which shall have come into his possession relating to the said proposed sites.

If, upon consideration of said report and accompanying papers, the Secretary of the Treasury shall deem further investigation necessary, he may appoint a commission of not more than three persons, one of whom shall be an officer of the Treasury Department, which commission shall also examine the said proposed sites, and such others as the Secretary of the Treasury may designate, and grant such hearings in relation thereto as they shall deem necessary; and said commission shall, within thirty days after such examination, make to the Secretary of the Treasury written report of their conclusion in the premises, accompanied by all statements, maps, plats, or documents taken by or submitted to them, in like manner as hereinbefore provided in regard to the proceedings of said agent of the Treasury Department; and the Secretary of the Treasury shall thereupon finally determine the location of the building to be erected.

The compensation of said commissioners shall be fixed by the Secretary of the Treasury, but the same shall not exceed $5 per day and actual traveling expenses: Provided, however, That the member of said commission appointed from the Treasury Department shall be paid only his actual traveling expenses.

So much of the appropriation herein made as may be necessary to defray the expenses of advertising for proposals, actual traveling expenses of said agent, and the compensation and actual traveling expenses of said commissioners, and other expenses incident to the selection of the site, and for necessary survey thereof, shall be immediately available.

So much of said appropriation as may be necessary for the preparation of sketch-plans, drawings, specifications, and detailed estimates for the building by the Supervising Architect of the Treasury Department shall be available immediately upon the approval by the Secretary of the Treasury of such site.

No money appropriated by this act shall be available, except as hereinbefore provided, until a valid title to the site for said building shall be vested in the United States, nor until the State of Kansas shall have ceded to the United States exclusive jurisdiction over the same, during the time the United States shall be or remain the owner thereof, for all purposes except the administration of the criminal laws of said State and the service of civil process therein.

After the said site shall have been paid for and the sketch-plans and detailed estimates for the building shall have been prepared by the Supervising Architect and approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, the Secretary of the Interior, and the Postmaster-General, the balance of said appropriation shall be available for the erection and completion of the building, including fire-proof vaults, heating and ventilating apparatus, elevators, and approaches.

The building shall be unexposed to danger from fire by an open space of at least 40 feet on each side, including streets and alleys.

Passed the Senate February 21, 1890.

Attest:

ANSON G. MCCOOK, Secretary.

Mr. HOLMAN. Let the report be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. KERR, of Iowa, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, submitted the following report, to accompany bill S. 2406:

The Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2406) to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building at Atchison, Kans., submit the following report:

A similar bill having been introduced in the House and reported by this committee at this session of Congress, the passage of this bill is recommended.

Mr. HOLMAN. There must be some other report; that does not give any information whatever.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the House report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. KERR, of Iowa, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, submitted the following report, to accompany bill H. R. 316.

The Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 316) providing for the erection of a public building at Atchison, Kans., having had the same under consideration, respectfully report:

The city of Atchison, in the State of Kansas, is located on the west bank of the Missouri River, at the western extremity of the grand detour on that river, making it undoubtedly the most natural and desirable "Gate City" for access from the East to the States of Kansas, Nebraska, Colorado, and the Territories of New Mexico and Arizona. It has a population of about 25,000. Within the last fifteen years it has more than trebled its population and business. It is the railroad center of the commercial metropolis of the State. It has eleven railroads, radiating in every direction, including two direct through lines to California, one direct to the city of Mexico, and two to Denver. Its railroad system embraces more than 30,000 miles; between seventy and eighty trains daily arrive and depart from its union depot.

It is the terminus of the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fé Railroad, the Central Branch of the Union Pacific Railway, the Atchison and Nebraska Railroad, the Missouri Pacific Railway, the Hannibal and St. Joseph Railroad, and the Chicago, Rock Island and Pacific Railway. Two other roads are under contract and in process of construction. It is the natural point of shipment for the supply of Eastern and Western markets. It has a very large wholesale trade in groceries, drugs, dry goods, glass and china ware, saddles and harness, notions, tobacco, cigars, coal, lumber, and grain, extending into five States and Territories, amounting in 1887 to $12,000,000.

The grain trade of the city is transacted in six elevators, and its increasing business may be seen by comparison of transactions for the years 1884, 1885, 1886, 1887, and 1888, the returns for 1889 not yet being made out.

Atchison handles more grain and lumber than any other point in the States of Kansas or Missouri west of St. Louis. Its manufactures are represented by iron foundries, furniture establishments, linseed-oil works, pottery, pressed brick, harness and saddles, and boots and shoes. It has seven banks, including four national. Two extensive pork-packing houses have been established immediately opposite on the east side of the river. A bridge crosses the Missouri at this point, costing over a million dollars. Gas and water works have been established, and many important enterprises are in course of construction. It is the general distributing point for all mails arriving and departing from all localities reached by its extensive system of railroads.

The business of its post-office is now transacted in a rented building, exposed to fire, without vaults or other accommodations for the distribution and protection of the mails. No private individual is justified in erecting such a building as is absolutely necessary for the transaction of the Government business at this point.

The Sixth Auditor makes the following statement of the business of the post-office for the year ended June 30, 1889:

Gross receipts.....	$33,501.19
Net revenue.....	17,243.93

The amount of money-orders paid and issued last year approximated $— There are fourteen employes in the post-office, and a large increase is required for the proper transaction of the business. A considerable portion of the wholesale stocks of merchandise in the city are imported direct without breaking bulk. Some pass through in bond, which necessitates the stationing of a weigher of customs at this point.

Atchison is also the location of the United States pension examining board, and the natural commercial center of a large collection district under the internal-revenue system.

The net proceeds of the post-office can with reasonable certainty be expected within the period of five years to pay the entire amount provided for in this bill.

In view of these facts your committee are of the opinion that a public building should be erected at Atchison, Kans., for the accommodation of the post-office and other offices of the Government now or hereafter to be located at said place, and they therefore unanimously recommend the passage of the bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. The amount named in this bill is $100,000. That would seem to be three times the amount of the annual revenues of the post-office. It would seem to come within the rule, I understand, which the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds has adopted, of appropriating three times the amount of the gross earnings of the postoffice. In view of that fact I see no objection to this bill. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. CANNON. The bill makes an appropriation.

Mr. MILLIKEN. I move to strike out the clause "making appropriation."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was then laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

PUBLIC BUILDING, ALEXANDRIA, LA.

Mr. MILLIKEN. I now call up the bill (H. R. 401) to provide for the construction of a public building at the city of Alexandria, State of Louisiana.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to purchase a site for, and cause to be erected, a suitable building, of brick or stone, with fire-proof vaults, for the accommodation of the post-office, United States courts, and other Government offices, at the city of Alexandria, State of Louisiana; and that for this purpose there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $100,000, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, who shall, upon the passage of this act, cause the proper plans and specifications to be made, so that no expenditure shall be made or authorized for the purchase of a site and the full completion of said building beyond the sum herein appropriated upon the plans to be previously approved by the Secretary of the Treasury: Provided, That no part of the money herein appropriated shall be expended until a valid title to the site of said building, which site shall leave the building unexposed to danger from fire in adjacent buildings by an open space of at least 30 feet, including streets and alleys, shall be vested in the United States.

The CHAIRMAN. The bill has been reported with two amendments, which will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by striking out, in line 10, "one hundred" and inserting in lieu thereof the word "fifty"; also, in line 21, strike out "thirty" and insert in lieu thereof "forty," so it will read:

"Forty feet, including streets and alleys."

Mr. BLANCHARD. The report is long, and I ask, in lieu of reading the report, that I shall be permitted to make a brief statement.

The CHAIRMAN. There has been no demand for the reading of the report.

Mr. BLANCHARD. It is a point in Louisiana where circuit and district courts are held and have been held for the last eleven years. It is one of the most important towns in the State. We have no large towns in Louisiana except New Orleans. The people belong to the farming, and not the manufacturing, class. A building is needed for the accommodation of the Federal courts there, where a large amount of business is done. The amount appropriated is only about $50,000. It should be $100,000. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. CANNON. I move to strike out the appropriating clause.

Mr. MILLIKEN. And in lieu of that I move to insert "not to exceed in cost the sum of $50,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. MILLIKEN, the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

PUBLIC BUILDING, HOULTON, ME.

Mr. MILLIKEN. I now call up the bill (H. R. 417) for the erection of a public building at Houlton, Me.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to purchase or otherwise procure a suitable site, and cause to be erected thereon, at the town of Houlton, in the State of Maine, a substantial and commodious public building, with fire-proof vaults, for the use and accommodation of the United States custom-house and post-office, and for other Government uses. The site, and the building thereon, when completed according to plans and specifications to be previously made and approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, shall not exceed the cost of $75,000; and for the purposes herein mentioned the sum of $75,000 is hereby appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury: Provided, That no part of said sum shall be expended until a valid title to the said site shall be vested in the United States, and the State of Maine shall cede to the United States exclusive jurisdiction over the same, during the time the United States shall be or remain the owner thereof, for all purposes except the administration of the criminal laws of said State and the service of any civil process therein, and the site purchased shall leave the building unexposed to danger from fire by an open space of at least 40 feet, including streets and alleys: Provided further, That no site shall be purchased until estimates for the erection of a building which will furnish sufficient accommodations for the transaction of the public business, and which shall not exceed in cost the balance of the sum herein limited after the site shall have been purchased and paid for, shall have been approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, and no purchase of site, nor plan for said building, shall be approved by the Secretary of the Treasury involving an expenditure exceeding the said sum of $75,000 for site and building.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend the bill by striking out of the appropriating clause all after the word "dollars," in line 13, down to the word "provided," in line 17.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I trust that action will not be taken.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, this bill will be regarded as open to amendment and debate under the five-minute rule.

Mr. HOLMAN. Before that is done, Mr. Chairman, I request the reading of the report.

The CHAIRMAN. It will be read in the time of the gentleman from Indiana.

The report (by Mr. MILLIKEN) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred the bill to provide for the erection of a public building at the town of Houlton, Me., submit the following report:

The committee finds that the customs collection district of Aroostook Me., comprises an immense area of territory of 6,800 square miles on the northeastern boundary of the United States, lying adjacent to the province of New Brunswick, and that its officers are intrusted with the guarding of a frontier line of more than 250 miles in extent, with headquarters at Houlton, the shire town of the county, situated at the terminus of the branch of the New Brunswick Railway, with stations at Fort Fairfield, Van Buren, etc.

The custom-house and post-office are now both located in a wooden building in Houlton, rented by the Government from private owners, and the accommodations are inadequate and insecure for the protection of the records and other property against fire.

The Aroostook customs district proves to be the only customs district in Maine in which the custom-house is situated in a rented structure, the Government having provided a public building in every other district. Aroostook is by far the most rapidly growing county in the State in population and production, and its rapidly increasing business with the adjacent province of New Brunswick renders it an important district in our revenue system. The rapidity of the growth of the section may be gathered from the following facts:

In 1870 the district contained 29,453 inhabitants; in 1880, 41,393, an increase in ten years of 11,940, or over 40 per cent. increase in population to 1880, and the total now probably exceeds 50,000 people.

The receipts of customs show a much greater ratio of increase, and the aggregates for eight years are shown by the official records to be as follows:

Amount of receipts from June 30, 1879, to June 30, 1887	$203,802.15
Amount of expenditures from June 30, 1879, to June 30, 1887	73,169.08

Net receipts above expenditures for eight years	130,633.07
Amount of receipts year ending June 30, 1878	8,438.18
Amount of receipts year ending June 30, 1888	45,286.68

The shire town, Houlton, is the natural center of business for that entire section of country, comprising a thickly settled frontier of over 250 miles, and is rapidly increasing in population and business, the inhabitants being now estimated at 6,000. Within a few years numerous industries have been established there, many buildings have been constructed, and systems of water-works and electric lighting have been introduced. It is believed that the post-office is now used by 12,000 people in Houlton and the adjoining towns.

Two branches of the New Brunswick Railway enter the district from Canada, one at Houlton and the other at Fort Fairfield, the latter extending into the district 29 miles to Presque Isle. The main line of the New Brunswick Railway extends along the northern boundary a distance of 40 miles, with several trains each way daily, carrying freight into the United States or for transit through Canada between Houlton, Fort Fairfield, and Vanceborough, all of which have to be inspected, manifested, etc.

During the past year a new line of railway has been surveyed and work is expected to commence in the spring of 1890 on a line that will bring Houlton nearly 100 miles nearer the Boston market. The opening of this road will undoubtedly add great impetus to the growth of the district in population and business. The county is as large as Massachusetts, containing the finest farming and timber lands in the State, and it is filling with immigration from Canada and other places. From the geographical position Houlton is a most important point on our frontier revenue service, and must constantly become more so. The need of suitable and permanent accommodations for the custom-house and post-office is strongly urged and apparent.

A similar bill was favorably reported by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds in the Forty-eighth and Forty-ninth and Fiftieth Congresses, and passed by the Senate, but failed of passage in the House through not being reached on the Calendar.

Your committee therefore recommend that the bill do pass with the following amendment, namely: Strike out, in line 12, the words "seventy-five" and insert in lieu thereof the word "fifty."

The amendment of the committee was adopted.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I hope the motion to strike out the appropriation will not prevail.

Mr. SCRANTON. I would like to ask what is the population of this town? I understand it has 6,000 inhabitants.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maine having charge of the bill can probably answer the question.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I will inform the gentleman that the population of this town is 6,000. It is in Aroostook County, which is the most rapidly growing county in the State of Maine. It is the headquarters of a collection district that guards 250 miles of our revenue frontier, where large revenues are collected.

This bill has been reported several times favorably. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"] It passed the Senate. I want to have a vote on the appropriation clause. I will say to gentlemen who are calling for a vote I want the money to put the building up. I want to know whether the House will give it or not. I will take up no time, as gentlemen seem anxious to reach a vote. But I desire to have a separate vote on the motion to strike out the appropriating clause.

Mr. BYNUM. Mr. Chairman, before the question is put I desire to call the attention of the committee to the provisions of this bill. It is, it appears to me, an extraordinary measure. We are progressing pretty rapidly when we begin to construct buildings in towns of not more than 6,000 inhabitants, where nothing but a post-office and collection district are located.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Will my friend allow me a moment?

Mr. BYNUM. Presently. This report is somewhat remarkable for what it contains, but more remarkable for what it does not contain. It contains a statement of the area of the collection district, and, to make a showing of the amount of customs, the gross receipts for eight years is given, the total amount being $203,802.15. That is the substance of the report.

Mr. Chairman, there are many customs districts and offices in various parts of the country the receipts of which amount to over a hundred thousand dollars annually that are scarcely known as existing.

For instance, the city of Indianapolis is a port of delivery, and the gross receipts at that office are over $140,000 per annum. Here is a port where the receipts amount to only about $25,000 and it is proposed to expend a large sum of money for the erection of public buildings in order to provide the collector and postmaster with offices.

Now, I want to know why the Government needs a customs office to collect that amount of revenue? Why, Mr. Chairman, the collection of the revenue by the customs officers of a dozen invoices or shipments would bring in that amount of revenue, and the room that is needed for that purpose is simply a place for a desk. One man, at most not over two, will perform all the labor required in less than thirty minutes each day.

A warehouse will have to be rented, even if this building is constructed. The gentleman from Maine [Mr. BOUTELLE] says that this district contains 250 miles of coast to be guarded. Is that the necessity for this building? Would this line of coast be better guarded by the erection of this building?

Mr. BOUTELLE. It is not on the coast. The geographical information of the gentleman is as much at fault as his statistics.

Mr. BYNUM. I think, Mr. Chairman, that before we undertake to construct buildings at such points as this we ought to pay attention to the requirements of more important towns. The bill pending now for the construction of a building at South Bend, Ind., containing a population of over 20,000, where are situated the great Oliver Plow Works, the Studebaker Wagon Works, and where there is more mail received in one week than at Houlton, Me., in a month—

A MEMBER. Well, there will be a building there soon.

Mr. BYNUM. It is a long time getting on the Calendar. There are other cities in that State, cities with 15,000 and 20,000 inhabitants, not asking for public buildings. I might call your attention to the city of Anderson, to the city of Shelbyville, in my own district. Richmond, one of the finest cities in the country, with over 20,000 population, has no public building. I could cite a dozen places in Indiana alone where buildings are needed more than they are at this place, and if Congress is going to establish the precedent of erecting buildings for towns containing 5,000 or 6,000 inhabitants—and that is the estimate of the population given in this report, and we all know how inflated these estimates of population are—let us do it with our eyes open.

To keep up buildings at such places will cost the Government more than the gross revenues of the office. We ought, however, to first supply those places which, by reason of their population and business, will at least pay the cost of maintenance. As a matter of fact, the census of 1880 shows that the population of Houlton was less than 5,000 in 1880. Certainly, if a building is to be constructed at this place $10,000 would be ample.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Indiana makes the direct appeal to me for information. Now, I can answer the gentleman's question, but I am requested by gentlemen around me not to take up the time of the committee in answering what are entirely irrelevant and factions remarks, and I will not detain the committee from acting upon other bills.

Mr. CANNON. What is the pending question?

The CHAIRMAN. The pending question is on the motion of the gentleman from Maine to strike out the appropriating clause.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I trust it will not be done.

The question was taken; and the amendment of Mr. MILLIKEN was agreed to.

Mr. HILL. I rise to inquire what the limit is upon the appropriation for this public building?

Mr. LEHLBACH. Fifty thousand dollars.

Mr. HILL. I understand that this site or town has a population not exceeding 6,000 people. Now, sir, I would like to know of this House—

The CHAIRMAN. There is nothing pending before the committee.

Mr. LODGE. The motion to strike out the amount has been agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman can make a formal amendment if he chooses.

Mr. HILL. I move to strike out the last word. I would like to ask if this House is prepared to adopt a precedent of that kind. I have, Mr. Chairman, in my district more than a dozen cities larger than that, where there is no public building whatever erected at the expense of the United States Government. I come from a town of over 30,000 inhabitants with no public building, no post-office, no building erected at the expense of the United States; and I could cite here, not merely from my own Congressional district, but from other portions of the State of Illinois, other places nearly as large as the city of Joliet, from which I come, where there are no public buildings; and I say, Mr. Chairman, that this is a very bad precedent to set.

Mr. PERKINS. It is a good precedent.

Mr. HILL. And what I ask is whether this—

Mr. BOUTELLE. I would like to know what the gentleman refers to as a bad precedent. Why does he single out this bill as if it were the only place a public building has been erected where the population is so small as 6,000.

Mr. Chairman, I have not desired to take up a moment of the time of the committee, but in justification of my measure and myself it is due to me to say that there have been repeated and numerous instances where very much larger appropriations have been made for public buildings in places where the population was very much smaller; for public buildings for post-offices and court-houses where there is no revenue at all whatever. This is an appropriation for the erection of a custom-house where the revenues of the Government are to-day, and have constantly been, increasing.

It is the principal place in the State of Maine upon the border of Canada, and is the custom-house for a frontier 250 miles in extent. It has grown more rapidly than any other portion of Maine, and it is a place where the receipts of the custom-house will pay for this building within two years.

Mr. HILL. I would like to ask the gentleman to state where public buildings of this sort have been erected in places where the population is no greater than that at this place.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I have a list of them here, giving the place, the year in which the appropriation was made, the character of building, the amount of the appropriation, and the population of the town or city.

Table showing population, appropriation, character of building, etc.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate on the pro forma amendment is exhausted, and it will be considered as withdrawn.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I was content to hold my peace about this matter, supposing it would do no good to say anything; but we should face the facts, as the gentleman has undertaken to speak about the matter. And I say, so far as I know, that at no place where Federal courts are not held can an instance be found where public buildings have been authorized with so small a population as this place.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Precisely; because there are always so many lawyers in the House that they are always ready to vote for the erection of court-houses, which bring no revenue to the Government, while the net revenues at this place would pay for the erection of the building within two years. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. CANNON. No, we will not vote for a minute. I know of no place where the Federal courts are not held with so small a population and so little use for a building as this where there has been one authorized. Now, the gentleman says that this is the head of a customs district. Here is the report of the receipts. The receipts from June 30, 1879, to June 30, 1887 (that is, ten years), have been $203,000; that is all.

Mr. BOUTELLE. That is all that is stated. The gentleman would not want me to state what is not the fact, on the Illinois plan. [Laughter.]

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I want to state—

Mr. BOUTELLE. I want to say to the gentleman that these are not Illinois figures. They are State of Maine figures, and they are correct. There is not 1 per cent of brag in them.

Mr. CANNON. Now, then, I want to say further that in the last census, taking up Spofford's Almanac here and looking at this place, I find they had 4,000; 4,000 is given as the population of the city of Houlton. Is not that the fact? I want to state further that I hold in my hand or have it lying on my desk the Sixth Auditor's report of the postal receipts of 1889, and for this city of Houlton they were $4,600 and no more.

Now, then, these are the facts. I was content, as I could not apparently help myself, as I had talked considerably during these two days [Cries of "Oh, no!"], to hold my peace about this matter; but when the gentleman jumps up and insists that this is the "center of the earth" [laughter] and tries to sit down on all the Illinois people I must protest.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT LYNN, MASS.

Mr. MILLIKEN. I now call up the bill (H. R. 448) for the erection of a public building at Lynn, Mass.

Mr. HOLMAN. It is getting late on Saturday evening, and I hope that the gentleman from Maine will move that the committee rise.

Mr. MILLIKEN. After this, I will.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to purchase, or otherwise provide, a site, and cause to be erected thereon a substantial and commodious building, with fire-proof vaults, for the use and accommodation of the post-office, and for other Government uses, at Lynn, Mass. The site, and building thereon, when completed upon plans and specifications to be previously made and approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, shall not exceed in cost the sum of $200,000; nor shall any site be purchased until estimates for the erection of a building, which will furnish sufficient accommodations for the transaction of the public business and which shall not exceed in cost the balance of the sum herein limited after the site shall have been purchased and paid for, shall have been approved by the Secretary of the Treasury; and no purchase of site nor plan for said building shall be approved by the Secretary of the Treasury involving an expenditure exceeding the said sum of $200,000 for site and building; and the site purchased shall leave the building unexposed to danger from fire by an open space of at least 40 feet, including streets and alleys: Provided, That no part of said sum shall be expended until a valid title to the said site shall be vested in the United States, nor until the State of Massachusetts shall cede to the United States exclusive jurisdiction over the same, during the time the United States shall be or remain the owner thereof, for all purposes except the administration of the criminal laws of said State and the service of civil process therein.

Mr. GEAR (during the reading). I move to dispense with the further reading of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent to dispense with the further reading of the bill. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope that the report will be read.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. Chairman, I think I can save the reading of the report if the gentleman will allow me to make a statement in a few words.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope the report will be read.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana demands the reading of the report, and it will be read in his time.

The report was read, as follows:

The Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 448) for the erection of a public building at Lynn, Mass., have had the same under consideration, and respectfully submit the following report:

In the Fiftyeth Congress the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds reported favorably a bill authorizing the erection of a public building at Lynn, Mass. The consideration of this bill was not reached in the House. The following is an extract from the report made in the Fiftyeth Congress:

"The city of Lynn is on the sea-coast, 9 miles east of Boston. It is the largest center in the world for the manufacture of ladies' boots and shoes, in the transaction of which it has 600 manufactories, employing 10,500 workmen, with a capital of $13,000,000. The annual sales are $35,000,000.

"The population in 1860 was 19,083; the population in 1880 was 38,284; the population for 1885 was 45,864.

"The official records for 1882-'83 show that 796 factories and dwellings were erected. The municipal receipts for 1883 were $522,000.

"Two hundred and forty-seven tons of freight arrived by rail daily, requiring 67 freight cars in the handling, and this amount is rapidly increasing.

"Five hundred and thirty-nine vessels arrived at the port, which is a branch customs district, 39 of which were foreign (British provinces), from which the deputy United States collector received $2,670.38.

"If a public building is erected in Lynn, a suitable and convenient office for the transaction of public business will be provided in it for the deputy collector.

"Seventy-seven trains of passenger cars arrive daily from Boston and the East. It has horse-railroad service with the cities of Boston, Chelsea, and Salem and the adjoining towns of Peabody, Saugus, and Swampscott; the last two, with Nahant and Lynnfield, are almost to be considered parts of Lynn, and have a population of 10,000.

"The post-office is of the first class; it is located in a building, with a theater above, never intended for such purpose, in the business center, in the midst of large blocks furnished with power and heat from engines and boilers located on the premises; there is constant danger from fire. The rent is $1,800."

The present population of Lynn is estimated at 50,000. The gross postal receipts are over $60,000. A large portion of the business part of the town has recently been destroyed by fire, and your committee is of the opinion that it would be sound public policy to act promptly in the consideration of this bill.

We recommend that the bill do pass with the following amendment: In line 13 strike out the words "two hundred" and insert in lieu thereof the words "one hundred and twenty-five," and also in line 29 strike out the words "two hundred" and insert in lieu thereof the words "one hundred and twenty-five."

Mr. MILLIKEN. I move that the amendment of the committee be adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. By unanimous consent, the bill will be regarded as before the committee for consideration and amendment. The question is upon agreeing to the amendments of the committee.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

PUBLIC BUILDING, SPRINGFIELD, MO.

Mr. MILLIKEN. I now call up the bill (H. R. 516) to extend the limits for the erection of a public building at Springfield, Mo.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Ohio. I move that the committee do now rise. The Clerk proceeded to read the bill.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a point of order. The confusion is so great that it is impossible to hear what is going on at the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will suspend the reading until the committee comes to order.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Ohio. I withdraw the motion that the committee rise.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the bill.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I understood the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WILLIAMS] to move that the committee rise.

The CHAIRMAN. A bill has been called up by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. MILLIKEN] and is being read.

The Clerk completed the reading of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection this bill will be regarded as under consideration for amendment.

Mr. HOLMAN. I will ask the gentleman who introduced this bill to state what is the extent of population and what are the public purposes demanding the erection of a public building in the city named.

Mr. WADE. I will state to the gentleman that the population of Springfield, Mo., is 28,000 and there is a United States court there. I would like to have the Clerk read, for the benefit of the gentleman and the committee, the letter which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, D. C., April 20, 1888.

SIR: I am in receipt of a communication of the 19th instant from the clerk of your committee asking why this Department transmitted an estimate for the public building at Springfield, Mo., amounting to $145,000, in view of the fact that the law approved limited its cost to $100,000.

In reply I have the honor to state that when this bill was referred to the Department for examination and report it was the understanding that the views of this Department were desired in regard to whether the latter amount would be sufficient to construct a building adequate for the needs of the Government at that point.

According to reports received from the postmaster and other Government officials to be located in the proposed building and from the postmaster's estimate of the cost of a suitable site it was found (from an approximate estimate) that there would be required about $145,000.

I have the honor to further state that no drawings nor detail estimate have yet been made for this building. The bill for its erection does not carry with it an appropriation. When an amount is appropriated plans and estimates will be made in accordance with the limit fixed.

In this connection I beg to call your attention to the fact that this plan was adopted in the report regarding the proposed public building at Lowell, Mass., the bill limiting the cost of said building naming $200,000 for same, and Department letter of the 17th instant to you stating that $100,000 would be sufficient.

Respectfully yours,

HUGH S. THOMPSON, Acting Secretary.

Hon. SAMUEL J. RANDALL,
Chairman Committee on Appropriations, House of Representatives.

Mr. MILLIKEN. I move that the appropriation clause in the bill be struck out, and that, in lieu thereof, there be inserted a provision "that the limit be increased $50,000."

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. While the gentleman is reducing his amendment to writing can not we have the report read?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky is entitled to have the report read in his time if he demands it.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. The letter which has been read, as I understood it, only shows that no plans or specifications have been made for the building, and suggests that probably a larger building might be better upon the site selected.

Mr. WADE. No, sir.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. There is no reason given for the increase of the limit above that already fixed, but probably my friend, the farmer from that district [Mr. WADE], was so seductive as to induce the Supervising Architect to recommend the increase. [Laughter.] Therefore I call for the reading of the report to see what information can be obtained from that.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BRECKIN-

RIDGE] calls for the reading of the report, and it will be read in his time.

The report was read, as follows:

The Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 516) for the increase of the limit of cost for the erection of a public building at Springfield, Mo., have had same under consideration and report:

At the first session Fiftieth Congress an appropriation of $100,000 was made for the erection of a public building at Springfield, Mo. At second session of same Congress a letter was addressed Mr. Freret, the then Supervising Architect of the Treasury, relative to the needs of the public service at Springfield.

In reply Mr. Freret stated the amount of floor space needed, and further stated that the amount of money appropriated was not sufficient to erect a public building to meet the wants of the Government, and suggested that an additional appropriation of $45,000 be made.

A bill was introduced increasing the limit of cost $45,000. This bill was reported favorably to the House by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds and its passage recommended, but failed to pass by reason of not being reached on the Calendar.

The committee has given careful consideration to this bill and diligently inquired into the needs of the public service at Springfield, Mo., and recommend that the words "seventy-five," in line 7, be stricken out and the word "fifty" substituted, and the bill as so amended do pass.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, that report gives no other reason why the limit should be increased except what is stated in the letter, and the letter gives no reason. There is nothing to show that the public business requires the increase, nothing to show the volume of public business, nothing to show the amount of rent that the Government is now paying, so as to tell us what will be the annual loss by the erection of this building. There will be an annual loss, I suppose, for I take it for granted that the rent we now pay is nothing like equal to 3, or 4, or 5, or 6 per cent. interest upon the $100,000 which it is proposed to invest in this building.

Mr. WADE. The gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. The gentleman says that I am mistaken. I am glad to hear it, because generally we do lose by our public buildings, and I am glad to know that there is a case where we shall make by a public building. The point I want to submit to the committee is that we are doing this thing constantly, first making a limit and then, without any good reason, increasing that limit, and I do not think it is good policy.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. MILLIKEN].

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. MILLIKEN. I move that the committee do now rise.

Mr. CHEADLE. Pending that motion, I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill (S. 606) to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building thereon at La Fayette, Ind.

There was no objection.

The bill was read, as follows:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to acquire, by purchase, condemnation, or otherwise, a site, and cause to be erected thereon a suitable building, including fire-proof vaults, heating and ventilating apparatus, elevators, and approaches, for the use and accommodation of the United States post-office and other Government offices in the city of La Fayette and State of Indiana, the cost of said site and building, including said vaults, heating and ventilating apparatus, elevators, and approaches complete, not to exceed the sum of $100,000, which said sum of $100,000 is hereby appropriated for said purpose, out of any moneys in the United States Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Proposals for the sale of land suitable for said site shall be invited by public advertisement in one or more of the newspapers of said city of largest circulation for at least twenty days prior to the date specified in said advertisement for the opening of said proposals.

Proposals made in response to said advertisement shall be addressed and mailed to the Secretary of the Treasury, who shall then cause the said proposed sites, and such others as he may think proper to designate, to be examined in person by an agent of the Treasury Department, who shall make written report to said Secretary of the results of said examination, and of his recommendation thereon, and the reasons therefor, which shall be accompanied by the original proposals and all maps, plats, and statements which shall have come into his possession relating to the said proposed sites.

If, upon consideration of said report and accompanying papers, the Secretary of the Treasury shall deem further investigation necessary, he may appoint a commission of not more than three persons, one of whom shall be an officer of the Treasury Department, which commission shall also examine the said proposed sites, and such others as the Secretary of the Treasury may designate, and grant such hearings in relation thereto as they shall deem necessary; and said commission shall, within thirty days after such examination, make to the Secretary of the Treasury written report of their conclusion in the premises, accompanied by all statements, maps, plats, or documents taken by or submitted to them, in like manner as hereinbefore provided in regard to the proceedings of said agent of the Treasury Department; and the Secretary of the Treasury shall thereupon finally determine the location of the building to be erected.

The compensation of said commissioners shall be fixed by the Secretary of the Treasury, but the same shall not exceed $6 per day and actual traveling expenses: Provided, however, That the member of said commission appointed from the Treasury Department shall be paid only his actual traveling expenses.

So much of the appropriation herein made as may be necessary to defray the expenses of advertising for proposals, actual traveling expenses of said agent, and the compensation and actual traveling expenses of said commissioners, and other expenses incident to the selection of a site, and for necessary survey thereof shall be immediately available.

So much of said appropriation as may be necessary for the preparation of sketch-plans, drawings, specifications, and detailed estimates for the building by the Supervising Architect of the Treasury Department shall be available immediately upon the approval by the Secretary of the Treasury of such site.

No money appropriated by this act shall be available, except as hereinbefore provided, until a valid title to the site for said building shall be vested in the United States, nor until the State of Indiana shall have ceded to the United States exclusive jurisdiction over the same, during the time the United States shall be or remain the owner thereof, for all purposes except the administration of the criminal laws of said State and the service of civil process therein.

After the said site shall have been paid for and the sketch-plans and detailed estimates for the building shall have been prepared by the Supervising Architect and approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, the Secretary of the Interior, and the Postmaster-General, the balance of said appropriation shall be available for the erection and completion of the building, including fire-proof vaults, heating and ventilating apparatus, elevators, and approaches.

The building shall be unexposed to danger from fire by an open space of at least 40 feet on each side, including streets and alleys.

The following amendment, reported by the committee, was read:

Strike out "$100,000" wherever it occurs in the bill and insert the words "eighty thousand dollars."

The CHAIRMAN. By unanimous consent, this bill will be regarded as before the committee for consideration and amendment. The first question is on the amendment proposed by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Does this bill carry an appropriation?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is advised that it does.

Mr. CHEADLE. I move to amend by striking out the appropriating clause.

The amendment of Mr. CHEADLE was agreed to.

Mr. CHEADLE. I move that the bill as amended be laid aside to be reported to the House with a recommendation that it pass.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Before that is done I wish to ask the gentleman whether there is any United States court at La Fayette?

Mr. CHEADLE. No, sir.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. What is the rent now paid for the post-office there?

Mr. CHEADLE. Eleven hundred dollars. The lease of the building will expire in about a year, and it will be impossible to renew it.

I will state for the benefit of the committee that in the Forty-ninth Congress a bill similar to this passed both Houses, but was vetoed; it was passed by the Senate over the veto, and in this House it had the right of way on the last night of the Congress. It was used for the purpose of obstructing legislation while the House was waiting for conference reports to come in, and it died while in that position.

A MEMBER. What is the population of La Fayette?

Mr. CHEADLE. Twenty-five thousand; and there are 30,000 people who get their mail at that place.

Mr. POST. The postal receipts were nearly $29,000 for the last year.

Mr. CHEADLE. The court-house there cost $402,000 and there are $233,000 worth of city school buildings. Adjoining the city is the Purdue University, the Agricultural College of the State of Indiana, with buildings which cost $300,000, including the finest chemical laboratory in the West. The taxable property of the city amounts to $10,000,000 and of the county to $20,000,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CHEADLE] that this bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

The motion was agreed to.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT BATON ROUGE, LA.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Now, Mr. Chairman, as one request for unanimous consent has been granted to the other side of the House, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 386) to construct a public building at Baton Rouge, La. That is a city at which there are courts, a post-office, and everything of that kind.

The Clerk proceeded to read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to purchase, acquire by condemnation, or otherwise provide a site, and cause to be erected thereon a suitable, commodious, and substantial building, including fire-proof vaults, heating and ventilating apparatus, elevators, and approaches, for the use and accommodation of the United States courts, post-office, and internal-revenue office, and other Government offices, in the city of Baton Rouge and State of Louisiana, the cost of the site and the building, including fire-proof vaults, heating and ventilating apparatus, elevators, and approaches, complete, not to exceed the sum of $150,000, which said sum of $150,000 be, and is hereby, appropriated for said purpose, out of any moneys in the United States Treasury not otherwise appropriated, upon the following provisions:

Proposals for the sale of land suitable for said site shall be invited by public advertisement in one or more of the newspapers of said city for at least fourteen days prior to the date specified in the advertisement for opening the proposals. The proposals made in response to said public advertisement, at the time named in the advertisement, or within ten days subsequent thereto, shall be received, opened, and considered by a commission of three persons, who shall be appointed by the Secretary of the Treasury, and it shall be the duty of said commissioners to forward to the Secretary of the Treasury, within forty days from the date named in the advertisement for opening the proposals, a written report, with the original proposals, maps, etc., and the oaths prescribed by act of Congress approved June 23, 1874, and to definitely state in said report the site selected by them, and their selection of the site shall be final, and each commissioner shall be allowed a compensation for his services of an amount within the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury, said compensation not to exceed $200 and actual traveling expenses to each commissioner.

So much of the appropriation herein made as may be necessary to defray the expenses of advertising for proposals, compensation and actual traveling expenses of the commissioners, and other expenses incident to the selection of the site shall be immediately available.

So much of said appropriation as may be necessary for the preparation of sketch-plans, drawings, specifications, and detailed estimates for the building by the Supervising Architect of the Treasury Department shall be available immediately upon the receipt of the report of the commissioners selecting the site.

So much of said appropriation as may be necessary to make payment for the site shall be available upon the receipt of the written opinion of the Attorney-General in favor of the validity of title to the site selected, and when the State of Louisiana shall have ceded to the United States jurisdiction over the site selected, during the time that the United States shall be or remain the owner thereof, for all purposes except the administration of the criminal laws of said State and the service of civil process therein, or so much of said appropriation as may be necessary to acquire title to the site by condemnation shall be immediately available; and, after the site shall have been paid for and the sketch-plans and detailed estimates for the building shall have been prepared by the Supervising Architect, and approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, the Secretary of the Interior, and the Postmaster-General, the balance of said appropriation shall be available for the erection and completion of the building, including fire-proof vaults, heating and ventilating apparatus, elevators, and approaches.

The building shall be unexposed to danger from fire by an open space of at least 40 feet on each side, including streets and alleys.

Before the reading of the bill was concluded the further reading was, by unanimous consent, dispensed with.

There being no objection, the Committee of the Whole proceeded to the consideration of the bill.

The following amendment, reported by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, was read:

In lines 14 and 15 of section 1, strike out the words "and fifty," so as to make the sum $100,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LEHLBACH. I move to amend this bill by striking out the appropriating clause, as has been done with other bills.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ROBERTSON. I move that the bill as amended be laid aside to be favorably reported to the House.

The motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. GEAR. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 954) authorizing the construction of a public building at Burlington, Iowa. I hope there will be no objection.

Mr. HOLMAN. The gentleman from Maine [Mr. MILLIKEN] stated awhile ago, prior to the passage of the last three measures, that he would move that the committee rise. It is now 6 o'clock.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GEAR] has been recognized to make a request for unanimous consent.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope that the proposition of the gentleman from Maine [Mr. MILLIKEN] will be carried out in good faith.

Mr. BAYNE. I do not like to object to the request of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GEAR], but I think these bills should come up in their regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. Business should be proceeded with in order. The Chair desires to state the request of the gentleman from Iowa. Opportunity will be given to object if any gentleman desires to do so. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill the title of which will be read.

Mr. HOLMAN. I desire to be recognized before that title is read. One gentleman on each side of the House has been recognized upon a request for unanimous consent. Now, if the proposition of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GEAR] comes in, of course there must be another recognition on this side. I therefore insist that the gentleman from Maine shall move—

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will proceed to read unless some motion be interposed.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move, then, that the committee rise.

Mr. GEAR. I hope the gentleman will withdraw that motion.

Several MEMBERS. Let us vote it down.

The CHAIRMAN proceeded to put the question on the motion of Mr. HOLMAN that the committee rise.

Before the result of the vote was announced,

Mr. HOLMAN said: The two sides of the House have now received equal treatment in respect to requests for unanimous consent, and I therefore call for the regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. The regular order is the announcement of the vote upon the motion of the gentleman that the committee rise. On this question the ayes are 21, the noes 75. The committee refuses to rise.

[Cries of "Regular order!"]

PUBLIC BUILDING AT FREMONT, NEBR.

Mr. MILLIKEN. I now call up the bill (H. R. 533) for the erection of a public building at Fremont, Nebr.

[Cries of "Regular order!"]

The CHAIRMAN. The regular order is proceeding. The gentleman from Maine has been recognized.

Mr. CANNON. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. Awhile ago I understood the gentleman from Maine to say that he would himself move that the committee rise.

Mr. MILLIKEN. I have done so, and the committee refuses to rise.

Mr. CANNON. The gentleman from Maine made a motion which was not put. Was it not proper his motion should be put?

Mr. MILLIKEN. The motion was put and voted down.

Mr. CANNON. The motion of the gentleman from Maine was not voted down.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Well, the committee voted upon the same proposition.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is advised by the Clerk that the gentleman from Maine moved that the committee rise, and pending that motion certain requests for unanimous consent were made and granted. Subsequently the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] moved that the committee rise, and the committee, by a vote of 21 to 75, refused to rise. The committee having thus declined to rise, the Chair supposes that may be regarded as substantially a vote upon the motion of the gentleman from Maine.

Mr. MILLIKEN. I call up House bill 533, for the erection of a public building at Fremont, Nebr.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to purchase, secure by condemnation, or otherwise acquire a proper site for and cause to be constructed, at Fremont, Nebr., a suitable building for the use and accommodation of the post-office and other Government offices, at a cost not exceeding $60,000, which sum is hereby appropriated therefor, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, who shall cause plans and estimates to be made so that no expenditure shall be made or authorized for a full completion of said building beyond the sum hereby appropriated; and the said building herein provided for shall be at least 50 feet removed from any other building: Provided, That no money be used or applied for the purposes mentioned until a valid title for the site shall be vested in the United States, nor until the State of Nebraska shall cede to the General Government of the United States jurisdiction over the property and exempt the same from taxation.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask the report be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. KERR, of Iowa, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, submitted the following report, to accompany bill H. R. 533:

Fremont is on the Platte River, and is the county seat of Dodge County, Nebraska. It has a population of 15,000, and is rapidly increasing in population, wealth, and importance. The volume of business transacted by the post-office, banks, wholesale houses, and manufacturing establishments, and the shipments on the different lines of railroad show that Fremont is of great commercial importance, and second to no other point in the State, excepting Omaha.

The railroads entering Fremont are the Union Pacific, the Sioux City and Pacific, and the Fremont, Elkhorn and Missouri Valley, with its numerous branches, two of which run northwest, three to the southwest, and one east to Omaha, the city being the headquarters of this great system of railroads, which has at Fremont a supply depot, a round-house, general offices, and will in the near future have extensive machine-shops, which will give employment to a large number of men. The city has several miles of street-railroad in operation, a complete system of water-works, several miles of streets paved, and is lighted by both electricity and gas.

Twenty-nine passenger trains arrive and depart daily, all of which carry mails, thus rendering Fremont a very important distributing point for this service. It has a large system of stock-yards connected with the different systems of railroads by 3 miles of track, a large pork-packing plant, and numerous manufacturing establishments.

The wholesale trade of Fremont for 1889 amounted to nearly $10,000,000 and the manufacturing industries to over $2,000,000. The gross receipts of the post-office for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1889, were $15,016.94 and the net receipts were $9,108.24. A bill to erect a public building in Fremont was favorably reported to the Forty-ninth and Fiftieth Congresses.

Your committee recommend that the bill be amended by striking out "one hundred thousand," in the eighth line, and inserting "sixty thousand," and that as thus amended the bill pass.

The amendment reported by the committee was agreed to.

Mr. LEHLBACH. I move that the appropriating clause of the bill be stricken out.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MILLIKEN. I move that the bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask for a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 82, noes none.

Mr. CANNON. We ought to have one hundred people here to transact business.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule, the Chair will count the committee. [After a pause.] There are one hundred and two members and a quorum is present.

So the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. MILLIKEN. I move that the committee rise.

Mr. GEAR. I had the floor, and there was no objection, for the purpose of calling up my bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is hardly accurate, as the regular order was the motion that the committee rise. The Chair will submit the request for unanimous consent on the part of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GEAR]. Is there objection?

Mr. BYNUM. I demand the regular order.

The question recurred on Mr. MILLIKEN's motion that the committee rise; and it was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having taken the chair, Mr. PAYSON reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union had had under consideration the special order and had directed him to report back sundry bills with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. HOLMAN. I suggest to the gentleman from Maine that it would be better to take these bills up on Monday.

Mr. MILLIKEN. If we can get at them on Monday I have no objection.

Mr. HOLMAN. We can get at them on Tuesday.

Mr. CANNON. It will take about 156 people to pass them.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope the gentleman from Maine will move an adjournment.

Mr. MILLIKEN. I ask that the previous question be considered as ordered on all the bills reported from the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maine asks by unanimous consent the previous question shall be considered as ordered.

Mr. HOLMAN. That would bring them up as unfinished business on Monday morning if the House adjourns.

The SPEAKER. That would be the effect of it.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I object unless the gentleman goes over to Tuesday, because the Committee on the District has Monday.

Mr. MILLIKEN. I have no objection to Tuesday.

The SPEAKER. Unanimous consent is asked that the previous question shall be considered as ordered on all the bills reported by the Committee of the Whole, and that the bills go over until Tuesday next.

Mr. BUCKALEW. One observation, Mr. Speaker. I believe that nearly all of these bills require an amendment to the title.

The SPEAKER. That can be done notwithstanding the ordering of the previous question.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I did not hear the question of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, but before giving consent to this, Mr. Speaker, I want to make a parliamentary inquiry. Under the rules of the House, if the previous question is by consent ordered, does it allow the forty minutes of debate? I take it for granted that it will.

The SPEAKER. It has been held that debate in Committee of the Whole satisfies the rule.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Then I object.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the title of the first bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 7156) to provide for the increase of the limit of cost of the site of a public building at Newark, N. J.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The question was taken, the House divided, and there were—ayes 16, noes 74.

So the motion was not agreed to.

Mr. LEHLBACH. I ask unanimous consent that the House take a recess until 10 o'clock Monday morning.

Mr. BYNUM. I object.

Mr. WHEELER, of Alabama. I move that the House take a recess until 10 o'clock Monday morning.

Mr. LEE. I wish to ask if that will interfere with the District of Columbia business?

Mr. DORSEY. Not at all.

The question was taken on the motion of Mr. WHEELER, of Alabama, the House divided, and there were—ayes 80, noes 12.

Mr. BYNUM. No quorum.

The SPEAKER (having counted the House). Ninety-seven members only are present.

Mr. MILLIKEN. I move that there be a call of the House.

Mr. PERKINS. Pending the motion of the gentleman from Maine, I ask unanimous consent that the previous question be considered as ordered on the bills reported from the Committee of the Whole, and it be agreed that they shall be called up on Tuesday morning, and that there be allowed not exceeding ten minutes' debate on each side on each bill.

Mr. MILLIKEN. I accept that and withdraw my motion.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas asks unanimous consent that the bills laid aside with favorable recommendation by the committee be considered as having the previous question ordered, with the understanding that they be taken up on Tuesday morning, with not exceeding ten minutes' debate on each side for each bill. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MILLIKEN. What time Tuesday morning will these bills come up?

The SPEAKER. They will come up immediately after the reading of the Journal, unless the House understood otherwise. [Cries of "All right!"]

And then, on motion of Mr. CUTCHEON (at 6 o'clock and 23 minutes p. m.), the House adjourned.

EXECUTIVE AND OTHER COMMUNICATIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

TRANSPORTATION AND RECRUITING, NAVAL SERVICE.

Letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting an estimate of deficiency in the appropriation for transportation and recruiting in the naval service for the fiscal year 1890, submitted by the Secretary of the Navy—to the Committee on Appropriations.

RANGE LIGHTS IN LAKE WINNEBAGO.

Letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a letter from the Light-House Board recommending an appropriation of $500 to establish range lights in Lake Winnebago, Wisconsin—to the Committee on Appropriations.

Chamber of Commerce and a joint resolution of the General Assembly of South Carolina, in regard to the jetties at Charleston Harbor; which were referred to the Committee on Commerce, and the joint resolution of the General Assembly of South Carolina was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Under concurrent resolution of the General Assembly of the State of South Carolina, we hereby affix our signatures to this paper.

W. L. MAULDIN,
Lieutenant-Governor and President of the Senate.
JAMES SIMONS,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

COLUMBIA, S. C., December 23, 1889.

Upon the joint memorial from the Charleston Chamber of Commerce, the Charleston Exchange, and Merchants' Exchange, relating to the jetties in Charleston Harbor, the concurrent resolution was agreed to, of which the following is a copy:

Resolved by the house of representatives (the senate concurring), That our Senators and Representatives in Congress be, and they are hereby, earnestly requested to urge upon Congress the importance of appropriating the full sum which the United States engineers report as necessary to the early completion of the work upon the jetties in Charleston Harbor; that it is the sense of the house that said appropriation is in the interest of true economy, and that the early completion of the work, whereby deep water can be secured, will greatly promote the interest of the entire State and of the whole South Atlantic seaboard.

Resolved, further, That the president of the senate and speaker of the house of representatives be requested to sign the accompanying memorial, and the clerks of the senate and house of representatives be instructed to forward a copy of this concurrent resolution to each of the Senators and Representatives in Congress from South Carolina.

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, December 16, 1889.

Resolved, That the house do agree to the resolution.

Ordered, That it be sent to the senate for concurrence.

By order.

JAMES SIMONS,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

IN THE SENATE, December 16, 1889.

Resolved, That the senate concur in the resolution.

Ordered, That it be returned to the house with concurrence.

By order.

W. L. MAULDIN,
Lieutenant-Governor and President of the Senate.

We hereby certify that the foregoing is a correct copy of concurrent resolutions adopted by the General Assembly of the State of South Carolina at the regular session of 1889.

W. L. MAULDIN,
Lieutenant-Governor and President of the Senate.
JAMES SIMONS,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

He also presented a memorial of 124 citizens of Lincoln County, Nebraska, remonstrating against a reduction of the tariff on sugar and for legislation to encourage the beet sugar and sorghum industries; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. MANDERSON subsequently said: The memorials presented a few moments ago with reference to the beet-sugar industry I think should be referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. That committee, I understand, has that matter in charge and will report a bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The memorials to which the Senator from Nebraska refers relate to a reduction of the duty on sugar. They will be referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, if there be no objection.

Mr. MORRILL. I think they ought to go to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. PADDOCK. I desire to state that the whole subject-matter of the beet-sugar industry is before the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, and will be referred in the course of a day or two to the Committee on Finance, with a report, for their consideration.

Mr. MANDERSON. I understand that the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry is to report a bill upon this and similar subjects for reference to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. PADDOCK. Yes, for reference to the Committee on Finance.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The memorials will be referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. STANFORD presented sundry petitions of the Pacific Coast Eight-Hour League of San Francisco, Cal., praying for the enforcement of the eight-hour law; which were referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also presented sundry petitions of citizens of San Francisco, Cal., praying for the free coinage of silver; which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. CULLOM presented a petition of citizens of Danville, Ill., engaged in the manufacture of cigars, praying that the tax on cigars and the internal-revenue system be retained; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a petition of 63 citizens of Illinois, praying for the passage of a Sunday-rest law; which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, presented a memorial of the Monthly Meeting of Friends (700 members), of Oskaloosa, Mahaska County, Iowa, remonstrating against any appropriation for the construction of a navy; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

He also presented a petition of Sam Rice Post, No. 6, Grand Army of the Republic, of Atlantic, Iowa, praying for the passage of a service-pension bill; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented a petition of 50 citizens of Ripley, Iowa, praying for the passage of a Sunday-rest bill; which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. TELLER presented a petition of the city council of Colorado Springs, Colo., and a petition of the Pueblo (Colo.) Board of Trade, praying that an appropriation be made for a deep-water harbor at Galveston, Tex.; which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. MITCHELL. I present sundry petitions signed by 320 citizens of Morrow County, in the State of Oregon, earnestly praying that all the lands heretofore granted to the Northern Pacific Railroad Company terminous with and adjacent to the proposed Columbia River branch of that road, that is to say, between Wallula, in the State of Washington, and Portland, in the State of Oregon, be declared forfeited without delay. As a bill looking to the forfeiture of these lands has been reported, I move that the petitions lie on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MITCHELL presented a petition signed by many citizens of Tualitan, in the State of Oregon, praying for the passage of legislation looking to the restoration of silver to its constitutional place as a money metal, with the same rights of coinage and legal tender as are now accorded to gold; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. BLACKBURN. By reason of the enforced absence of my colleague [Mr. BECK], I ask leave to present sundry petitions in his name and have them appropriately referred.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The petitions will be received.
Mr. BLACKBURN presented the petition of 38 citizens of Pilot Oak, Graves County, Kentucky, praying for the free coinage of silver; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented the petition of 189 citizens of Kentucky, praying for the passage of a national Sunday-rest law; which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. EVARTS presented a petition of 33 citizens of New York State, praying for the passage of a Sunday-rest law; which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also presented a memorial of 600 members of Marlborough Monthly Meeting of Friends, of Ulster County, New York, remonstrating against expenditures for the increase of the Navy, so-called coast defenses, etc.; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

He also presented a petition of tea importers of New York, Philadelphia, Boston, and Chicago, praying for an ad valorem duty on teas imported into the United States from countries west of the Cape of Good Hope; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas, presented the petition of Jacob W. Parker, of Hot Springs, Ark., praying that a law be passed to authorize and enable him to purchase block 94 from the United States at its assessed value in 1880, situate in the Hot Springs reservation, and which the commissioners erroneously failed to award him the right to purchase heretofore; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

COURTS IN WASHINGTON.

Mr. HOAR. I am directed by the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2653) to provide for the times and places to hold terms of the United States courts in the State of Washington, to report it favorably with certain amendments. It is very important that the bill should go into effect at once, and I ask for its present consideration.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read at length.

Mr. HOAR. I ask unanimous consent that the question be taken on the several amendments when they are reached in the reading of the bill. It will save the time of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection, and that course will be pursued.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read the bill.

The first amendment of the Committee on the Judiciary was to strike out section 4, in the following words:

SEC. 4. That all offenses committed in either of said divisions shall be cognizable and indictable within the division where committed, and all grand and petit jurors summoned for service in each division shall be inhabitants thereof.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment, was in section 5, line 11, after the word "fact," to insert the words "in civil causes;" so as to read:

All issues of fact in civil causes triable in any of the said courts shall be tried in the division where the defendant or one of the defendants reside, unless by consent of both parties the case shall be removed to some other division.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment was, in section 6, line 4, after the word "shall," to insert the word "not;" so as to read:

That the clerk of the circuit and district courts for said district shall each appoint a deputy clerk at the place where their respective courts are required to be held in the division of the district in which such clerk shall not himself reside, each of whom shall, in the absence of the clerk, exercise all the powers and perform all the duties of clerk within the division for which he shall be appointed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was concluded.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

REVISION OF REMARKS.

Mr. HOAR. I am directed by the Committee on Privileges and Elections to report a substitute for the resolution referred to that Committee, submitted by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER] February 24.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The proposed substitute will be read. The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Ordered, That in all future editions of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD the following words be stricken from the report of the remarks of Mr. CALL, a Senator from the State of Florida, in the Senate, Thursday, February 20, 1890, as heretofore published in the RECORD, namely:

"And murders of hundreds of women and children in the Southern States; of these horrid crimes."

"The blood of Saunders, if the evidence shall show his death was in any way connected with the prosecutions in the United States courts, will rest on his conscience. The shrieking ghosts of the hundreds of outraged and murdered women and children, the victims of the wild lust and passions of a race who owe all that they know of religion and civilization to the Southern white people, and not to the Senator from New Hampshire, will disturb his sleeping and his waking hours. Like Banquo's ghost, it will not down, and the ocean will not wash his blood-stained hands from the guilt of the rape and murder of these tender white women and children;" said words not having been actually spoken by him, and that the passage of his remarks in which said words were inserted be published in such future editions as originally reported by the Official Stenographer.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be placed on the Calendar.

On motion of Mr. HOAR, it was Ordered, That the Committee on Rules report for the consideration of the Senate a rule defining the extent to which Senators shall be at liberty to revise remarks made by them in the Senate for publication in the RECORD.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. DAWES introduced a bill (S. 3043) to amend and further extend the benefits of the act approved February 8, 1887, entitled "An act to provide for the allotment of land in severalty to Indians on the various reservations, and to extend the protection of the laws of the United States over the Indians, and for other purposes," which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. PASCO introduced a bill (S. 3044) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to pay the balance found to be due the State of Florida according to the account stated between the General Government and such State by the said Secretary, under the authority of the act approved March 2, 1889, known as the deficiency appropriation act; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. VOORHEES introduced a bill (S. 3045) for the relief of Caroline M. McDougal, widow of the late Rear-Admiral David McDougal, United States Navy; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. VOORHEES introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 64) to arbitrate and settle the questions at issue between the District of Columbia and Samuel Strong; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

GOVERNMENT LOANS ON REAL ESTATE.

Mr. STANFORD submitted the following resolution; which was read:

Whereas there is a stringency in money and much consequent distress, the energies of the country being depressed, large portions of the farming communities heavily burdened and struggling for relief; and

Whereas the United States Government is alone authorized to make money which shall be a legal tender, whether it be by stamp upon paper, silver, or gold; and

Whereas the value of the three commodities when used as money depends entirely upon the stamp of the Government making it legal tender; and

Whereas it has been found that the money advanced by the Government upon its own bonds to the holders thereof has furnished the best and most acceptable currency, through which to-day in our country most of the exchanges are made; and

Whereas the present stringency is largely due to the retirement of Government bonds which have been so largely the basis of our circulating medium; and

Whereas it is of great consequence to national and individual interests that credit should be established, where merited, as far as is safe and practicable; and

Whereas the Government can do this abundantly, without risk to itself, upon much of the property of the country, as it is now doing upon its own bonds, on which it is paying interest; and

Whereas loans upon a property basis would furnish all the money needed without cost to the Government, and a fair interest paid by the borrower would give to the Government for the use of its credits in bills a large income: Therefore,

Be it resolved, That the Committee on Finance be instructed to inquire what relief may be furnished by the United States Government, and particularly whether loans may not be made by the Government upon mortgages deposited with it upon real estate, independent of improvements, at such rate and to such an amount only as will make the security to the Government perfect, the Government to receive some small rate of interest, from 1 to 2 per cent., ample compensation for the use of its credit, and to prevent the undue applications for loans beyond the needs of the country. And the Government, as further restraint and provision against an overissue (if such a thing be possible upon perfect security, where the interest is very slight), shall provide to call in a percentage of its loans, from time to time, upon reasonable notice, as it may deem necessary, at its own discretion, for the welfare of the nation.

Mr. STANFORD. I ask that the resolution lie on the table. I expect to be absent for a few days, and I should like to have the unanimous consent of the Senate to submit a few remarks to accompany the resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from California asks unanimous consent to submit observations to accompany the resolution just offered. The Chair hears no objection, and the Senator from California will proceed.

Mr. STANFORD. Mr. President, from the earliest civilization there has existed in all countries a need of some commodity that will stand as the representative of values through which exchanges can be made without the commodities themselves being passed from hand to hand.

In process of time gold and silver came into use for this purpose of equalizing exchange, and to-day, when stamped by responsible governments, these metals have a value as money far beyond any possible value they might have were they only used in the arts. But it is obvious that their value as legal tender depends as much on the Government stamp as does the paper which is stamped by the Government and made legal tender. Money becomes valuable as it stimulates industry and facilitates the exchange of the products of man's labor. Property itself is valuable according to the uses to which it is applied. Thus, supposing a man's wages were a dollar a day, $100 would employ one hundred men one day; but could the product of the labor of those hundred men be immediately utilized, the $100 might give employment to a hundred men every work day in the year.

The Government bond is valuable to the holder on account of the interest it earns. As an energetic factor in the transactions of men it only amounts to the percentage which it draws, but when the bondholder by depositing it with the Government receives back 90 per cent. in Government bills, 90 per cent. of its value becomes energized into an active commodity, giving possible employment to the energies of the country. In like manner, if the farmer were able to borrow from the Government without interest a certain amount of its bills, giving his farm as security therefor, to that extent his land would become an active force and he would be enabled, while giving employment to the extent of the money loaned him, to improve his farm and increase its value to the full amount of the loan. Thus, the Government loan would be doing a double duty. Now, the activities of this money do not terminate with its expenditure by the farmer; those who have received it in their turn will make use of it as an energizing factor in the forces of life to an indefinite period. As money employs labor it brings to life a continuing force, labor begetting labor as certainly as its fruits are valuable. Another way by which we can appreciate what money actively used may perform in the settlement of balances is to be found in the value of commodities produced and exchanged compared with the amount of money in circulation.

I may here make use of the familiar illustration of a dollar going the round among twenty men each of whom owed a dollar to his neighbor, paying twenty dollars of debts and returning to the pocket from which it started. This is a small illustration and would be equally illustrative for a greater number of men and a greater amount of debts.

How far the boundless resources of our country shall be put into activity depends not only upon the active industry of our people, but upon the power necessary to induce that industry, and it should be the fostering care of the Government to see that such industry receives every encouragement.

An abundant supply of money means to individuals of capacity a field for the use of their abilities in prosecuting their various callings of life, and will be particularly valuable to associations of individuals by affording them facilities for obtaining capital for the transaction of every kind of business.

An abundance of money means universal activity, bringing in its train all the blessings that belong to a constantly employed, industrious, intelligent people.

If these proposed loans could be made by the Government without risk, I do not think that there would be any serious obstacle in the way of the accomplishment of the object of this resolution. In my opinion ample protection would be afforded the Government if it limited its loan to one-half or one-quarter the assessed value of the property given as security, and upon the appraisal of Government officers especially selected for that duty.

Abundant and cheap money places the power in the hands of the industrious and enables combination of labor that would produce ample competition and prevent anything like an oppressive monopoly. This combination has always done when not accompanied by any special privileges. Cheap and abundant money means co-operation of labor to an extent heretofore unknown, and with all its consequent advantages. Its abundant supply and possible activities would be one of the great means of employing labor and controlling and utilizing forces at man's disposal, and would go far towards aiding his intelligence, towards realizing his highest destiny.

It seems to me that the great thought of humanity should be how to advantage the great multitude of toilers, increase their power of production, and elevate their condition. We know that a great improvement is within the provisions of Providence, and in the prosperity of the masses of the people the prosperity of all is assured.

Man is the rightful heir to peace and prosperity, and very much depends upon the intelligence of governments to represent the associated capacities and interests of the whole. To me, one of the most effective means of placing at man's disposal the force inherent in the value of property is through furnishing a bountiful supply of money based upon unquestioned and secure values.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will lie on the table.

PATENTS FOR UNION PACIFIC GRANTED LANDS.

Mr. PLUMB submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be directed to report the cause of withholding patents for lands within the limits of the grant to the Union Pacific Railway Company which are free from all claims and were not reserved at the date of the definite location of the company's road, and also to forward to the Senate the report of the Commissioner of the General Land Office on said subject made to the Secretary of the Interior.

INDIAN TERRITORY.

Mr. PLUMB submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be directed to send to the Senate the compilation recently made in the Indian Bureau concerning the legal status of the Indians and lands within the Indian Territory.

CORRECTION OF SCHOOL STATISTICS.

Mr. BLAIR. I should like to call the attention of the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] for a moment to the RECORD. I find in the report of the Senator's speech delivered last Friday, and which is in Sunday's RECORD, an error which I am sure he will not care to have go to the public any further than it has already gone. On page 2115 of the RECORD, which he will find on his desk to-day, near the bottom of the right hand column, the Senator makes this statement:

In 1888 they spent $122,445,000 for public education; they had 12,000,000 children enrolled in their schools; the average school attendance was 8,000,000 pupils.

Those are the statistics of the whole country. The Senator applies them only to the Southern States. On the contrary, instead of being $122,000,000, which was that of the whole country, the expenditure in the Southern States, including Missouri, was $20,000,000.

That is a statement which some five or six times I have endeavored to get to the country in my speeches, and now I hope the Senator will make the correction, so that through him it will reach the State of Maine, where, as I understand him, there has been some change in sentiment, probably owing to the circulation of his speeches there.

Mr. HALE. I am very much obliged to the Senator for calling my attention to this matter.

Mr. BLAIR. The Senator will see that he has only exaggerated the Southern expenditure some six or seven times. In order that there may be no mistake about this matter, I will refer the Senator to the official record, which he will find on pages 82 and 83 of the Report of the Commissioner of Education for 1887-'88. He will find the whole matter summarized there, as he will some four or five times in my speeches during the present session also.

Mr. HALE. I have all of these figures. I had not looked over the RECORD to see the report of the speech. In what I said I gave no such figures as those, but in making up the wrong tables may have been used.

Mr. BLAIR. If the Senator had made such a statement on the floor I should have corrected him if I could have been permitted to interrupt him.

Mr. HALE. Of course I made no such statement. The wrong figures got in; that is all.

Mr. BLAIR. I hope, with the correction giving the full statement of the actual expenditure, the Senator will circulate his speech largely in the State of Maine.

Mr. HALE. And I will send it to the State of New Hampshire.

Mr. BLAIR. I hope he will send it to New Hampshire also. I have frequently made the statement in just that connection that the expenditure is $122,000,000 for the whole country; $20,000,000 for the Southern States, including Missouri; that the Southern States expend about $1 for the education of a child where the Northern States expend $3; and that they require at least twice as much in order to produce the same effect because their school plant is deficient, their teachers are deficient, and they need, consequently, an increased expenditure for each scholar.

Mr. REAGAN. Before the Senator takes his seat, I wish to ask him if the summary of the amount expended by the States for education embraces the amount contributed by local taxation?

Mr. BLAIR. Oh, yes.

Mr. REAGAN. Or does it include only what is appropriated out of the State treasury?

Mr. BLAIR. It includes the entire expenditure. The Senator does not need to rely upon me. I put the figures upon record, but the Senator may go to the record which I quoted and take this book and he will find that the statistics as I have given them are in fact more than corroborated.

Mr. REAGAN. I call the attention of the Senator from New Hampshire to the statement presented. It does not, as I imagined it did not, embrace the money voted by local communities for education. I see by the table—now I speak alone of the State of Texas—that there was about $900,000 appropriated last year—$887,000 for 1889; it may not have been quite that for 1888, but the sum is not far from that.

Mr. BLAIR. I did not understand the Senator's statement. I will take occasion to examine it.

Mr. PADDOCK. Mr. President—

Mr. BLAIR. I am aware that this is irregular, but I call the attention of the Senator from Texas to the fact that the revenues to which he alludes include the revenue "from permanent funds and rents," "from State tax," "from local taxes," "from other sources." Here are the items: "from permanent funds and rents," "from State tax," "from local tax," "from other sources." He will find that on page 80 of the Report of the Commissioner of Education for 1887-'88, and at the close he will find an aggregation showing the whole.

Mr. REAGAN. That aggregation is here for the State I referred to, $2,778,172, and the amount as shown by the report of the superintendent of education last year was three million eight hundred and odd thousand dollars.

Mr. SHERMAN and others. Regular order.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT SALT LAKE CITY, UTAH.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there further morning business? If there be none that order is closed, and the Calendar under Rule VIII is in order. The first order of business will be reported.

The bill (S. 1219) to provide for the construction of a public building at Salt Lake City, Utah, was announced as first in order on the Calendar.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President—

Mr. PADDOCK. I should like to appeal to the Senator from Ohio to yield for the consideration of the bill which is regularly in order. The bill was read at length on Friday. The question, I think, was on its final passage when the time for the consideration of the Calendar expired.

Mr. SHERMAN. I would accede to that request, but I wish, if the Senator will allow me, to state that there is a bill on the Calendar in regard to the inspection of meats for exportation which it is very important at this time should be passed, a bill of great importance. I shall call it up immediately after this bill is disposed of. It will, I think, only take the time necessary to read it. It has already passed the Senate and has had the consideration of two committees. I will withhold it for a moment, but when the public building bill is acted on I shall insist on its being taken up.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 1219) to provide for the construction of a public building at Salt Lake City, Utah.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is before the Senate, and the question is on the amendment of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB].

Mr. PLUMB. I withdraw the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs on concurring in the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole.

The amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills, received from the House of Representatives, were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Pensions:

A bill (H. R. 4821) to pension Eli J. Youngheim;
A bill (H. R. 4840) to increase the pension of William Boone;
A bill (H. R. 4863) granting a pension to John Carter;
A bill (H. R. 5751) to increase the pension of Isaac Endaly;
A bill (H. R. 5862) granting a pension to Margaret Z. Austin;
A bill (H. R. 5905) to pension Thomas K. Edwards for service in the Indian war;

A bill (H. R. 6863) granting a pension to Henry Stumpf; and A bill (H. R. 6865) granting a pension to Clara Frey.

The bill (H. R. 7216) providing for the compulsory attendance of witnesses before registers and receivers of the land office was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

MEAT EXPORTATION AND INSPECTION, ETC.

Mr. SHERMAN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Order of Business 462, Senate bill 2594.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be reported by its title.

Mr. MITCHELL. I hope the Calendar will be proceeded with.

Mr. SHERMAN. It will take but about five or ten minutes to read this bill. There will be no objection to it, and it is admittedly a matter of public importance, as every Senator will see when the bill is read.

Mr. MITCHELL. And then can we go to the Calendar?

Mr. SHERMAN. I have no objection.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to the consideration of the bill (S. 2594) providing for an inspection of meats for exportation, prohibiting the importation of adulterated articles of food or drink, and authorizing the President to make proclamation in certain cases, and for other purposes.

Mr. SHERMAN. It will not be necessary to read the original bill, as an amendment in the nature of a substitute, embodying also certain amendments suggested by the Committee on Agriculture, covers the whole ground.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reported amendment being to strike out and insert a substitute, the Secretary will read the substitute.

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes, sir.

The Secretary read the amendment of the Committee on Foreign Relations, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert as follows:

That the Secretary of Agriculture may cause to be made a careful inspection of all salted pork and bacon intended for exportation, with a view to ascertain and determine whether the same is wholesome and sound for human food, and may appoint inspectors and authorize them to give an official certificate clearly stating the condition in which such pork and bacon is found; and no clearance shall be given to any vessels having on board salted pork or bacon unless each package bears the marks, stamps, or other devices for identification as provided in the last clause of this section; but any pork or bacon may be exported to any foreign country without such inspection when it is proven to the satisfaction of the inspector that the same has been properly salted and packed more than sixty days prior to the date of the application for inspection or manifest for exportation; and such inspector shall in that case certify to the fact that such meat was properly salted and packed more than sixty days before the date of such entry. One copy of any certificate issued by such inspector shall be filed in the Department of Agriculture, another copy shall be attached to the invoice of each separate shipment of such meat, and a third copy shall be delivered to the consignor or shipper of such meat; and as evidence that packages of salted pork and bacon have been inspected in accordance with the provisions of this act, and found to be wholesome and sound for human food, and for the identification of the same, such marks, stamps, or other devices as the Secretary of Agriculture may by regulation prescribe shall be affixed to each of such packages.

SEC. 2. That it shall be unlawful to import into the United States any adulterated or unwholesome food, or vinous, spirituous, or malt liquors, adulterated or mixed with any poisonous or noxious chemical, drug, or other ingredient injurious to health. Any person who shall knowingly import into the United States any such adulterated food or drink, knowing or having reasons to believe the same to be adulterated, being the owner or the agent of the owner, or the consignor or consignee of the owner, or in privy with them, assisting in such unlawful act, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and liable to prosecution therefor in the district court of the United States for the district into which such property is imported; and, on conviction, such person shall be fined in a sum not exceeding $1,000 for each separate shipment, and may be imprisoned by the court for a term not exceeding one year, or both, at the discretion of the court.

SEC. 3. That any article designed for consumption as human food or drink, and any other article of the classes or description mentioned in this act, which shall be imported into the United States contrary to its provisions, shall be forfeited to the United States, and shall be proceeded against under the provisions of chapter 13 of Title XIII of the Revised Statutes of the United States; and such imported property so declared forfeited may be destroyed or returned to the importer for exportation from the United States after the payment of all costs and expenses, under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe; and the Secretary of the Treasury may cause such imported articles to be inspected or examined in order to ascertain whether the same have been so unlawfully imported.

SEC. 4. That whenever the President is satisfied that there is good reason to believe that any importation is being made, or is about to be made, into the United States, from any foreign country, of any article used for human food or drink that is adulterated to an extent dangerous to the health or welfare of the people of the United States, or any of them, he may issue his proclamation suspending the importation of such articles from such country for such period of time as he may think necessary to prevent such importation; and during such period it shall be unlawful to import into the United States from the countries designated in the proclamation of the President any of the articles the importation of which is so suspended.

SEC. 5. That whenever the President shall be satisfied that unjust discriminations are made by or under the authority of any foreign state against the importation to or sale in such foreign state of any product of the United States, he may direct that such products of such foreign state so discriminating against any product of the United States as he may deem proper shall be excluded from importation to the United States; and in such case he shall make proclamation of his direction in the premises, and therein name the time when such direction against importation shall take effect, and after such date the importation of the articles named in such proclamation shall be unlawful. The President may at any time revoke, modify, terminate, or renew any such direction as in his opinion the public interest may require.

SEC. 6. That the importation of neat cattle, sheep, and other ruminants, and swine, which are diseased or infected with any disease, or which shall have been exposed to such infection within sixty days next before their exportation, is hereby prohibited; and any person who shall knowingly violate the foregoing provision shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall, on conviction, be punished by a fine not exceeding $5,000 or by imprisonment not exceeding three years; and any vessel or vehicle used in such unlawful importation shall be forfeited to the United States.

SEC. 7. That the Secretary of Agriculture be, and is hereby, authorized, at the expense of the owner, to place and retain in quarantine all neat cattle, sheep, and other ruminants, and all swine, imported into the United States, at such ports as he may designate for such purpose, and under such conditions as he may by regulation prescribe, respectively, for the several classes of animals above described; and for this purpose he may have and maintain possession of all lands, buildings, animals, tools, fixtures, and appurtenances now in use for the quarantine of neat cattle, and hereafter purchase, construct, or rent as may be necessary, and he may appoint veterinary surgeons, inspectors, officers, and employes by him deemed necessary to maintain such quarantine and provide for the execution of the other provisions of this act.

SEC. 8. That the importation of all animals described in this act into any port in the United States, except such as may be designated by the Secretary of Agriculture, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, as quarantine stations, is hereby prohibited; and the Secretary of Agriculture may cause to be slaughtered such of the animals named in this act as may be, under regulations prescribed by him, adjudged to be infected with any contagious disease or to have been exposed to infection so as to be dangerous to other animals; and that the value of animals so slaughtered as being so exposed to infection but not infected may be ascertained by the agreement of the Secretary of Agriculture and owners thereof, if practicable; otherwise, by the appraisal by two persons familiar with the character and value of such property, to be appointed by the Secretary of Agriculture, whose decision, if they agree, shall be final; otherwise, the Secretary of Agriculture shall decide between them, and his decision shall be final; and the amount of the value thus ascertained shall be paid to the owner thereof out of money in the Treasury appropriated for the use of the Bureau of Animal Industry; but no payment shall be made for any animal imported in violation of the provisions of this act. If any animals subject to quarantine according to the provisions of this act are brought into any port of the United States where no quarantine station is established the collector of such port shall require the same to be conveyed by the vessel on which they are imported or are found to the nearest quarantine station, at the expense of the owner.

SEC. 9. That whenever, in the opinion of the President, it shall be necessary for the protection of animals in the United States against infectious or contagious diseases, he may, by proclamation, suspend the importation of all or any class of animals for a limited time, and may change, modify, revoke, or renew such proclamation as the public good may require; and during the time of such suspension the importation of any such animals shall be unlawful.

SEC. 10. That the Secretary of Agriculture shall cause careful inspection to be made by a suitable officer of all imported animals described in this act, to ascertain whether such animals are infected with contagious diseases or have been exposed to infection so as to be dangerous to other animals, which shall then either be placed in quarantine or dealt with according to the regulations of the Secretary of Agriculture; and all food, litter, manure, clothing, utensils, and other appliances that have been so related to such animals on board ship as to be judged liable to convey infection shall be dealt with according to the regulations of the Secretary of Agriculture; and the Secretary of Agriculture may cause inspection to be made of all animals described in this act intended for exportation, and provide for the disinfection of all vessels engaged in the transportation thereof, and of all barges or other vessels used in the conveyance of such animals intended for export to the ocean steamer or other vessels, and of all attendants and their clothing, and of all head-ropes and other appliances used in such exportation, by such orders and regulations as he may prescribe; and if, upon such inspection, any such animals shall be adjudged, under the regulations of the Secretary of Agriculture, to be infected or to have been exposed to infection so as to be dangerous to other animals, they shall not be allowed to be placed upon any vessel for exportation; the expense of all the inspection and disinfection provided for in this section to be borne by the owners of the vessels on which such animals are exported.

Mr. MANDERSON. Mr. President, one of the greatest barriers in the way of the exportation of beef cattle from this country is in the municipal legislation of foreign powers, notably of England. By the requirements of their law all cattle exported from this country are required to be slaughtered at the port of entry and within a very short time after arrival. Of course I realize very fully that that matter can only be changed by some diplomatic correspondence and by intervention of the usual treaty-making power, but I should like to ask the Senator from Ohio whether that evil has been contemplated by the Committee on Foreign Relations, and whether there is anything in this bill, resulting, perhaps, from this method of inspection, that would permit foreign powers to dispense with that provision.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, the complaint that has been made, not only by our people, but by our Government authorities for several years, has been that France, Germany, and Great Britain have made restrictions which prevented the importation of our meat products into those countries. In England it is true that the rule of their law requires beef cattle coming from our country to be killed at the place of importation there, in order to prevent, as they say, the spread of diseases among their own cattle. In France our pork products have been restrained very much by allegations that they bring over there trichina, and therefore they excluded our pork in many cases absolutely from their market. The same trouble exists in Germany. The general complaint made by these countries is that there are no inspection laws in the United States such as are enforced in the main in the European countries.

This bill, which was originally prepared, I think, two years ago by the Senator from Vermont, a member of the Committee on Foreign Relations [Mr. EDMUNDS], was reported to aid our Government in negotiating to get a release from these varied restrictions imposed by foreign countries upon our food products. It is believed that the passage of this bill will enable the proper authorities of our Government to procure the repeal and release of these various restrictions, more or less, and it is really thought that this bill, by securing the repeal of these restrictions, will add at least $50,000,000 to our exports of meat products. I have no doubt it will add largely; whether it will add so much as that no man can say.

The bill as it now stands is recommended by the three Departments of the Government which will be connected with its enforcement: first, the State Department, which has conducted the negotiations; next, the Treasury Department, which must perform certain functions connected with the customs duties and so on; and, third, the Department of Agriculture. As the bill was reported at first it did not embody in it the provisions made necessary by the somewhat recent act creating the Department of Agriculture, and therefore, upon due representations made, the bill was recommitted and the amendments deemed necessary by the Treasury Department and by the Department of Agriculture, to conform to the law creating the Department of Agriculture, have been made. So I believe it now has gone through every possible scrutiny that it can be subjected to. I have among the papers connected with the bill a letter from the Secretary of Agriculture commending it. I believe that covers the ground.

Mr. PADDOCK. I desire to state, in connection with what the Senator from Ohio has said, that the Secretary of Agriculture has had it under contemplation to send a veterinary expert to Liverpool, or to ports where this product is sent out, in order to determine upon the alleged complaint of unfairness in inspection and to make proper reports to the State Department.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. President, of course the general purpose of this bill is one which commends itself to the Senate, but I very much fear that the bill has been prepared without full consultation with the persons who are engaged in the business of packing and exporting meats from this country. I know that when the bill was first introduced last year a gentleman representing a firm in Connecticut extensively engaged in packing and shipping pork abroad came here and represented to the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] who introduced the bill that the provisions of the bill as it was then drawn would practically destroy the business which he was engaged in. In other words, it would throw such restraints around it as would make it impossible to pursue the business. Whether this bill is as that bill was amended last year I do not know, but I think the bill as first introduced was amended last year. Whether this bill follows the one which was inroduced last year or contains such amendments as were then found to be necessary I do not know.

Mr. SHERMAN. This bill is precisely as it passed the Senate last year, except such modifications as are needed to adapt it to the new Department of Agriculture.

There is one provision in it, a limitation upon the power of the President to stop certain importations confined to a short term of years, but on account of the delay it has been extended and made general.

Mr. PLATT. I should like to ask the Senator from Ohio where it is proposed that this inspection of salted pork and bacon intended for exportation is to be made?

Mr. SHERMAN. At the place of exportation.

Mr. PLATT. It is utterly impossible to carry on the business of exportation profitably by having the inspection at the port of exportation; at least, so I am informed; that the circumstances surrounding the shipping of these products from the wharves when they are sent to New York for exportation are such that any inspection there is practically to hinder and impede and so embarrass the business as that it will not be profitable.

Mr. SHERMAN. I was not literally correct in my answer to the question, that the inspection is at the place of exportation; for there is this provision in the bill:

But any pork or bacon may be exported to any foreign country without such inspection when it is proven to the satisfaction of the inspector that the same has been properly salted and packed more than sixty days prior to the date of the application for inspection or manifest for exportation.

In that case it might be inspected in Chicago, in Connecticut, or anywhere else, and need not then be inspected at the place of exportation, although otherwise it would have to be.

Mr. PLATT. I see there is that in the bill. It so happens that I received a letter last evening, which I have not replied to, from a gentleman who appeared, I think, before the Foreign Relations Committee or certainly before the Senator who introduced the bill last year, and I desire to read from what he says, because I should be neglecting my duty if I allowed this bill to pass without presenting the suggestion which he makes. He says:

The bill as now before the Senate will, if allowed to become a law, be destructive to a very large part of the export business and will do no good to any one. The export of hog products from this country is so large and so satisfactory under the present inspection instituted by the various boards of trade of the country that any interference by the Government will work irreparable harm, and in fact almost destroy a large part of the export trade of hog products. I could show you very clearly the reasons for my statement, but it would be too much to give in this letter.

I hope that you will let me know when the bill is coming up and I will come to Washington at once. It will not do to let this bill pass in the shape that it is now in. If the sixty-day clause was stricken out and in place of same was inserted the words "fully cured," that would in some measure relieve the bill of its most objectionable features.

I have had no opportunity to reply to this letter or to give him any opportunity to come here and present his views, so I can only state them to the Senate.

Mr. CULLOM. I inquire if the Committee on Agriculture has had anything to do or to say about this bill?

Mr. FADDOCK. The Committee on Agriculture reported certain amendments, amendments requiring that the matter of inspection and the performance of quarantine duties should be performed by the Bureau of Animal Industry rather than to be performed in the Department of the Treasury by a new class of inspectors to be set up there. It was intended to simplify the inspection and the quarantine business, and to put it where it belongs, under the Bureau of Animal Industry as now organized in the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. BATE. Mr. President, it seems to me that this bill is one of very great importance, and it ought not to be considered under the five-minute rule.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is not so being considered. It was taken up on motion and is open to unlimited debate until 2 o'clock.

Mr. BATE. I desire to say that there are bills somewhat akin to this pending in the Committee on Agriculture, and two or three of them have been referred to a subcommittee, but the subcommittee has not had time to investigate them. I hope, therefore, that this bill will not be pressed now. It is one of vast importance, and we should have an opportunity of examining it.

Furthermore, I see that this is a substitute for the original bill, which has been examined with great care by all who are interested in this proposition, and that bill is amended now so as to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert a new bill. It was only reported some two or three days ago, and I do not think we have had an opportunity to consider it properly. I will say that the Committee on Agriculture have not had an opportunity to consider it, and I do not think they have had this substitute before them at all, but measures akin to it have been referred to that committee. I hope the bill will not be pressed now.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Senator from Tennessee will allow me to suggest that he probably did not hear what I said. This bill was practically referred to the Committee on Agriculture. Every amendment proposed by the Committee on Agriculture was adopted, and there is a letter on the files from the Secretary of Agriculture strongly recommending the passage of the bill. I also have a letter from the Secre-ary of the Treasury approving of the modifications proposed between the two Departments; and I may say that the two Secretaries concur in all the amendments which have been adopted and incorporated in the substitute.

Mr. BATE. Do I understand the Senator to say that the Department of Agriculture has concurred in it?

Mr. SHERMAN. The Department of Agriculture and the Secretary of the Treasury also concur in these amendments. The amendments were prepared by the Department of Agriculture and handed me by the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture, and every amendment proposed by them has been adopted and incorporated in the substitute now pending.

Mr. BATE. I did not know that the matter had been presented to the Department of Agriculture, but this is a question of very grave importance, and I only suggested that it should be looked into by the committee having charge of that subject in connection with others.

Mr. SHERMAN. I feel bound to make one further statement. I have been urged to bring this matter before the attention of the Senate by important Departments of the Government, and I have once or twice done so, and I probably do not trespass upon what is proper on this occasion in saying that the adjustment and arrangement of all these controversies is now a matter of correspondence between our Government and other Governments. This is the season when this bill, if at all, should be passed. Before the summer commences these modes of inspection and organization should be provided. I hope, therefore, that the Senate will allow the bill to be disposed of now. If there is any trouble about it or any defect or any word that is wrong, there will be ample time to correct it in the House of Representatives.

Mr. TELLER. We had better correct it here.

Mr. SHERMAN. This bill has been more carefully scanned and considered than probably any bill upon the Calendar. It has once already passed the Senate, and the changes now made have been in consequence of a law passed since that time, the law creating the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. PLATT. It may be somewhat strange that a Senator living in an Eastern State should be the first to suggest questions in regard to whether this bill has been so considered as to protect the interests of the people who are engaged in packing and exporting meat products, but my attention was called to it by a very large and a very reputable house in my State, and while I have no doubt it is true that the State Department and the Agricultural Department and some other Departments have coincided in recommending the object of this bill, I do not believe that either of these Departments or the committee have heard the persons who are most interested in that feature of the bill, persons who are engaged in the business of packing and exporting meat. If I understand the trouble, or one trouble, it is that as the bill is now drawn the inspection must be on the wharf whence the exportation takes place. Any one who will consider the conditions of business on a wharf where meat is to be shipped on board a foreign-going vessel will see how utterly impossible it is for an inspection to take place there without great injury and great delay and great embarrassment to the parties who are engaged in shipping.

There is the only place, as I understand, if it is to take place at the port of exportation, where the inspection can be made, where the article is delivered from the cars or elsewhere, and whether it is on the wharf or in the cars or in the warehouse. The pork product can not wait for that kind of inspection to be performed. It has to go forward as soon as delivered at the point of exportation.

The Senator from Ohio says that difficulty is partially obviated, or wholly obviated, by a clause in the bill which provides that if "it is proven to the satisfaction of the inspector that the same has been properly salted and packed more than sixty days prior to the date of the application for inspection or manifest for exportation, and such inspector shall in that case certify to the fact that such meat was properly salted and packed more than sixty days before the date of such entry." What does that involve? It involves either an inspection at the port of exportation, and under all these disadvantageous and embarrassing circumstances, or it involves the keeping on hand for sixty days of all the pork and meat products intended for exportation. That ought not to be. It ought to be so that when the pork is properly packed and properly cured it can go forward.

I am not complaining of the general purpose of this bill, but I am complaining that I think there are not proper safeguards for the business thrown around it.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, I am in sympathy with the general aim and purpose of this bill, and I have no doubt that it has been carefully and fully considered in the Committee on Foreign Relations, as also the Committee on Agriculture; but I submit that it is a very important measure as affecting a great many interests in this country. It has been reported here at the present session on the 5th of March. I have no doubt that it is wise to pass its substance at the earliest possible moment; but the people of my State are deeply interested in this question. I have on my table a telegram received this morning from one of the most intelligent men in my State who is engaged in this business, and he says to me in this telegram that he fears that this bill would obstruct the European export trade already existing more than it would aid it. I have no idea whether he refers to the amendment which was reported on the 5th of March or to the original bill which was introduced by the honorable Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS], or what it is that he objects to; but it seems to me that it would be wise for us to postpone for a few days, if it can be done, the consideration of this bill until we shall all have had an opportunity of communicating with our constituents who have knowledge on the subject.

I confess to a very great desire that some bill of this character shall be passed, and passed at an early day; and yet if called upon to vote on this measure to day I should vote with some hesitation, in view of the telegram which I have received from a very intelligent constituent who is engaged largely in this business and who is engaged in it wholly for exportation.

Mr. PADDOCK. I should like to inquire of the Senator if his correspondent gives the number or the file of the bill to which he makes his objection. There are other bills under consideration in the Committee on Agriculture which have excited a great deal of interest throughout the country because they are local in their character and relate to internal commerce.

Mr. ALLISON. He gives such designation, I will say to the Senator, as enables me to know that this is the bill to which he alludes.

Mr. PLUMB. It seems to me that this bill, properly construed, is not amenable to the objections urged by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT]. This inspection can only be made properly, or at all events, the most proper place to make it is at the place where the goods are cut and packed, and in order to make this not only a safeguard to the purchasing public on the other side of the water, but to give to our cut meats that freedom of sale which they are entitled to, the inspection must be such as to make it perfectly certain to the public on the other side that it has been made with fidelity and under circumstances which preclude the idea that it is done in a perfunctory manner or by collusion; and that inspection can only be made, as I said before, at the packing-house. This provision ought to be made broad enough to require the inspection of the materials which go to make up the canned goods that find their way into export channels as well.

Now, the places at which pork and meats of all kinds are prepared for foreign exportation are very few in number, probably not more than a dozen in the United States at the very outside, and possibly not so many. I think it would be of very great advantage that the processes and the materials and the packing and every other thing that goes to make up what we know as purity, as wholesomeness, as freedom from disease and unfavorable conditions, should be resolved under some proper authority through the instrumentality of the law, and by some person or the agent of some Cabinet minister of such dignity that whatever certificate he shall give as the result of his examination shall carry with it verity in all quarters where these meats shall by any possibility be sent. Of course, there may be circumstances under which this inspection would not need to be made at the place where the article was packed, and, therefore, it seems wise to leave that open to the discretion of the Secretary of Agriculture. I have no doubt, whether the law be administered by the present incumbent or any one succeeding him, that the duty will be administered in a manner to make the least possible friction with reference to the exporter and at the same time with that fidelity which will give to our meats an unlimited market wherever they may be found.

Mr. President, this will be of some importance perhaps in another direction. The investigation which the Committee on Agriculture gave to the subject of lard at the last session of Congress left in my mind very considerable doubt as to the wholesomeness of a great deal of the material sold as lard in this country. Whether wholesome or not, I know that I have since that time always thought that I would not care to buy any packing-house lard.

There has been enough suggested, from what has been said in regard to the method obtaining in these different packing-houses, to leave a great many people in doubt as to the wholesomeness of all the products which come from them, and that has been enforced by an occasional poisoning of persons eating canned goods particularly, which has seemed to make it desirable, within the scope of proper authority, that all the processes in use in the various packing-houses should be subject to frequent and constant inspection. I think the State of Illinois has a commission which inspects, to some extent at least, the processes at the packing-houses in the city of Chicago. Of course we probably should be invading the authority of the State to apply our inspection to meats designed for domestic consumption, or at all events for consumption within the State where they are packed; but if there were a United States inspector, or a half dozen inspectors, or whatever number might be needed, at every place where these articles are put up for consumption, whether put in packages which would not be inspected until they were taken and opened in order that their contents might be eaten, it would undoubtedly tend to make the packers more circumspect, and this would give greater assurance to all the people who eat these products, and every one is obliged to run the risk of eating them whether he wants to do so or not, because they are now universally used in the hotels and in places where men are compelled through the necessities of travel and business to resort, and we are all affected by the things injurious to health which come from these packing-houses.

I do not see in this provision anything which, properly exercised, would constitute a barrier to trade, either foreign or domestic. As to those sections succeeding it, giving to the President power to prevent the importation of adulterated and unwholesome articles of food, they are only permissive, and undoubtedly the power given will be exercised with the greatest possible care; but certainly the authority which is conveyed by the first section, unless it is wantonly abused—which I am bound to believe will not be the case—will be to the last degree useful, and not only useful to our foreign trade, but it will have the indirect benefit of giving assurance to the consumers of these products in our own country.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, I wish to say, in the first place, that the substance and almost the very form of this bill was first proposed, I think, by the late Senator Miller, of California, as many as six years ago, and that it has certainly once, and I think twice, passed the Senate, but has never been acted upon in the other legislative department of the Government.

I wish to say, in the second place, that this amendment reported by the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations as a complete amendment only changes the bill as it was reported in the first place this session, and as it was passed before, by turning over the control of this inspection from the Treasury Department to the Department of Agriculture. That is all there is to this amendment as differing from the other bill. Therefore I hope Senators will not be alarmed at the idea that the Committee on Foreign Relations found that they had been going wrong all the time, as the Senate had before in passing these bills, and had found it necessary to substitute an entirely new scheme. It was only put in this form of a continuous substitute amendment on account of the great number of mere verbal changes necessary to transfer the jurisdiction of inspection from the Treasury Department to the new Department of Agriculture. That is all there is in the amendment.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to ask the Senator who introduced the bill where he proposes the inspection to take place.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I was about to proceed to explain that when the matter a few years ago was carefully considered by the Committee on Foreign Relations we had before us or before some subcommittee of us the gentlemen in Connecticut, the constituents of my friend on my right [Mr. PLATT], deeply interested in this packing business of pork for immediate transportation, not perfectly cured and salted pork such as would cross the plains in wagons to the other side of the continent forty years ago, but pork that is intended specially for the English market, where they do not want it, provided it be sound, to be thoroughly salted, but being half cured as we would call it on the farm—bacon and pork as well as all sorts of products of the wine are sent over and opened there immediately and further cured if anybody wants it that way, but in the main it is immediately taken up by the classes who are compelled to eat American pork instead of American beef because the latter is so much more costly, and therefore our original bill required that there should be an inspection at the port of exportation, which would be in the case of Connecticut at New York. It was said they could not stand that, because, if these packages of partly cured pork were to be opened out in a hurry on the dock, the thing would not work.

Accordingly, to their entire satisfaction, we changed the phraseology so as to leave it to the discretion then of the Secretary of the Treasury and now of the Secretary of Agriculture to cause this inspection to be systematically made where, according to the nature of the particular trade, whether of the partly cured or totally cured commodity, it would be most convenient for the advantage of the manufacturer and for the safety of the public interests to have it done. It will happen in the great majority of cases that the inspection should be and must be at the place of original packing.

It may happen again on an imperfect inspection or a good inspection of a commodity that turns out by the time it has reached New York from Iowa, or Boston from Iowa, that the thing has gone wrong, and for the very safety of the Iowa producer, and of the Connecticut producer, and of the Ohio producer, and every other producer, and for the sake of the foreign trade as well as in justice to foreign countries, it would be necessary that the Secretary of Agriculture in that case should have the power to reinspect it, to be sure that the suspected shipment was all right, or else it was all wrong, and he would not allow it to go.

We thought, therefore, it was the right thing for the producer, for the public interest, and for the foreign interest, that the Secretary of Agriculture now, formerly the Secretary of the Treasury, should have the authority to exercise his wholesome official discretion as to the place of inspection, and to be authorized to repeat it, if necessary, after the goods had crossed half the continent and were about to go away, in the very interest of the people who are engaged in the business, as well as in the interest of public justice and the comity of the United States toward the foreign consumer. That was the idea.

Mr. VEST. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Certainly.

Mr. VEST. I understand the Senator from Vermont drew this bill substantially as it is before the Senate. I ask, why was the article of canned meats excluded from the first section? Why was the provision confined to salted pork and bacon?

Mr. EDMUNDS. It is due to the late Senator from California, Mr. Miller, to say that the Senator from Vermont did not originally draught this bill, although he assisted in some respects, in technical phraseology and that sort of thing; but the originator of this bill, as I now remember it, was the late Senator from California.

The state of things then was, as we all remember, that Germany and, I believe, France, and in considerable degree Great Britain as well—certainly Germany and, I believe, France also—had entirely prohibited in effect and in fact the introduction of American pork, whether salted or in any form whatever.

Mr. SHERMAN. In Great Britain they require it to be inspected on landing.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Yes, I know, but the Germans and French took such steps as excluded it altogether, on the theory that there had not been such an inspection in the country of production and the country of shipment as to make it safe to their people to consume it. Really I suspect, with great respect to the foreign countries, it was done on the theory that it interfered with the home industry. That is my belief.

Accordingly, in order to meet that objection and to put it out of the power of our foreign friends to say "we have any doubt about the healthfulness of this commodity," which was then the very subject of contention, and that alone, this bill was originally framed providing for a national inspection and branding in order that there should be the best possible assurance, as good as could be anywhere, of the healthfulness of these products.

If the case were a new one, so far as I now understand it, I should certainly be willing to provide for an inspection of canned meats that should be exported, as well as pork and bacon, but that accounts for the circumstance that pork and bacon alone were named in this bill.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to ask the Senator to state what is the purpose of the provision in line 16 of section 1, that the exportation may take place when it is proven to the satisfaction of the inspector that the meat has been properly salted and packed more than sixty days prior to the date of the application for inspection.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The purpose of that was, it being alleged by a great many packers of pork that their pork was completely salted and packed, and assalted pork absolutely and completely able to stand any number of years after having been salted and packed in this country sixty days, that the idea of its danger in foreign countries had passed by, and in order to meet the objection of this product being subjected to an unnecessary examination, after the hearings that the committee had of people interested, we thought it would be safe enough to provide for allowing absolutely salted and packed pork that had been salted and packed for sixty days, as distinguished from the other kind that I have mentioned, to go without inspection.

Mr. PLATT. May I ask the Senator from Vermont a question?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Certainly.

Mr. PLATT. I find by an examination of the RECORD that when this bill passed at the last session the amendment which I will now read was introduced; of course the inspection was then under the Secretary of the Treasury:

Provided, That whenever the Secretary of the Treasury shall think it expedient to cause such inspection, before mentioned, to be made at the place of packing of such meats for exportation, he may do so by proper officers appointed for that purpose; and such inspection, so made and properly certified, shall be in lieu of the inspection hereinbefore provided for, and shall be deemed a compliance with the provisions of this section.

Now, I want to ask the Senator from Vermont whether he thinks the bill as reported by the committee at this session is as clear on the subject of where the inspection may be made as it was when last passed with that provision in it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think it is.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Senate resumes the consideration of the unfinished business, being the bill (S. 185) to aid in the establishment and temporary support of common schools.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I ask unanimous consent to finish in three minutes my answers to these questions.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I have to reply to my friend from Connecticut on that side point that the bill, as originally framed and as originally reported, provided for an inspection at the port of exportation alone. Then came my friend's constituents and said, "We can not stand this in respect of this partially cured commodity which can not wait on the wharf in a hurried shipment to be again explored and torn up, and it will be a great expense besides." Then this amendment which was provided for authorized the Secretary in his discretion not to have every inspection at the port of departure, but to allow it to be made, in instances at his discretion, at the place of manufacture. Then, in the reframing of the bill, to carry out identically the same idea, it was provided that the Secretary of the Treasury, as first reported, and now the Secretary of Agriculture, without limit of either the port of exportation or the place of manufacture, should be authorized to cause an inspection to be made so as to adjust the inspection to the convenience of different parts of the country and the necessities of each particular case.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives by Mr. MCPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills and joint resolution:

A bill (S. 280) to amend an act to incorporate the Georgetown and Tenallytown Railway Company of the District of Columbia, which became a law August 10, A. D. 1888;

A bill (S. 308) to ascertain the amount due the Pottawatomie Indians of Michigan and Indiana;

A bill (S. 1297) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the construction of a wagon and foot-passenger bridge across the Mississippi River at or near Lyons, Iowa;"

A bill (S. 1858) to shorten the terms of imprisonment in the jail and in the work-house of the District of Columbia on account of good conduct during confinement;

A bill (S. 1905) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the building of a railroad bridge at Fort Smith, in the State of Arkansas," approved July 19, 1888; and Joint resolution (S. R. 63) providing for taking the census in Alaska.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills with amendments; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (S. 157) to amend the charter of the Eckington and Soldiers' Home Railway Company;

A bill (S. 296) vesting in the vestry of Christ Church, Washington Parish, District of Columbia, all of the right, title, and interest of the United States of America in and to square south of square 1092, in the city of Washington, District aforesaid; and

A bill (S. 1083) to amend the act giving the approval and sanction of Congress to the route and termini of the Anacostia and Potomac River Railroad in the District of Columbia.

The message further announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. 3872) to amend section 2599 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, designating ports of delivery in the district of Michigan; and

A bill (H. R. 5179) fixing the rate of interest to be charged on arrearages of general and special taxes now due the District of Columbia if paid within the time specified.

AID TO COMMON SCHOOLS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 185) to aid in the establishment and temporary support of common schools.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Delaware [Mr. HIGGINS] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. HIGGINS. Mr. President—

Mr. BLAIR. I merely wish to make a correction which will take but a moment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Delaware yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. HIGGINS. Certainly.

Mr. BLAIR. In the debate on the bill to be found reported in the RECORD of March 8, in my remarks on the position of Judge Albion J. Tourgée upon this question of Federal aid, I said:

He has always been in favor of establishing national schools in the South, interfering with and overthrowing if need be the State institution, going so far as to seize upon the illiteracy there with national control, and expending the money from the national Treasury for the removal of that illiteracy.

I have received a communication from Judge Tourgée in which he says that I mistook and misstated his position in regard to that matter. He says:

We are both laboring for the same end, though so far apart in our methods.

I am very glad to know his position.

Mr. HIGGINS. Mr. President, if the view I take of this bill be correct, it is the most important measure now pending before the Congress, and in saying that I do not forget the important character of the other measures that will come up for consideration: the adjustment of the revenues to the needs of the Government by the further revision of the tariff, the settlement of the silver question in its relations to the currency, the subject of our sea-coast defenses, the equipment of a navy adequate to the needs of this Government, and the great questions of our foreign relations that are looming up in the not distant future. But this is especially a domestic question, and, it seems to me, still holds its place at the fore.

While we are a nation composed of many States, yet the conclusion is forced upon me from time to time that in many respects we are two peoples. The social structure of the North was founded upon white free labor, the social structure of the South was founded upon black slave labor, and the development of each section followed that quality of their origin, and the divergence between the sections has continued and remains until to-day. My sense of the moment of this bill is that I deem it the one measure peculiarly within the scope of the National Government, and to be the act of the people of the entire country, by which they can most contribute to the final eradication of these differences between the sections and make us as we ought to be, not merely one nation, but one people.

The North, unhampered by slavery, instinct with every motive and every principle that has gone to make up true and genuine Americanism, leaped forward in the pathway of industrial progress. One of the consequences of its system was that from the outset it realized and acted upon the necessity of public education. That was peculiarly so of New England and all those States that were settled by, and, so to speak, sprang from, New England. The South, on the other hand, was met at the outset by the inexorable condition from which it could not escape, that it must forbid public, free, common-school education to its people, white as well as black.

It was a crime to educate the black man. Of necessity he was a slave, a chattel, a thing, and to educate him threatened the lives, as they conceived it, and the property of all their people and the continuance of the peculiar institution. But the influence went beyond that, and it destroyed the possibility of the education of the poor whites, and thus we have it stated, in confirmation of what needs no confirmation, by so distinguished and eminent a representative of the public opinion of the South and of its thinking, influential statesmen as Rev. Dr. Curry, that previous to the schools established since the war there was no system of common-school education throughout the South.

It would be useless and idle, Mr. President, for me to undertake to go through with any historic account of all the particulars in which this fundamental divergence led apart the two sections; enough to know that it dominated the politics of each, that it has created the one question that has remained to plague us here for the last forty years, and that at last it culminated in the struggle over the extension of slavery, in the rebellion, and, finally, in its overthrow. In that overthrow slavery was destroyed, but, with that, the divergence between the two sections did not cease.

On the contrary, it meets us here to-day, where gentlemen, representing in the highest sense the ethics and the morals of their respective sections and communities, sit on either side of this Chamber and judge through different glasses the moral judgment that should be put upon, if you please, the assassination of a United States marshal while he was serving process. In every way the two sections are living to-day in different moral atmospheres, all growing out of this divergence which was thus laid in the very foundation and settlement of this country. It seems to me that we shall not become one people until we become in fact, in our institutions and in all respects, homogeneous, identical in our character and our characteristics, and that until that comes to pass we shall have this continuing conflict in which we are still so seriously concerned to-day. It seems to me that, whether consciously or not, when the rebellion was put down and slavery was destroyed, the South turned its back upon its past; that it turned its face to a new future. It did this involuntarily. It did it by force of a higher power, another law imposed upon it by the act of the nation.

The first step of the General Government was the destruction of slavery. The South, if it could, would have had a different solution at that time from that of public education. It began and enacted a series of laws that were meant to reduce the former slaves to a continuation of subordination in freedmanism in place of their previous estate of subordination in slavery. Thus there was forced upon the sentiment and public opinion of the North the necessity of dealing with that, and so it followed the amendment establishing freedom with the amendment establishing civil rights, and, to "make assurance double sure, and take a bond of fate," it took the other momentous step beyond, and gave to the negro the franchise and the suffrage. From that time the South as well as the North was committed to the task and duty of educating all its citizens. Then it had taken the first long stride towards the establishment of its position side by side with the North in the development of its industries, the emancipation of its people from all and every of those incidents which were the consequences and the concomitants of slavery.

To-day against the adoption of this bill we have brought as the strongest argument that could be urged, the splendid progress that the South has so steadily made. Its mines, its manufactories, its railways, its banks, its agriculture, even its schools, all are brought up here in order to show that it has so far progressed that it no longer needs any aid whatever from the nation or from the other States.

Mr. President, I do not concede that to be the case. It is urged here that the census of 1880 startled the country by its disclosure of the condition of ignorance and illiteracy throughout the South. With all due respect to those who make this statement, I think it ought not to have been a startling fact. It ought to have been no disclosure at all. That state of things was simply the necessary and inevitable condition of the South.

The adult class of the South were simply its freed slaves, and every one of them was of necessity illiterate. Only those could have had any opportunities of education who had shortly before come of age, and not until the establishment of the reconstructed governments throughout the South was there any initiation or establishment of any general system of common schools. Those had not had the time in which to make their influence felt at all in the reduction of illiteracy. It was, therefore, just what you would expect and must of necessity expect, not only of the blacks, but of the whites, for, according to the figures given by Dr. Curry, while there were 69 per cent. of the illiterates of the South who were blacks, there were over 30 per cent. of those who were whites.

This vast mass of ignorance was the mountain which the South was called upon to remove, and, sir, it could not be removed in any one day or year or decade, and it will strain and test the resources of that people, with all the aid they can have from the General Government, to bring them abreast of the Northern section in a half century.

There is another general fact which lies at the root of this inquiry, for the dispute of fact that is here to day is whether or not the South has overcome this illiteracy already or so far overcome it that it can be safely and properly left to its own resources in dealing with it. The fact to which I refer is one that we are all familiar with. The school is but one-half, and the least half, of the education of the child; the other and the greater education is that of the parent and the home; and when you have illiterate parents you must have the utmost indifference to the education of the child and the least assistance in the task that is imposed upon the school-master.

So, whatever may be the development of the Southern school, it is left in the condition of being with one hand tied behind its back. They receive no aid whatever from the illiterate parent.

There is this to be said on the other side of that matter—and I wish to discuss the subject with perfect candor and as near as I can absolute fairness—that the peculiar status and characteristics of the negro race have led them to the utmost concern and anxiety that is possible to predicate of so vast a mass of people in such a condition of ignorance; they have been to the largest measure anxious to acquire education, if not for themselves, at least for their children.

The black has at least the merit, if not the virtue, of humility. There is no pride to keep him from acknowledging his ignorance or from seeking in the best way he can to overcome it. It seems to me that the problem of illiteracy among the whites has too often been obstructed by the spirit and the pride of the race, which, even under the conditions of ignorance, led the individual to feel that he was just as good as, if he was not better than, anybody else, and made him indifferent to the interests of education.

Now, when you come to the facts, the census of 1880 shows that of the illiteracy of the country there were in the fourteen Southern States on an average 21.6 per cent. and in the twenty-one remaining States the average illiteracy was but 3.48. Those are quiet figures, but they are deadly. If you will take Missouri and Delaware from the Southern column, as they fairly should be—Maryland, for that matter, should be taken from it also—and add them to the Northern States it would make the percentage of illiteracy in the twelve Southern States 23.7 per cent., while in the twenty-three remaining States it would be 3.95 per cent.

I take from a report made, I think, in the Congress of 1884, by the House Committee on Education and Labor, which was printed in the voluminous speech of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BLAIR], what they had to say on this subject:

The last census shows that there are 6,239,958 people of this country above the age of 10 years who can not write—12.44 per cent. or about one-eighth of our entire population. The census further shows that 4,715,395, or 75.56 per cent. of them, are in the recent slave States, which contain but 33.8 per cent. of the population of the country. In six of these States one-third or more of the population above the age of 10 years are illiterate, while in the Territory of New Mexico nearly one-half can not write. Of the white population of the country only 6.96 per cent. can not write, while 47.7 per cent. of the colored population are in that condition. More than one-fourth of the entire population of those States is illiterate.

That was the admitted state of the country ten years ago. It is not disputed; it is not denied; it stands here in all its magnitude, and it can not be "whistled down the wind" or disposed of in any other way than the recognition, absolute and complete, of its momentous significance.

But the argument is that ten years of Southern education, if it has not wiped this out, has at least gone so far as to make it a problem no more of concern to the North or to the country.

Now, what figures are shown to develop this change? The onus of proof is on those who allege it. They find the existing condition of things in 1880, and they say that it has changed since. Where do they show the change? "Why," they say, "wait for the census of 1890 and that will show it." Until that comes it is for them to develop out of the inherent condition and facts of the case the evidence that would lead us to think that this illiteracy and condition of things in the South has been overcome.

But they say that the South is prosperous and that its prosperity is the evidence of its ability to discharge this duty of education, and we can safely leave that great task to the South. We have here in speeches from the South itself, from the State of West Virginia, from the State of Texas, from the State of Alabama, Senators disclaiming any need for this aid in their States, and the same claim is made in respect of Florida, though I do not know what is the attitude of the Senators from that State on the subject, and the same position is taken in respect of Arkansas.

It seems to me, Mr. President, if you are considering the South as a whole in this respect and go no further into a dissection of the elements that go to make it up, that, so to speak, you stick in the bark; you do not get down to the real truth and the real facts of the case. Take the State of West Virginia, so ably represented by the Senator from that State [Mr. FAULKNER] in the very strong speech he made in opposition to this bill. West Virginia is a part of the South in a certain sense. It was a portion of old Virginia. To be sure, it was enough a part of the North to make it possible for that step to be taken without which the Senator would not be here, and to be joined to the loyal States of the North in the agony of the war. Why? Because its people were loyal. Why were they loyal? Because, living in a mountainous country, there were very few slaves among them.

The institution of slavery had the very least hold there upon them. Now, the geographical and topographical conditions, both of latitude and of altitude, in the north of the Southern country and on its mountain tops made West Virginia what it is. Why, it is but a part of Pennsylvania thrust down into the South. The change that is going on in that State, which all the country welcomes as the harbinger of better things, is the population that is pouring into it as it is not in other parts of the South, drawn there by its industries, by its mines, by its manufactures, by its oil wells, by its hard woods, by all the elements of wealth, long latent and now being developed, that are destined to make it as wealthy and important a section of this country as the imperial State of Pennsylvania. You might as well go to either the State of Maine or the State of Kansas as to talk about my friend from West Virginia representing that part of the South which needs help. He is the representative here of that new South which is bound to be developed first on the lines of commercial and industrial development.

I ought to have said earlier in my remarks that on top of the granting of suffrage and the enfranchisement of the blacks the other great force outside of education, which is bringing the two sections to a common plane out of which alone can grow that unity and oneness which will make them no longer two people, is the development of the industrial interests of the South.

Take the State of Arkansas, and of that the same principle may be predicated. I was told only a few weeks ago by a former member of this body from that State that Arkansas has no black population worth mentioning in the western half of it. In the mountains of Arkansas there is growing up an industrial development which is Northern in the sense that it does not present the problem that always is presented where the blacks form a considerable portion of the population. So the State of Arkansas is free from the quality which depresses the general extent of the Southern country.

If you go to Texas you see the same condition of things. There is an imperial State, an empire. I went across it a few years ago, and from corner to corner the distance is over 900 miles, while it is just as far between the opposite corners.

Bear in mind another thing, that all the migration which takes a southern course is forced down into Texas. It can not go across the Indian Territory; it can not go across Kansas or Nebraska without becoming a part of the North. So the white population of the South seeking an outlet as far as it goes south is pressing into that State, and the percentage of the blacks to the whites is growing less and less every year. Each year Texas is becoming less and less a State with relatively a large black population. Each year it has a larger proportion of white population. On top of that is the other fact, of which I shall have occasion to speak in a few minutes, that through the anomalous circumstance of its coming into the Union after having been an independent republic it is the owner in fee of its own lands, and for it the question of the disposition of the public lands within its borders was settled and disposed of and all of them are at its service for the public uses of the State. It presents the greatest example, in the South at least, of the beneficent results of abundant funds belonging to the State for the purposes of education.

So when Texas stands here and says, "We do not want any help," it may well be answered, "You need none," although the figures produced by the Senator from New Hampshire go to show the results worked out in that State up to the last report from the Commissioner of Education were not such as ought to make it an exception out of the benefits of this bill.

Florida presents the same exceptional condition as contrasted with the body of the Southern States. Every one knows that the present condition of Florida is the outcome of that Northern immigration which has been the result of the attraction of its marvelous climate, its fertile soil, and the value of its orange and other fruit productions. Much over half of Florida, I think, is dominated by these conditions; and I was creditably informed by a gentleman who had the best opportunities on that subject, as he was a native of the country, that the portion of the State where those disturbances occur which have come into this Chamber in such an unpleasant way is confined to half a dozen counties on the northern and central border of the State, which are in fact but a tongue of Georgia thrust down into Florida and constituting that a cause of trouble and difficulty there.

Take Alabama. The development of the iron, of the coal, of the lime, and the products thereof, in Alabama forms the most remarkable industrial fact in the recent history of the Republic. Northern capital is pouring into the State. But it would be keeping wide of the mark and getting very far from the truth of the whole problem if you were to judge all of Alabama by the portion of it where these industries have been promoted. They are exceptional; they are not the rule; and Alabama stands in need of better educational facilities, just as the rest of the South does, notwithstanding the growth of development in a portion, and relatively in a small portion, of that State.

The same can be said of the like condition of things in Eastern Tennessee, in Western North Carolina, and in Eastern Kentucky. Grant, if you please, the entire development of all those portions of those States and you have left as a fact the problem that faces us, the difficulty we have to contend with, the condition of the agricultural portion of the South, not materially changed in the features of its illiteracy or its poverty by anything that has happened since they started out on the task of educating their people.

Railroads, much as they have helped the country, could not, in the nature of things, have been such promoters of prosperity as to work that change.

But, it is argued, cotton has done it. Well, we have had one or two good cotton crops; but anybody who has indulged in the luxury of farming will know that nothing is so illusory or delusive as to suppose that a good crop or a good price of one year is going to be followed by a good crop or a good price a second year. Neither one swallow nor two swallows make a summer. The wasteful character of Southern agriculture, the sparseness of its population, the very fact of the division of its people into the two races, the one white and the other black, all create a state of things which makes it impossible that any moderate prosperity which can grow out of cotton will put the South on such a plane of prosperity that it can afford to grapple alone with the problem of illiteracy.

But cotton, Mr. President, can not be in the nature of things the only crop in the South. No community which depends upon a single crop and does not have an agriculture prosperous in all its diversified aspects, but putting all their eggs into one basket, has yet prospered as an agricultural community, and it never will. Over the South we have the same depression of agriculture that we have in the North, and when you take that into the account it is well to see how that fact affects the remaining Southern States.

It has often seemed to me that the North had very little conception of the true state of things in the South. One of the singular manifestations of it is that this capital, right down here, so to speak, in the heart of the Southern country, between two Southern States, does not seem to bring with it the knowledge to the members of the Government of the facts that are right around them.

If you talk about the prosperity of the South you need only get into your carriage and drive out into Virginia a day's drive. Go into the old country that was first settled, from the James River up along the bay, take any part of it that you please, and you will find those people in a state of poverty, if not of destitution, that is distressing. Take any part of the State of Virginia not on the western border, where mines and minerals and manufactories can be established and developed, and you find a State given up entirely to agricultural productions and resting under the great depression which now is upon the entire country, and there is no escape for them.

So we see that the representatives in the Senate from that State come here frankly, forced by its public opinion, or, if not forced, at least obedient, I will say, to its public opinion, and tell the assembled law-givers of the country what their needs are.

One only needs to go, as I had occasion to do a year or two ago, to the State of North Carolina to find through the agricultural portions of that State the same condition of things. South Carolina and the agricultural portions of Georgia and Alabama are in no degree different. Throughout them all, the South proper, the great heart of the body of that country called to meet the problem of illiteracy, called to meet the problem of education, called to meet it fifty years behind the advancement which the North has made in its development of it, they have to rest upon the outcome of, I will not say the uncertain, but of the certain weakness of resting upon agricultural support alone.

Mr. President, it seems to me that if you compare the actual condition of those States with the condition of the other States of the North that are not in like case to that to which I have alluded, and which are enjoying the benefits of the development of manufactures and commerce, to say nothing of comparing this body of the South with the great North, you see the enormous disadvantage under which they rest in meeting the problem of the education of their people and of the removal of the mountain of illiteracy.

The idea of this bill goes upon these two great facts, that the illiteracy exists and that the South is not possessed of the means adequate to meet it. But the argument does not stop there. It is urged that if you undertake to help the South you destroy their spirit; that you take away from them their natural force; that what they should depend on is self-help, and that if this is done you will emasculate the South of its strength and vigor. Is that true, Mr. President? Will the experience of this country bear it out? Will the universal experience of the North bear it out?

I will ask at the outset of that consideration, are the gentlemen who urge it serious or are they joking in the light of the condition of their own States? The way the problem arises was well put by the Senator from West Virginia when he said that the State first makes its grant to the local school districts, and that the officers for that purpose in each school district first take the amount of the State grant and then calculate how much they need to add to that in order to have the schools that they want; and that amount they raise by taxation. Thus it is the local school district which is the subject of this self-help. They are the ones who are to help themselves. But here you have throughout the North (for that system, I take it, everywhere prevails; I know it does in my own State, and we have it from the Senator from West Virginia that it obtains there) the local school district in every case aided and helped out of the grant from the State.

If you are to depend on self-help why not let the local district raise all the fund and give it no State aid at all. It is because of the fact that the provision for the schools is universal. It is equal everywhere. Every locality or certain number of people must have its school, and it ought to have a school just as good as every other locality. The necessities, therefore, of each district for that purpose are just as great as every other. But all parts of the State are not equally prosperous, not equally wealthy; they do not furnish equally the sources of taxation. What therefore lies at the bottom of the grants from the State Legislature as the product of their State taxation is that the taxes are raised from one part of the State to be devoted to schools of the weaker part, not so able to bear its taxation. But because the State helps the locality is self-help taken away from the locality and is it made the less able to help itself?

Go a point further. All of the Northern States have large permanent school funds, not the product at all of taxation, but the result of invested funds or of the proceeds of public lands devoted for their benefit. If the argument will hold that self-help will be destroyed by the grant proposed by this bill, then the same argument will hold and the same result of necessity must follow if grants are made from State funds, funds received from the investments of the State for their local schools.

But is that argument seriously urged here? If it be so, then to be logical and to be candid, it becomes incumbent on every State to give up its fund, to strip its people of the benefit of it, and leave them all to local taxation either by the locality or through the agency of a State taxation. It appears to me that this consideration shows the unfairness of the argument, the hollowness of it, the absurdity of it.

I know one example at least. A great deal of this argument is but mere speculation. I see quoted in the speech of the Senator from West Virginia the utterances of a number of educators, as they are called, from the Southern States, from Florida; General Armstrong, of Virginia, and others who use the self-help argument. The State of Delaware had no public-school system until it received the grant from the General Government in the distribution of the surplus in 1836. We owe the system then adopted in very large part to one of the best men this country ever produced, Willard Hall, who migrated to Delaware from Massachusetts in 1803.

After going to Congress one or two sessions he was appointed United States district judge by James Monroe in 1823, and it was my privilege to practice law before him and to know him well in the evening of his days, when he was still active on the bench, the oldest judge in this country, both in length of service and in length of years. He told me that without that grant we could have had no system established by the people at that time; that they were unwilling to tax themselves; that it was not the best law that could be had; it was not all he wanted, but it was all he could get.

Among its provisions was this, that to each district out of the annual income of this fund $125 was to be given if the district would raise $75 by taxation, but the option of raising the tax was left to the district. I was familiar with that in my time. I have seen the school meeting again and again vote on the question of tax or no tax, and no tax was too often voted and the State grant repudiated in the very districts which needed it most, in those where this question came before a population where many were illiterate, for the curse of ignorance, like that of brutishness, is that it is unconscious of itself and unconscious of its needs.

I am glad to say that within the last ten or fifteen years that feature of the law in Delaware has been changed. We have had introduced as a part of it the State and county superintendents and local institutes, the establishment of a uniform system of school books, a uniform curriculum of studies, and an examination of the qualifications of teachers, and in every way the system has been vastly improved over what it was.

But we have this testimony of experience that it was the aid of the General Government which enabled us to get as good a measure of common schools as we had and that, so far from its preventing the exercise of self-help in the State, it was the assistant without which we could not have maintained schools at all or even had a school system established and enacted; certainly not for many years after it was done. So I was told by Judge Hall.

But, Mr. President, there is another feature of this question which may as well be discussed in connection with this cognate branch of it. It is urged that this bill is unconstitutional. That is seriously urged in the face of the fact of the successive and continuous steps taken by this Government from a time prior to its origin, from the Northwestern ordinance of 1787 to the present time, in the granting of public lands and the proceeds of public lands to the new States of the West, from time to time.

As the result of those grants we have the splendid school fund of the Northwest. If this self-help of the people is destroyed by outside aid, then I ask any gentleman from those States who will vote against this bill on that ground to begin by being consistent and advocate in their States the surrender of all those proceeds back to the General Government to escape the pernicious results that came from the grants which have been made to them. Then they will be consistent; but, while they are in the enjoyment of that, with what sort of reason can they come here to us and say that you will destroy the true cause of education in the South if you are going to give any help to them? It appears to me that on the claim that this bill is unconstitutional that practice of the Government and those successive steps alone make an adequate answer.

The Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB] made his argument against this bill on the idea that Kansas was to get but about $6 for every school district, while it would be paying out a great deal more through its share of this fund which was going from the General Government. I would say to him, if he wants to be consistent, let him advocate in Kansas the turning back to the General Government of the riches in the coffers of that State which are now going to the development of its educational interests. Will he say here that Kansas, with all this aid, does not tax itself more? Is it not the pride and the boast of that State that it does raise so much by taxation notwithstanding that it gets so much from the General Government?

Let gentlemen show us a single example of where the possession of a large school fund has resulted in the deterioration of the public school spirit and system of any State, and then it will be time for us to conclude that the argument is worth considering. But until then, with all respect to the gentlemen who take this ground so seriously, I think the argument is all on the other side. "To him that hath much shall be given," and so wherever you have communities with large school funds you find that it is the concomitant if it is not the cause of the condition of appreciation of the interests of education which have led to results that are the glory of this nation.

My friend from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER] dwelt seriously on this matter. I need only turn to the picture presented by his neighboring State of Michigan, with its great school fund, with its great school system, beginning with the system of public free schools that are the envy of the land, and going up through one grade of secondary schools to another until it reaches its great university, worthy to rival its older sisters of the East and drawing to its faculty the greatest men among the teachers of our land. Take a picture like that, and then tell me that the result of national aid to education in any State is to rob its people of their force and make them indifferent to education! It is irony to urge such an argument as that in the face of this problem of the South, presented not only to them, for they can not escape it, but presented, as I have urged before, to all of the States, for it will always continue with them until this illiteracy and this want of education are removed.

It appears to me that the South has a right to ask of New England and the Western children of New England if they have gone back on the cause of education, whether they have grown indifferent to that principle in the foundation and the development of a free State.

I wish to say right here, Mr. President, that if you are going to measure the relative degrees of responsibility the South, in my opinion, is the least responsible for the problem that it has to meet. The South said, "Keep the black man in slavery;" and, as the distinguished Senator from Kansas [Mr. INGALLS] pointed out in his memorable speech a few weeks ago, the North never said otherwise until slavery ceased to be profitable.

After the black man was freed the South still said, as I have before called to the attention of the Senate, "Keep him in the subordination of freedmanism;" but the nation said "No; we are going to make this race free; we give them civil rights; we give them the suffrage right in your midst, to make them help govern you." Thus this problem was forced upon the South by the power of the General Government, by the national will and word.

I say "the South;" and I mean by that the white portion of the South. I mean by that the people of the South who own its property, the property that has to bear this burden, the burden of a tax which in its essence is communistic; for it is taking one man's property to educate another man's child. They did not ask that this be put upon them. We put it upon them, and it seems to me that, in the light of that fact and of the others I have referred to, there is the largest equity on the side of the South in saying "You should help us to solve the problem which was created against our will, and by yours."

It appears to me that I can make this appeal not only to New England, but I can make it to that child of New England, the State of Kansas, born out of the agony of the initiation of the conflict between the two sections over the extension of slavery, which has contributed all her force from that time to this in the conduct of the Government upon the same idea, and which to-day, with a school fund in its treasury and lands unsold that make an imperial domain, comes here and begrudges this pittance to the South, because, forsooth, out of her wealth and her development, or along with it, she is only going to get $6 for each school district. It seems to me that such a position will not bear examination.

Like the Senator from Wisconsin, I have no trouble about the constitutional power to enact this bill into a law. I suppose, like the contest between protection and free-trade and necessity and free will, we are going to have this class of questions with us till the end of the Government. What is the power of the nation? What that of the State? What belongs to the peculiar functions of each? But it met our people in the outset of the Government. It seems to me that it is almost idle to undertake to discuss the question at this late day, when already this bill in substantially its present shape has passed this body during the last three Congresses and largely by the vote of so many of the representatives of the Southern States; but if we go behind that I find that the earliest advocate, the one who first suggested this subject, was no other than Thomas Jefferson himself. In his second inaugural address, March 4, 1805, he spoke as follows:

The remaining revenue on the consumption of foreign articles is paid cheerfully by those who can afford to add foreign luxuries to domestic comforts; being collected on our seaboard and frontiers only and incorporated with the transactions of our mercantile citizens, it may be the pleasure and the pride of an American to ask, what farmer, what mechanic, what laborer, ever sees a tax-gatherer of the United States? These contributions enable us to support the current expenses of the Government, to fulfill contracts with foreign nations, to extinguish the native right of soil within our limits, to extend those limits, and to apply such a surplus to our public debts as places at a short day their final redemption, and that redemption once effected, the revenue thereby liberated may, by a just repartition among the States and a corresponding amendment of the Constitution, be applied, in time of peace, to rivers, canals, roads, arts, manufactures, education, and other great objects within each State.

In 1836 we had the division of the surplus among the several States by way of what was called a deposit, yet everybody knew it was a distribution, so to speak, nakedly, but in fact when that bill passed the Senate the first time it was a bill for the distribution of the surplus out and out, without any provision for its return to the General Government. Among those who voted for the bill in that shape were Henry Clay, Daniel Webster, John M. Clayton, John J. Crittenden, James Buchanan, and Thomas Ewing. On the 4th of September, 1841, an act was passed to distribute the revenue from the public lands to enable the States to pay their debts and for public improvements and education. That bill was recommended by a President in whose Cabinet Daniel Webster was Secretary of State, and it received in this body the vote of Clay, Clayton, and Berrien, and in the House of Representatives of John Quincy Adams.

It appears, therefore, that this question has again come up after having been laid at rest for so many years. The act of 1841 had but little effect, because the surplus was speedily disposed of otherwise. The revenue did not reach to an extent to maintain it and so the question passed away. Then came on the Mexican war; then a long period of relative free trade; then came the war of the rebellion; then the payment of our public debt and the meeting of the demands for pensions and other increased expenditures of the nation; and at last the whirligig of time has brought us around again to the same question.

I do not care to go into any interpretation of the text or the language of the Constitution in its attempted interpretations. It is enough for me to know that it is for the welfare of the country and that it has received the sanction and support, after consideration, of this body on this very bill in three successive Congresses, and to have had the support of the great Whig and Democratic statesmen of the past.

I believe that to-day it will be of the utmost benefit to the people of the Southern States. I believe that it will be of the utmost benefit to the entire country by its action upon the cause of education in the Southern States. The Senator from Kansas [Mr. INGALLS] in his memorable speech prescribes for the solution of the Southern problem justice. I beg to go a point further, and, I believe, deeper and more lasting and more enduring, and the only serious contribution that can be made by the people of the entire nation to the solution of that problem, and to the bringing about of the homogeneity of institutions and characteristics throughout this land, and that is education. Make the people of the South as well as the North all free American citizens, as alone they can be when their minds are armed with learning and with knowledge, as well as their hands with the ballot.

I have but one more word to add, Mr. President. After all, everybody is agreed that the common-school system should be maintained. The question is, whence and from what source? I should be glad of the day when the people of the State, the people of the locality, could best carry that themselves, but I do not believe that that day has ever existed; I do not believe that it exists now.

It has seemed to me that one misfortune which arose from our dual system of government, and a most serious one, arose out of the fact that the maximum of duties and burdens of public functions rests under that system upon the States, while they possess and enjoy a minimum of the sources of revenue. While the minimum of public functions and burdens is cast upon the Federal Government, it enjoys the most convenient system and agency of taxation and of revenue.

Mr. HOAR. In time of peace, I suppose the Senator means.

Mr. HIGGINS. Yes; I mean that to the Federal Government are given the customs and the excise, and exclusively so. The States can not enjoy them; they can not set up a tariff against one another; and if they were to attempt to impose an excise law in the proper sense of that word, an internal-revenue tax other than upon consumption, if they did it upon manufactures, it would simply drive the manufacturers out of their State into some other State that did not impose such a tax. Therefore the Federal Government has its coffers heaped to overflowing. We hardly know what to do with it. The last canvass was conducted upon the question what was to be done with it, the future and inevitable result of the exercise of this, the easiest method and the fairest method of taxation; while upon the other hand the States, the counties, the cities, the townships, the school districts, the municipalities of every character and kind, stagger along under the burdens that are heaped upon them, and heaped mainly upon the land, for we all know how difficult it is successfully and adequately to impose taxation upon investments of personal property. Thus the owner of the land is forced to bear the heavy weight of these burdens.

I do not care to carry that idea further. I simply close by saying that to my mind it is one of the grave and serious misfortunes that is a consequence of our dual form of government that this inequality of burdens and inequality of resources of revenue are distributed as they are.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. Mr. President, the consideration of the subject presented by this bill opens a wide field, and, while I intend to detain the Senate but a short time, there are some things connected with this question to which I wish to allude, which are somewhat apart from the considerations heretofore presented.

Gentlemen who have advocated this measure heretofore have done so because of a conviction that in addition to the direct aid to the States proposed there would be a resulting, consequential effect from it that might bring to the South relief and security from what has been felt to be a threatened evil of vast proportions. Education as a remedy for many social and political evils has only begun to be tried in comparatively recent years, but faith in it as a remedy for many of these has grown with experience and is now more firmly fixed in popular esteem than ever before. Only a short time since a distinguished political economist in England, in speaking of the fifty years of the reign of Queen Victoria, then just finished, said:

The spread of instruction and the diminution of crime have gone hand in hand, although the effect of educating the masses was at one time viewed with the utmost suspicion. The first who called public attention to the connection between crime and ignorance was Judge Coleridge, in 1838, whose words were echoed by the special committee of the House of Commons: "We find that the neglect of education causes much crime and expenditure that might be avoided."

Here it has been the habit to consider the common school, education, intelligence, as the real basis of the wonderful growth, prosperity, and progress of this country, and to consider the common-school system, especially of the Northern States, as their crowning glory. Whether in our enthusiasm we have not become somewhat forgetful of a great truth to which Charles Sumner gave utterance in the following words:

The true grandeur of humanity is in moral elevation, sustained, enlightened, and decorated by the intellect of man.

I will not now attempt to discuss further than to say that I fear the greater influence has been obscured to some extent by the lesser.

To me there is another consideration connected with this proposal which is exceedingly pleasant. It is sometimes asserted here that the animosities of the war are not dead; that the intense feelings incident to that struggle have crystallized into deep and settled hatred. This I am inclined to believe is true of a part of the people North and South, but a very small part; and I devoutly believe and have asserted often and do now assert again that it is the men who did not fight on either side when there was war who can not now be brought to think of peace. Those who never heard the whistle of a bullet when they had an opportunity are those for whom "grim-visaged war" can never "smoothe his wrinkled front."

Any of these "but for these vile guns would himself have been a soldier," doubtless. Here, where there are no guns, where there is no danger, their valor knows absolutely no bounds. One scarcely knows whether most to pity or despise their rant and bluster.

He whose name this bill popularly bears was a soldier of the Union, and the painful wounds he received in battle bear mute but convincing testimony of his devotion to that cause. Now that the war is over he is advocating aid not alone to the colored people of the South, but also to the children of those he met in mortal combat.

The brave are always magnanimous, and nobody who knows that Senator is surprised by his course in this matter. Whatever may be their opinions of the propriety of passing this bill, his conduct in connection with it will always command the respect and esteem of brave men everywhere—whether North or South.

On the last day the Senate was in session, in discussing the course of the North toward the South, he showed his ability to look the truth in the face and deal frankly with facts, as his words following will prove:

Now, I undertake to say that from the close of the war there has never been tendered on the part of the North in any definite, tangible form any great conspicuous act of kindness towards the people of the South. Not one. We have stood upon our legal rights. This measure is the only thing that has ever been suggested which could appeal to the better nature of the South.

But as I was saying a moment ago, no great conspicuous act of sympathy and kindness has ever been tendered from the prevailing power in the contest of arms. Why should we not try that? A most eloquent member of the Senate said a few days ago that the South had never tried justice towards the negro in the solution of the race question. I do not think that the South has tried justice fully; but the South has labored under great difficulties and many are the Northern Republicans who say openly, and still more of them secretly, that if we lived at the South we would conduct ourselves just as the South does towards the colored population, not perhaps inflicting personal violence, but that they should never attain to political equality, much less to supremacy, no matter what their numbers might be.

The Legislature of my State during its last session adopted a resolution instructing her Senators to vote against this measure, and in compliance with that instruction I shall vote.

Some years since a Legislature of the State adopted resolutions favoring national aid to education, and the entire delegation from the State has, I believe, voted for this and similar bills heretofore on several occasions. Believing it to be the duty of Representatives of States to reflect the wishes of their constituents as far as possible, in all matters not involving the violation of a constitutional obligation, I shall cheerfully comply with what seems to be an authorized expression from the people through their constituted authorities.

The change in the attitude of my State towards this bill has been caused, I believe, mainly from an apprehension that this system would ultimately lead to Federal control, or at least Federal supervision, of the school systems of the States.

I have considered such apprehensions groundless, and I stated in the House of Representatives, when a member of that body, that, in supporting a measure similar to this, I had no doubt of the power of Congress to make the appropriation, and that there was just as clearly no constitutional authority for Congress to follow the appropriation or to control afterwards the objects for which it was made.

Upon this clear conviction I supported the measure.

I confess frankly, Mr. President, that I am now, after some years of closer observation of the conduct of political parties, much less confident of the protection of a constitutional limitation than I then was, and I am not now prepared to say that the apprehensions of possible aggressions growing out of the exercise of the power to pass this bill have not some foundation, though I have no doubt that any such aggression would be unconstitutional, and I still think there is no serious danger from this quarter.

It is true it seems that we as a people are drifting away from that old-time spirit of self-reliance and independence which made our ancestors revolt from the dominion of the mother country and set up a form of government new to the world, in which it was intended that there should be the largest possible amount of personal liberty and the least possible of governmental control. But, so far from now insisting on the preservation of such a government, a government of limited and specified powers, we seem as a people to be pressing forward towards centralization.

The people everywhere are manifesting a desire to have almost everything placed under the control of Federal officials. The rights and powers of the State are disregarded and the people seem to be utterly careless of this radical change. A calamity by fire or flood or drought can scarcely overtake any locality but somebody is at once proposing some sort of action by the Federal Government for the relief of the sufferers.

The numberless branches of manufacturing interests have so regularly attended the meetings of Congress to present special interests to be "taken care of" in Federal legislation, to build up private fortunes at public expense, that it has ceased to be a subject of remark and is looked upon as simply a matter of course.

The enactment of the interstate-commerce law is followed by a demand in some quarters for Government ownership of the railroads. Others clamor for governmental supervision and control of telegraph lines, while not a few demand that the Government shall buy them outright and become a great telegraph company. Those who contemplate building ships are now clamoring for an appropriation of $100,000,000 to be presented to them out of the earnings of other people under the name of subsidies.

Another class of citizens are demanding Federal supervision of elections, while a large organization of useful and excellent men are insisting that the Government shall turn warehouse-keeper, or actually become purchaser of almost every article that any one has to sell, whether it is wanted by the Government or not. The assumption indulged in by men of ability in the early days of the Republic, that a governor of a State was of higher rank than the President of the United States, would now be considered as little short of insanity. In the midst of this unmistakable tendency it of course is proper to consider whether the passage of this bill would tend to aggravate this evil, though I confess it seems to me that there is much less of danger here than in other directions in which we hear no note of warning and no word of complaint.

I shall not now discuss at any length the constitutional power to make this appropriation. I believe the Government has the power, and whether or not the bill should pass is a question of expediency, and not one of principle.

By many of the opponents of the bill the power to appropriate money for such a purpose is conceded, but they rest their opposition upon other grounds, while I believe all, the friends and enemies of the bill alike, admit that Congress has full power to appropriate the public lands to purposes such as this, and as a necessary consequence that the proceeds of such land may be so appropriated.

The absurdity of saying that Congress can appropriate money to buy land, as in the purchase of Louisiana, for instance, and can then appropriate the land to a purpose that the money could not have been appropriated to is ridiculous, and the absurdity of such a proposition, as well as that of saying that Congress may constitutionally appropriate money found in the Treasury of the United States derived from the sale of public lands to a purpose to which the application of other money found in the same Treasury derived from some other source would be unconstitutional, is so apparent that it needs no other illustration than the mere statement of the proposition. I would never have ventured to attribute such an opinion to any one for fear of giving personal offense if it had not been avowed.

It has been asserted, and I believe never denied, that Congress has from time to time appropriated lands to the aid of schools aggregating more than a hundred millions of acres, amounting to vastly more in value than the amount contemplated in this bill, and the constitutionality of all this is not questioned; and within three days, in debating this question, the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BLAIR] has stated that up to 1869 the Western States had received of this 62,000,000 acres, while the South had received 5,000,000. Yet a number of Senators from the various States which have received all this Federal aid denounce this bill as unconstitutional. The donation to railroads of 140,000,000 acres of land, and the loaning of the credit of the Government to them in sums now amounting to $100,000,000 more, has never been declared unconstitutional by the courts.

Only two years ago Congress enacted a law providing "that, in order to aid in acquiring and diffusing among the people useful and practical information on subjects connected with agriculture," etc., $15,000 per annum should be appropriated to each State for the maintenance of agricultural experiment stations, providing that the Secretary of Agriculture of the United States should prescribe forms for keeping records, etc. This bill was passed in this body without a dissenting vote, and in a Democratic House it passed under a suspension of the rules with but 12 votes in the negative, and in each succeeding appropriation bill since then about $600,000 has been appropriated for this purpose, and no man has so much as suggested that it was unconstitutional to make these appropriations.

Our friends here who are so much exercised about the unconstitutionality of this bill, while I would not suggest that they are of the class of men who "strain at a gnat and swallow a camel," certainly strain at one gnat and swallow a number of others without any appearance of dissatisfaction.

Persons who have been more ready to pronounce judgment in this matter than to think might with profit remember that John C. Calhoun, Reverdy Johnson, John J. Crittenden, Webster, and Sam Houston had no doubt in 1847 of the power of Congress to appropriate $500,000 to the suffering poor of Ireland, and they all voted for such an appropriation.

In 1817 Calhoun, in the House, used the following language:

We granted by a unanimous vote, or nearly so, $50,000 to the distressed inhabitants of Caracas, and a very large sum at two different times to the St. Domingo refugees. If we are restricted in the use of our money to the enumerated powers, on what principle can the purchase of Louisiana be justified? To pass over many other instances, the identical power which is now the subject of discussion has in several instances been exercised. To look no further back, at the last session a considerable sum was granted to complete the Cumberland road. In reply to this uniform course of legislation I expect that it will be said that our Constitution is founded on positive and written principles, and not on precedents. I do not deny the position; but I have introduced these instances to prove the uniform sense of Congress and the country (for they have not been objected to) as to our powers; and surely they furnish better evidence of the true interpretation of the Constitution than the most refined and subtle arguments.

When this question of Federal aid to State schools was first agitated the condition of the Southern States was already attracting the anxious consideration of thoughtful, patriotic men in all sections of the Union. The conditions were such as had never surrounded any people in the history of the world and were such as might cause anxiety and the gloomiest foreboding to good men everywhere.

Out of those conditions difficulties were likely to arise which would demand for their solution the exercise of intelligence, patience, and forbearance in the dominant race, and conservatism, moderation, and good judgment in the other, the exercise in fact of the highest attainable intelligence and prudence in both races; and to-day, ten years after this agitation was fairly begun, the country is giving close attention to a debate in the Senate upon this very question and there seems to be as much diversity of opinion now as to the remedy for apprehended evils as there was at the beginning.

These conditions were not long ago set out in burning words by Henry Grady, as follows:

Note its appalling conditions. Two utterly dissimilar races on the same soil, with equal political and civil rights; almost equal in numbers, but terribly unequal in intelligence and responsibility; each pledged against fusion; one for a century in servitude to the other, and freed at last by a desolating war; the experiment sought by neither, but approached by both with doubt—these are the conditions. Under these, adverse at every point, we are required to carry these two races in peace and honor to the end.

Never, sir, has such a task been given to mortal stewardship. Never before in this Republic has the white race divided on the rights of an alien race. The red man was cut down as a weed, because he hindered the way of the American citizen. The yellow man was shut out of this Republic because he is an alien and inferior. The red man was owner of the land; the yellow man highly civilized and assimilable, but they hindered both sections and are gone. But the black man, clothed with every privilege of government, affecting but one section, is pinned to the soil, and my people commanded to make good at any hazard and at any cost his full and equal heirship of American privilege and prosperity. It matters not that every other race has been routed or excluded, without rhyme or reason. It matters not that wherever the whites and blacks have touched, in any era or in any clime, there has been irreconcilable violence. It matters not that no two races, however similar, have ever lived anywhere at any time on the same soil with equal rights in peace. In spite of these things we are commanded to make good this change of American policy which has not perhaps changed American prejudice, to make certain here what has elsewhere been impossible between whites and blacks, and to reverse under the very worst conditions the universal verdict of radical history.

Any proposition offering a reasonable solution of this problem would naturally attract the attention of those who were not blind to the surroundings of the Southern people and who feel any interest in their welfare.

The Southern States were then but just beginning to emerge from the desolation resulting from the war. The privations and self-denial of those people, the hardships they uncomplainingly endured in the struggle to rebuild desolated homes, will never be known except to those who endured them; but human history has no page showing brighter deeds of heroic devotion to duty than is unwritten save in the hearts and memories of those who bore this burden alone.

When in the midst of such a struggle the mighty arm of the United States Government made their lines "bitter with hard bondage" by compelling them to provide for the education of the negro children out of the small amounts they were able to raise for education, was it unnatural that they should be willing that the Federal Government should aid them to the extent at least that it had burdened them?

There was hope in education. The education of books and the school-house might be a help to that broader and higher education to think correctly, to value the rights and privileges of an American citizen, not for low, mean, or sordid purposes, but for the honorable privilege of earning the respect of mankind and exercising the rights as well as cheerfully assuming the burdens of American citizenship. The unaided efforts of the white and colored people of the South have accomplished much in this direction, though it must be admitted that the lapse of time has served to produce the conviction in the minds of most men that there is less of potency in the mere school education than many hoped at one time to find; and this has served to emphasize what all reflecting men have always known, that school education which does not go hand in hand with and lean upon moral improvement and advancement is a delusion and a snare.

I confess that I did hope that the leading negroes might be led to think, to think soberly, to reason in a simple, dispassionate way and sufficiently without prejudice, to understand the conditions surrounding us all, not as a result of going to school, but as a result of seeing that we wished to do for them the best that could be done.

Schools and school-books will help to solve the race problem, but they are not and can not be the most powerful agency. There must be a moral uplifting of the negro before he can be materially advanced from his present position, and this will of necessity be slow work.

This requires no demonstration. All know that the moral advancement of an individual is slow, and that of a race must be slower. To do this he must have peace, and it seems that his pretended friends do not intend that he shall have peace. Teach the negro to think, teach him that when he is sensible, moderate, and conservative his white neighbors only wish him well and will be a helper in every ambition worthy of a man, as they are and have always been, and teach him at the same time to know the truth of the following words, spoken by Mr. INGALLS in his recent speech:

Mr. President, the race to which we belong is the most arrogant and rapacious, the most exclusive and indomitable in history. It is the conquering and the unconquerable race, through which alone man has taken possession of the physical and moral world.

It is sufficient to say that either by instinct or design the Caucasian race at every step of its progress from barbarism to enlightenment has refused to mingle its blood or assimilate with the two great human families, the Mongolian and the African, and has persistently rejected adulteration; and, further and better than all this, teach him that those who undertake to incite him to murder and arson are his worst enemies; that his best friends are those with whom he comes daily in contact, who employ him, who do him justice, but who will not be ruled by him, but insist that for his good as well as their own the intelligence of the country must govern it, you will have done him a great kindness and will have shown him the only practical way of working out the best interest of both races in the South.

The following, which I find reported in the papers of this city as the expressions of a colored man from North Carolina in the recent convention of colored men held in this city, is full of wisdom, and such sentiments will meet with a warm response among the whole people of the South, who will gladly meet sensible, conservative colored men in an honest and patriotic endeavor to work out the best results for both races:

What is the use of the white men of the North jeering the white men of the South for their restlessness and annoyance at the prospect of an aggravated political race conflict? The world knows no body of white men on earth, especially of Anglo-Saxon extraction, would do otherwise. Is it done from principle or is it done for party purpose? If principle underlies the act, let philosophy inquire: What has wiped out party lines in the South and crystallized the white population of that section as it is in no other civilized land on earth? If party diplomacy dictates this line of conduct in our governmental affairs, the scorn of an outraged nation should scorpion-lash them from the face of the earth.

It is plain, perfectly plain, that the sole purpose of the incendiary speeches on this subject in Congress and out of Congress is an effort to accomplish partisan purposes. Such expressions as were used recently by the Senator from Kansas can have no effect except to excite and aggravate the evils at the South, and it must be with the hope and purpose of reaping political advantages at the North that he said:

The South is sitting on a safety-valve. They are breeding innumerable John Browns and Nat. Turners. Already mutterings of discontent by hostile organizations are heard. The use of the torch and the dagger is advised. I deplore it, but as God is my judge I say that no other people on the face of this earth have ever submitted to the wrongs, the injustice, which have been for twenty-five years heaped upon the colored men of the South without revolution and blood. [Applause in the galleries.]

I agree with the colored man whose words I have quoted, that such conduct deserves "the scorn of an outraged nation."

To stir up old animosities is always an easy thing to do. To respond harshly to unjust attacks is always a temptation, but I know full well that the purpose of this inflammatory style of speaking is to arouse sectional feeling, to "fire the Northern heart" and exasperate the South, and that harsh and intemperate language used here by Southern men only aids those whose trade it is to live on their country's misfortunes, who ride into place and power upon bitter sectional animosities that the good men of both sections deplore.

The conditions we have to deal with are difficult enough without having marplots and incendiaries make them more so. The best interests of white and black people lie in exactly the same direction. The interests of all demand the cultivation of the best possible feeling between the races and of even and exact justice to all. If the white men of the South prosper the colored people must, and vice versa. We in that section are joined for better or for worse; we are inseparable, and must prosper or suffer together.

I grew up to manhood on a plantation; have lived amongst colored people all my life. I know them well, and no man living feels more keenly than I do a sincere desire for their prosperity, success, and happiness. They are peace-loving, quiet, and happy when let alone; but, like all other emotional, superstitious, ignorant people, they are easily influenced by agitators. Like such people everywhere, they are fond of excitements and agitations, and when under the influence of great excitement they are likely sometimes to be troublesome.

Unscrupulous, selfish men, willing to advance their own personal interests by any means, good or bad, taking advantage of these weaknesses of these people, use them often to their own hurt. This class is small, and is composed of "white trash" and bad negroes. These are responsible for ninety-nine-one-hundredths of all the troubles growing up in the South.

The great mass of colored people live in peace, quiet, and contentment, with only the same causes of complaint that white people similarly situated have, and no more; and all that they and the South need is to be allowed in peace and quietness to work out their own destiny. The colored people can and will help in this work if the agitators will only leave them alone and stop their nefarious practices.

That some of these people are learning to think and to take, not only a patriotic and calm, but also perfectly clear, view of some things bearing upon their situation, is shown by the following, which is an editorial clipped entire from a recent issue of a newspaper owned and edited by colored men in Little Rock:

The colored people of the South have had another set-back. The speech of Senator INGALLS will have the effect of causing many of the Southern whites to distrust and fear the old confidential colored servants that they have for so many years trusted and loved. The assertion that the white people of the South are sleeping over a volcano is something that the colored people of the South are not thinking about, or would not but for the meddlesome whites, and colored men, too, of the North. It is true that our people in the South, in many sections of the country, have more or less trouble; but show us a section of the country where they don't have these race troubles, and when they do occur we would like to know when it was that the colored people did not get the worst of it.

The majority of the Northern whites are the natural enemies of the blacks, while the white people of the South, especially the older ones, are their natural friends, and but for the fact that such men as INGALLS are continually throwing fire brands among us we would live in perfect peace. There is no deep-seated hatred between the races here, but there is a feeling among the white race that they will not allow the black race to control them—politically. And we would like to know where there is a spot, North or South, where the whites do not entertain these same views. Gentlemen, you can't help us any, and why don't you let us alone? Why do you continue to make it hard for us when you can do us no good?

I hoped that such clear views of the truth would gradually find their way into the minds of all colored people with increasing intelligence, until a clear understanding of the truth would make the solution of what is now difficult, easy. If we are let alone, if we can be quiet, if we can have rest from the bad elements in both sections, the turbulent spirits in the South, exasperated by fancied or real wrong, and the incendiary demagogues at the North seeking for political advantages in the trouble and unrest of the country, we can and will work out the solution of the difficulties to the best interests of both the white and black people and of the entire country.

Progress has been made, a clearer understanding of the rights and duties of all is growing up. Prejudice against the negro is not peculiar to Southern people nor confined to the South, but obtains everywhere and is less violent with us than at the North; and whether existing North or South it can not be overcome by force, and every effort in that direction only intensifies the difficulty and postpones the day of possible freedom from it. Prejudice like this can be met in but one way—it must be lived down; a long course of good conduct, upright business methods, attention to business, industry, manliness, soberness, self-respect, and courtesy will mitigate it, and in the course of time wear it away, and with such conduct on the part of the colored people now the prejudice as it exists will do no harm.

At one time in the history of the South we were subjected to outrages that now seem to honorable, fair-minded gentlemen North as incredible. We could not get justice because we were systematically lied about and the belief was common that we were all cut-throats and villains.

The speeches in Congress now indicate a return to these methods. The most monstrous statements of outrages in the South are now finding their way into the RECORD. Even to the most extreme cases there is only a shadow of foundation.

The South is, in proportion to population, as quiet and peaceful as any part of the country. There are elsewhere there is sometimes an act of lawlessness. When these occur, I assert that they are as heartily condemned and by as large a proportion of the community as in other sections of the Union; but, unfortunately for us, when such an instance occurs it is in the most reckless manner exaggerated and magnified, and based upon one or two such unfortunate circumstances; some miserable slanderer, compared to whom Munchausen was the embodiment of truth, steals a statement before the public that "political murder seems to be 'a pastime' and a 'nigger hunt,' as a sport, is as exhilarating as the old-time 'fox hunt.'"

These falsehoods are of the grossest and basest sort, but I hope that it is now impossible to deceive the country as was done formerly. Millions of dollars of Northern capital are flowing into the Southern States. The men who own and the men who manage all this wealth are interested to know the truth. They are business men. They want good government and justice, and the ravings of mere political adventurers will not deceive these nor lead them into the attitude of acquiescing in this campaign of misrepresentation and slander. They will break the force of these infamous falsehoods and will cause them, I hope, to fall harmless to the ground.

We, whose lives must be spent in the midst of these people and who must of necessity feel the difficulties of the situation more keenly than those who only consider them from afar, have hoped for aid in this exigency from the education of the colored people. We hoped that with intelligence might come conservatism, prudence, and a proper respect for the rights of others; but to my mind nothing is clearer than that schools and school-teaching alone will not reach the evil. There must be a broader education, and the necessity for this is clearly demonstrated now. But it is not in the power of the Government to give this.

Education, after all, is not merely what is learned in schools and in books. This is only one of the means of real education. The education that makes character is that which is taught by the mothers in the ceaseless admonitions from infancy up to maturity; is that formation of intellect and principles, moral character, that makes a man in God's own image or degrades him to the level of a brute. Manliness, honor, integrity, firmness of purpose, self-denial, and self-devotion, while strengthened by a liberal education, are not created by it. An educated man without moral principles and moral convictions is only worse by reason of his education and has the greater power of evil thereby. Moral development and elevation is the great need of the negro race.

There are amongst them many men of honorable character, men who are a credit to themselves and an honor to their race. These men feel this great need of their people more keenly than we do—are earnestly striving to elevate them—but leaders in moral advancement are too often not popular with those less advanced than themselves; unpleasant truths are not sought for by the average man, and it is unfortunately true that amongst all men those who seek to please the populace are listened to more readily than those who, from a sense of duty, "tell the truth."

A quarter of a century after emancipation it ought not to be true, but it is, that many negro ministers are by their example teachers of vice and the grossest immorality, while pretending to teach virtue from the pulpit. It should not now be the case that many favorite preachers are ex-penitentiary convicts, but it is unfortunately the truth. These people must be aided to elevate themselves, and this can be best done by "good and holy men of God" who know them and their characteristics.

Elevated morals, coupled with intelligence, are to be the sheet-anchor of this form of government. It requires no argument to prove that if the ignorant, depraved, and vicious class obtain and hold control in this country this form of government will at once be wrecked. The virtue and intelligence of the country must guide and control it if we preserve it, and when these are likely to be overrun by vice and ignorance we must either educate and improve that class or disfranchise it.

Advancement, permanent, enduring advancement, can not come except by cultivating and developing both virtue and intelligence. You can not develop the high moral character necessary to the safety of a Government like this without a high degree of intelligence, nor can you advance intelligence to an enduring point without a corresponding moral advancement.

When our common-school system was in its formative period our social condition as a people was such that there was no necessity for any religious and really but little for moral training in the schools, because religion and morals were taught in the churches and in the homes. The mothers, being of the highest and noblest type of womanhood, did that work better and more effectually than it could have been done anywhere else; hence our common schools were directed to the spread of intelligence, while the mothers taught religion and morals at home.

This, to my mind, indicates the fatal defect in this proposition and accounts for what is considered now by many persons to be the failure of education to do anything for the negro race.

Many of them have made creditable advancement, but the feeling is general that there has been no such elevation and advancement of the race as was expected from the efforts made for education.

Of course, the State can not now undertake to perform for these unfortunate people the offices our mothers performed for us, and I do not advocate it; on the contrary, I would vigorously oppose it. Yet, while considering the difficulties of this situation, I wish to call attention to what seems to me to have been up to this time a great omission on the part of the christian churches in the South. While they have been engaged in carrying the gospel to foreign lands the finest field for missionary work has been lying at their doors. It is a fine field because these people already have the foundation—a belief in Christ—and what they need is help to attain a higher moral plane.

A friend has written me that I have been recently made to say in a newspaper that this great work ought to be done by Northern missionaries, and it is proper that I say here now that, while I recognize the push and energy of the Northern people, they have not one whit more of that, than their Southern brethren, and that Southerners, knowing the negro characteristics better than Northern people, would make more efficient missionaries among the colored people and would produce much less friction in the work.

I am glad to see that the church is waking up to this great interest, this great necessity. The Catholics are moving as a body. That church, with its solemn forms, its pomp and methods of church government, will make a wonderful impression on the negro mind, and the great Protestant churches must begin to occupy this field, which is "white unto the harvest," or they will miss a glorious opportunity.

The Southern States are, by their own efforts, solving the question of local education. The difficulties of their situation are lessening as the struggle goes on. The schools are not yet even approaching what they should be, but the progress made gives assurance that a continuation of the efforts made will be crowned with triumphant success. The last report of the superintendent of public instruction for Arkansas shows that the following have been the amounts in the treasury for school purposes for each school year for the last nine years:

Year ending June—	Year ending June—
1880.....$285,471.91	1885.....$1,199,065.82
1881.....710,461.88	1886.....1,327,710.00
1882.....502,450.48	1887.....1,333,147.30
1883.....740,244.22	1888.....1,383,909.99
1884.....963,660.39

And for the year ending June, 1889, as the superintendent, Hon. W. E. Thompson, writes me, the amount is $1,433,696.77.

The superintendent says:

The increase of the school population and the enrollment in the public schools is equal to the increase in the revenue.

Again he says:

A fact to which I wish to call your attention is, there is no State in the Union which pays more for education in proportion to her taxable property than is paid by Arkansas. * * * It would be truly gratifying as I have before stated if I could report a perfect work being done; that we are doing all that can be done under existing circumstances, and that the best results are being obtained from the funds expended; but candor compels me to say this is not the case. We are not doing the work as it needs to be done, especially in the country districts, where three-fourths of the children live; the limited terms and limited means fail to meet the demands of the requirements necessary to educate these children that they may become practical, intelligent citizens in the near future.

Thus it would seem that while the State unaided has not yet been able to put her schools upon a satisfactory basis, she has made the most wonderful progress and we may reasonably calculate that if we are permitted to go on with the work we can accomplish the ends desired; and that if we are not to be allowed to manage our own affairs in peace the appropriation of this money will do no good. Schools flourish in peace and only in peace, and if the purpose of the dominant party here is that we shall have no peace in the South, efforts to build up schools are utterly useless. The majority here has it in its power to destroy us. Some things indicate such an intention. We can only wait and see.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole, and the question is on the first amendment reported by the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. HARRIS. There are some House bills and messages that have been sent to the Senate, and I should be glad if they were laid before the body.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will lay before the Senate bills from the House of Representatives for reference.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 3872) to amend section 2599 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, designating ports of delivery in the district of Michigan, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The bill (H. R. 5179) fixing the rate of interest to be charged on arrearages of general and special taxes now due the District of Columbia if paid within the time specified was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

ECKINGTON AND SOLDIERS' HOME RAILWAY COMPANY.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 157) to amend the charter of the Eckington and Soldiers' Home Railway Company.

Mr. HARRIS. I have examined the amendment of the other House and I ask that it be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment of the House of Representatives will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the amendment, as follows:

Add the following as a new section:
"Sec. 6. That this act shall be considered as an amendment to the act of June 19, 1888, granting a charter to the Eckington and Soldiers' Home Railroad, and shall be construed as being subject to all limitations and conditions of said original act except as specifically provided otherwise herein."

Mr. HARRIS. If the Senate bill did not mean exactly that, it ought to have meant it, and I think it did. I move the concurrence of the Senate in the House amendment.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I wish the Senator would allow that to go over until to-morrow morning and let the amendment be printed.

Mr. HARRIS. Certainly, if the Senator desires. Just let it lie on the table until to-morrow morning and let the amendment be printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be printed.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The point to which I wish to call attention is whether it is possible that this amendment will give authority to this railway company to extend any overhead electrical wires into this city. I wish to be sure about that.

Mr. HARRIS. I will state to the Senator from Vermont that in express terms the Senate bill provides that if, in the branch allowed by the bill, electric wires or cables are used they shall be placed under ground.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What is the necessity of this amendment, then, that the House of Representatives has put on?

Mr. HARRIS. I do not see any. It simply declares that this branch shall be subject to all the conditions of the original act as to taxation and all other regulations. I think the Senate bill means exactly that without the amendment. Hence the amendment is wholly innocent and I am perfectly willing to have the Senate concur in it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let it go over and be printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will lie on the table and be printed.

CHRIST CHURCH LAND IN WASHINGTON.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 296) vesting in the vestry of Christ Church, Washington Parish, District of Columbia, all of the right, title, and interest of the United States of America in and to square south of square 1092, in the city of Washington, District of Columbia; and it was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

ANACOSTIA AND POTOMAC RIVER RAILROAD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1083) to amend the act giving the approval and sanction of Congress to the route and termini of the Anacostia and Potomac River Railroad in the District of Columbia; which was, in line 14, after the word "street," to insert:

Provided, That so much of the act of August 1, 1888, as authorized the company herein named to lay its tracks on Seventh street east, between M street and G, is hereby repealed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment of the House of Representatives will be referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia and printed, if there be no objection.

Mr. HAWLEY. It is hardly necessary to print 1,950 copies of the amendment. The parties in interest tell me that the amendment is immaterial, and they are perfectly willing to take the bill with the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Connecticut moves that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House of Representatives.

Mr. HAWLEY. Please let it lie on the table until the Senator from Virginia [Mr. BARBOUR] returns.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill with the amendment will lie on the table without being printed.

FLORIDA LANDS.

Mr. CALL. I ask unanimous consent that the resolutions I introduced some time ago, calling for information from the Interior Department in reference to alleged unlawful selections of land in Florida, and upon which I addressed the Senate, may be referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair thinks that order was made at the time, at the close of the Senator's speech.

Mr. CALL. I think it was not made.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If not made, the resolutions will be so referred.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 140) to prevent the introduction of contagious diseases from one State to another, and for the punishment of certain offenses, with amendments in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. 5667) to amend an act to authorize the construction of a bridge across Trail Creek in the city of Michigan City, Ind.; and

A bill (H. R. 5682) to amend an act entitled "An act to constitute Columbus, Ohio, a port of delivery and to extend the provisions of the act of June 10, 1890, entitled 'An act to amend the statutes in relation to the immediate transportation of dutiable goods, and for other purposes,' to said port of Columbus, Ohio," approved February 9, 1889.

The message further announced that the House had agreed to the resolution of the Senate authorizing the joint investigation of the workings of the laws of the United States relative to immigration of foreigners into the United States, with an amendment in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

AID TO COMMON SCHOOLS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 185) to aid in the establishment and temporary support of common schools.

Mr. BLAIR rose.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chief Clerk will state the first amendment reported by the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. BLAIR. That is what I was about to ask.

The first amendment was, in section 1, line 21, after the word "shall," to strike out "go to increase the amount for distribution among the other States and the Territories as herein provided" and insert "be covered into the Treasury;" so as to read:

And if any State, by its Legislature, shall decline or relinquish its share or proportion under this act, or any portion thereof, the sum so relinquished shall be covered into the Treasury.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 2, line 6, after the words "United States," to insert "except as provided in the fifteenth section;" so as to read:

Sec. 2. That such money shall annually be divided among and paid out in the several States and Territories, and in the District of Columbia, in that proportion which the whole number of persons in each who, being of the age of ten years and over, can not write, bears to the whole number of such persons in the United States, except as provided in the fifteenth section.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 6, line 6, after the word "laws," to strike out the following words:

And copies of all school-books authorized by the school boards or other authorities of the respective States and Territories, and used in the schools of the same, shall be filed with the Secretary of the Interior.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. HAWLEY. The amendment strikes out that clause from the pending bill?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. So the Chair understands.

Mr. BLAIR. It does.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, to strike out section 7, as follows:

Sec. 7. That the money appropriated and apportioned under the provisions of this act to the use of any Territory shall be applied to the use of common and industrial schools therein, under the direction of the Legislature thereof.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, to add at the end of section (9) 8 the following:

But nothing in this section shall require the training of persons of different colors in the same schools.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. This concludes the amendments reported by the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. BLAIR. I will ask that the numbering of the sections be corrected so as to correspond with the amendments which have been made.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The necessary changes in the enumeration of the sections will be made by the Secretary. Are there further amendments to the bill, as in Committee of the Whole? If there are none, the bill will be reported to the Senate.

Mr. BLAIR. Several Senators have indicated a desire to speak on the bill before it is reported to the Senate.

Mr. PUGH. Let it be reported to the Senate.

Mr. BLAIR. I have no objection to its being reported to the Senate.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

Mr. HARRIS. I am not quite sure that the Senate is ready to have the bill reported to the Senate. Is it the school bill?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is.

Mr. HARRIS. I desire to suggest to the Senator from New Hampshire that in my opinion it would be wise for us to come to an understanding now that on a given hour of a given day (I care not how soon, so that the whole Senate may understand it) a vote shall be taken upon all proposed amendments and upon the final passage of the bill. Will the Senator suggest such an hour of such a day?

Mr. BLAIR. I should be glad to try to do that to-morrow. Some six or seven Senators have indicated a desire and purpose to speak on the bill, and I am not in a situation now to indicate, by fixing a day and hour, the limit which they may have in expressing themselves upon the subject.

Mr. HARRIS. Will the Senator probably do so to-morrow?

Mr. BLAIR. I think I can do so to-morrow. My particular purpose now is to state to the Senate that, as all at once this bill will be disposed of, if Senators have anything to say it is time to be thinking about it, and not to be wasting the time.

Mr. HARRIS. Hence the importance of fixing an early day at which we shall dispose of it.

Mr. BLAIR. Another speech may be made to-night. The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY] told me last week that if the bill should be postponed he would speak to-day. He tells me that not only he will not speak to-day, but he may not to-morrow.

Mr. HAWLEY. I think the Senator should let me speak for myself on little matters of this kind.

Mr. BLAIR. Certainly; when the Senator has the opportunity.

Mr. HAWLEY. I am much obliged to the Senator, but I take it as rather personal. I wish to remark that I did not say I would not speak to-morrow, but on the whole I am inclined to say now that I shall not, and for this reason: As near as I can find, there are five more Senators to speak, and four of them are favorable to the bill. I am the only one opposed to it now upon the list. I do not propose to leave four Senators to speak in favor of the bill after me. I can not say much, but I do not propose to have four follow me in favor of the bill.

Mr. BLAIR. I think it very reasonable that the Senator should not speak to-morrow if others are to speak for the bill. The Senator from New York [Mr. EVARTS] is to close the debate. It has been understood that he will close the debate for the bill. I do not know just how much time he will want, but I think other Senators who desire to speak one way or the other ought to be in readiness to go on to-morrow at 2 o'clock, so that we can see what progress is made; and I should think that to-morrow we might probably be able to at least see the day when we can take final action upon the measure.

Mr. HARRIS. I shall appeal to the Senator from New Hampshire to-morrow to let us come to an understanding as to the hour and the day when the vote shall be taken upon this bill; and in order that we may dispose of it for this evening I will move that the Senate do now proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The pending question on the bill is, Will the Senate concur in the amendments made as in the Committee of the Whole?

Mr. HARRIS. I beg to say to the Chair that I interrupted the report of the bill to the Senate in order to prevent its being reported to the Senate this evening. If the Chair did not understand me, that was my object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The order, then, will be reconsidered, and the bill is in Committee of the Whole. The Senator from Tennessee moves that the Senate do now proceed to the consideration of executive business.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, March 10, 1890.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday was read and approved.

IMMIGRATION.

Mr. OWEN, of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Select Committee on Immigration and Naturalization I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the Senate concurrent resolution which I now send to the desk.

Mr. BAKER. I call for the special order.

Mr. OWEN, of Indiana. I hope the gentleman will yield for a moment. The committee recommend the adoption of this resolution, which will take but a short time.

Mr. BAKER. Very well.

The SPEAKER. The resolution will be read, subject to objection.

The concurrent resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Senate Committee on Immigration and the House Committee on Immigration and Naturalization be, and hereby are, authorized jointly to investigate the workings of the various laws of the United States and of the several States relative to immigration from foreign countries to the United States, especially the law of Congress "to regulate immigration," approved August 3, 1882; and also to investigate the workings of the contracts made by the Secretary of the Treasury under said law of August 3 with the various State commissions, boards, and officers, the investigation to be conducted at such times and places as said committees may deem proper. And the committees are hereby authorized jointly, as full committees or through subcommittees thereof, to send for and examine persons, books, and papers, and to administer oaths to witnesses.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the concurrent resolution?

There was no objection.

Mr. OWEN, of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, there is an amendment recommended, which I also send to the desk.

The SPEAKER. The amendment will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by adding, after the word "officers," in line 10, these words:

"And also investigate the effect on immigration, and incidentally on American workmen, which is likely to follow the purchase of American industries by foreign capitalists, and also to report to Congress the official correspondence in the proposal to make Bedloe's [Liberty] Island, in the harbor of New York, an immigrant depot, what title the Government has to such island, what buildings, if any, are intended to be built on said island, and what officers and employees it is designed to employ thereon in connection with such immigration, and whether in the opinion of the committee, after investigation, such island is the best and most suitable place for such immigrant depot."

The amendment was agreed to.

The concurrent resolution as amended was agreed to.

EXPENSES OF PROPOSED INVESTIGATION OF IMMIGRATION.

Mr. OWEN, of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I also ask unanimous consent for the consideration of a resolution which provides for the payment of the expenses of the investigation just ordered, but which could not be incorporated in the Senate concurrent resolution.

The SPEAKER. The resolution will be read, subject to objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That $5,000, or so much thereof as may be needed, is hereby appropriated, out of the contingent fund of the House, to be expended by and under the direction of the Sergeant-at-Arms of the House, to pay the expenses of the House Committee on Immigration and Naturalization in the joint investigation of the working of the Federal immigration laws by the Senate Committee on Immigration and the House Committee on Immigration and Naturalization, as authorized by Senate concurrent resolution.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. GROUT. I object.

Mr. OWEN, of Indiana. I ask the gentleman to withdraw his objection for a moment; it will take but a short time.

Mr. GROUT. This day is set apart under the rules for District business.

Mr. OWEN, of Indiana. But this will take but a few moments.

Mr. GROUT. It would take but a short time to get through with the District business, if we could have our time uninterrupted.

Mr. SPINOLA. Mr. Speaker—

Mr. OWEN, of Indiana. This provides for the payment of the investigation. This is also an inquiry into Bedloe's Island for an immigrant depot.

Mr. GROUT. Is this a part of the resolution just considered?

Mr. OWEN, of Indiana. It is a necessary sequence of the resolution just adopted.

Mr. GROUT. Is there likely to be a discussion?

Mr. OWEN, of Indiana. I think not.

Mr. CANNON. What is the object of this—to pay out of the contingent fund the expenses of the investigation?

Mr. OWEN, of Indiana. Yes, sir. The committee needs this to pay the expenses.

Mr. GROUT. If there is no discussion I withdraw the objection.

Mr. CANNON. Is it proposed to pay the expenses of both committees out of the contingent fund of the House?

Mr. OWEN, of Indiana. No; only the expenses of the House committee.

Mr. KILGORE. I object, and demand the regular order.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HOPKINS. On Thursday last I was sick, and the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries lost its place on the call of the committees. I now ask unanimous consent that it be restored to its privileged condition.

Mr. CUMMINGS. I object.

GENERAL HORACE BOUGHTON.

The SPEAKER. The first business before the House is the bill (H. R. 3954) granting an increase of pension to General Horace Boughton, the previous question having been ordered on last Friday evening. The Clerk will read the bill.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Horace Boughton, late a brevet brigadier-general in the Army of the United States, at the rate of $100 per month, said pension to be in lieu of that which he now receives.

The SPEAKER. The previous question was ordered, with the right to offer amendments, with thirty minutes for debate. Does any gentleman desire to offer an amendment?

Mr. KERR, of Iowa. I move to strike out $100 and insert the amount allowed by law. How much does he now receive?

Mr. BAKER. He now receives $72.

Mr. KERR, of Iowa. And insert $72. I think it is a mistake to pass so many private bills, increasing the pensions of officers. We need all the money in the Treasury to provide for the welfare of a large number of men who are not now pensioned; and I consider it my duty, and it is the duty of this House, to resist every attempt to make a special feature of increasing the pensions of officers. There is no reason alleged; that is, there are no especial reasons given why this man should have more than the amount now allowed by law. He does not require any especial attention. If he did he would come under the provisions of the general law that we passed the other day, providing $100 a month for persons who need attendance or who need medical attendance and the attendance of another person. Therefore, I do not think this bill ought to pass, or any of that class of bills. The general law on the subject is ample to provide for this class of cases, and passing so many of these bills endangers the chances of pensioning other men and of having the money to provide for their pensions.

Mr. BAKER. The gentlemen from Iowa says that no reasons are given for this proposed increase. Now, he simply has not read the report or he does not know what he is talking about. The fullest and amplest reasons are given in the report in favor of the bill. It is on a par with every one of the four or five cases which have been passed increasing pensions from $72 to $100 a month. This case is one of the most pitiable that can be found. General Boughton enlisted from my city and was one of the first to answer when the call for volunteers was made. He is utterly helpless, requiring daily medical attendance, and daily and nightly care and attendance, and he is in a painful condition that is indescribable.

I wish, Mr. Speaker, the Clerk would read the report. It is only an inch long and gives the statement of the physician who now attends on General Boughton.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 3954) granting an increase of pension to General Horace Boughton, submit the following report:

General Boughton is now in receipt of a pension at $72 a month for paralysis incurred while serving as colonel One hundred and forty-third Regiment New York Volunteers.

The bill proposes to increase his pension to $100. In support of the same the certificate of his attending physician, Dr. F. Donohue, has been filed with your committee, as follows:

"I am the attending physician of General Horace Boughton, and I hereby certify that he is a total wreck, mentally and physically. His condition is such as to require medical attendance daily and the constant attention and assistance of an attendant. His body is paralyzed to such an extent that he can neither dress nor undress himself, can not cut his food or feed himself, and can not help himself in any way while attending to the calls of nature. So far as his mental faculties are concerned, it may be said that he is imbecile. Right side of brain and left side of body paralyzed. He is sometimes unconscious of surroundings, and will respond to calls of nature wherever he may be at the time and regardless of who may be present.

"I have known General Boughton since 1870. He was paralyzed in 1875, and his disease has been progressing until it has reached its present deplorable stage. He requires an attendant to dress, undress, and feed him, and to lead him and render him other attentions. Of recent years he has become a confirmed epileptic, resulting from the condition of his brain, and he requires the almost daily attention of the doctor. His case is a bad one, it being a combination of mental imbecility and physical disability."

The condition above described will, in the opinion of your committee, warrant the granting of the relief asked for, and the bill is therefore returned with the recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. KERR, of Iowa. This is evidently a meritorious case; but I wish to ask the gentleman from New York [Mr. BAKER] one question. Why does this case under this statement not come under the provisions of the general law that we passed the other day?

Mr. MORRILL. If the gentleman from New York will allow me, as I am familiar with that bill, I will explain to the gentleman from Iowa why it does not come under the provisions of the general law. The act that passed the other day only increased pensions from $50 to $72 per month for those who require regular aid and attendance of another person. This is one of those cases which not only requires the regular aid and attendance of a nurse, but also of a physician a large part of the time. General Boughton was a distinguished general in the Army, and it seems to me that for the few weeks that he can live the Government ought not to withhold a reasonable support from him.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Will the gentleman from Kansas permit me to ask him a question? Is there any doubt that the condition of General Boughton was caused by his military service?

Mr. MORRILL. None whatever; and there is no doubt that a few months must end his existence. I was told a day or two ago that for three nights his wife had not had her clothes off, and that he had taken medicine enough to kill many strong men.

Mr. ALLEN, of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, this is a case in which we can not use the apothecary's scales. The increased pension asked should undoubtedly be paid to this distinguished general for the little time of life he has remaining.

Mr. KERR, of Iowa. Why not? Why apply the apothecary's scale to every man and not apply it in such cases as these?

Mr. CUTCHEON. If the gentleman from Iowa will permit me, I will state that this man not only requires the special attendance of a nurse daily, but also requires the daily attendance of a physician; and all this expense, to say nothing of the pain he endures, is the result of his service to the country.

The amendment proposed by Mr. KERR, of Iowa, was rejected.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BAKER moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

SHORTENING TIME OF IMPRISONMENT IN JAIL AND WORK-HOUSE.

Mr. GROUT. Mr. Speaker, I call up for consideration the bill (S. 1858) to shorten the terms of imprisonment in the jail and in the work-house of the District of Columbia on account of good conduct during confinement.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That all persons sentenced to and imprisoned in the jail or in the work-house of the District of Columbia, and confined there on and after the 1st day of January, A. D. 1890, for a term of one month or longer, who conduct themselves so that no charge of misconduct shall be sustained against them, shall have a deduction of five days in each month made from the term of their sentence, and shall be entitled to their discharge so much the sooner, upon the certificate of the warden of the jail for those confined in the jail, and the certificate of the intendant of the Washington Asylum for those confined in the work-house, of their good conduct during their imprisonment (with the approval of the judge making the commitment); and it shall be the duty of said judge to write, or cause to be written, in the docket of his court, across the face of the commitment of the person to be so discharged, the following words: "Discharged by order of the court [giving date] on account of good conduct during imprisonment."

SEC. 2. That all acts and parts of acts inconsistent with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed.

Mr. GROUT. This bill is identical with the House bill, on which a report has been made.

Mr. DUNNELL. I would like to hear the reading of the report.

Mr. GROUT. Of course the report may profitably be read; but I think it is a proposition that commends itself so apparently to the judgment and conscience of every one, and it is the practice now in almost all the States, if not in all of them.

Mr. DUNNELL. How does it compare with the time allowed in the States?

Mr. GROUT. I do not know how it compares with the State laws. It is not less than in the States. I do not think it necessary really to consume the time of the House with the reading of the report, but I have no objection to its being read.

Mr. DUNNELL. I withdraw the request for the reading of the report.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, House bill 5940, of the same title, will be laid on the table.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

CHRIST CHURCH, WASHINGTON, D. C.

Mr. GROUT. I now call up the bill (H. R. 3296) vesting in the vestry of Christ Church, Washington Parish, District of Columbia, all of the right, title, and interest of the United States of America in and to square south of square 1092, in the city of Washington, District of Columbia, and, Mr. Speaker, I will ask for the reading of the report on this bill.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman desire the Senate bill to be considered?

Mr. GROUT. Yes. I will ask that the Senate bill, which is identical with the House bill, be considered.

The Clerk read the title, as follows:

A bill (S. 296) vesting in the vestry of Christ Church, Washington Parish, District of Columbia, all of the right, title, and interest of the United States of America in and to square south of square 1092, in the city of Washington, District of Columbia.

Mr. HOLMAN. I would like the report read.

Mr. GROUT. This is a bill which would grant any right, title, or interest, whether legal or equitable, of the United States in this square, and would therefore require to be considered in Committee of the Whole, and I ask unanimous consent that it be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. No point of order has been made.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I hope that the point of order will be reserved until after the report shall have been read.

The SPEAKER. The point of order not having been made, the bill will now be considered in the House.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask that the report be read, and that the point of order be reserved.

The report was read, as follows:

The committee have examined the bill and think the following amendment should be made: In line 9, after the word "Parish" insert "otherwise called the vestry of Washington Parish." With this amendment the committee beg to submit the Senate report on a like bill.

Senate report is as follows, and we make it a part of our report:

"The committee to whom this bill was referred sent the same to the commissioners of the District of Columbia, who requested the United States attorney for the District of Columbia and Col. John M. Wilson, United States Army, in charge of public buildings and grounds, to examine the bill and to report their opinion thereon. The commissioners have returned the bill with the recommendation that it pass, which recommendation is based upon the accompanying reports of the said district attorney and Colonel Wilson.

"This bill is framed to vest all of the title of the United States to square south of square 1002, in the city of Washington, in the vestry of Christ Church, District of Columbia, who are, by mesne conveyance, purchasers from the original proprietors of this whole square—George Walker and William Young. The following are extracts from the District Attorney's report:

"All the proprietors of the lands upon which the city of Washington was laid out, with few exceptions, conveyed their holdings to two trustees, Thomas Beall, of George, and John M. Gantt, upon trusts, that a "Federal city" should be laid out upon them. The portion of the deed which affects the present inquiry provides for an equal division of all the building squares between the original proprietors and the commissioners appointed under the act of Congress establishing the temporary and permanent seal of the Government, the parts falling to the commissioners on the division to be sold and the proceeds applied to the erection of the public buildings.

"George Walker and William Young's heirs were the proprietors of tracts adjoining each other, and part of each of these tracts, in unequal proportions, were included within the limits of this square.

"The individual account of Walker with the commissioners (page 187) shows that he is charged with lots 2 and 3 in this square, amounting to 37,621½ square feet; his original holding in the square was 14,727½ square feet, and of this the commissioners were entitled to one-half; the difference in his favor on this transaction is made up in favor of the commissioners by allowances from his interest in other squares.

"The individual account of William Young's heirs with the commissioners shows (page 215) that they are charged with lots 1 and 4 in this square, containing 25,142½ square feet; their original holding was 48,036 square feet, of which the commissioners were entitled to one-half, and the difference in their favor in the transaction is made up in favor of the commissioners by deductions from their interest in other squares.

"The above facts, in connection with the further entry in the book called "Disposal of Public Lot No. 2," which was prepared by Nich. King (surveyor of the city) in 1805, namely, "square south of 1002, assigned to George Walker and the heirs of William Young, the original proprietors thereof," show that the United States parted with all its interest in the square by the assignment of the whole of the same to said proprietors on the division; nothing was reserved.

"In my opinion the United States has no title to the square. I would, however, suggest a reference to Colonel Wilson, with the request that he verify the statement of facts above made, in order that no mistake may be possible."

"Colonel Wilson reports to the same effect.

"An abstract of title of the Real Estate Title Insurance Company of the District of Columbia shows that the said vestry is entitled to the relief sought as being the ultimate grantee of the original proprietors, Walker and Young.

"We report that the United States in 1800 were paid for their title to this square by the aforesaid settlement with the original proprietors, and that the said vestry is entitled to the relief sought, and we therefore recommend the passage of the bill."

Mr. GROUT. There is an amendment proposed by the committee.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert, after the word "parish" in line 7, the words "otherwise called the vestry of Washington."

Mr. GROUT. This amendment is offered simply because it is the name under which the original grant was made.

Mr. CANNON. I want to ask the gentleman a question. On its face the form of this bill is such that the ordinary reader would suppose it made a donation of lands from the United States to the vestry of this church. If I understand the report correctly such is not the case, and, in fact, the attorney for the District, if I understand his report, says that the United States has no title whatever to this land.

Mr. GROUT. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. Then why place upon the statute-book an act which ought not to go there if it was to be effectual? In other words, the gentleman himself, I apprehend, will admit that if the United States really owned this land it ought not to donate it to any religious corporation whatever.

Mr. GROUT. Mr. Speaker, this is simply a bill to clear the title to this property, which has been owned and occupied by Christ Church ever since the year 1800. The defect in the title resulted from the failure of the United States commissioners, in the year 1800, to sign together with the original proprietors of the ground composing this square, and this act is simply to cure the formal defect in the transfer then made. That is all.

Mr. CANNON. Does not the gentleman think it would be better policy to amend the bill so as to show just that fact?

Mr. GROUT. This bill only proposes that the United States shall release any claim which it may have. It is not a warranty deed that is to be given, but simply a quit-claim.

Mr. CANNON. I understand; but I say the ordinary citizen reading this act hereafter would be justified in speaking of it as an act donating land belonging to the United States to a religious corporation, making a donation which ought not to be made.

Mr. GROUT. Possibly; but the act should be read and will be read by the careful reader in the light of the report, and the report shows all the facts. This is a Senate bill and the House committee did not think it was necessary to make any change in it in that respect; but if the House thinks so it can be done, or if the gentleman thinks it is necessary it is perfectly competent for him to offer an amendment.

Mr. CANNON. I only submit the suggestion to the gentleman, and if he does not accept it I have nothing further to say. The substance of the bill seems to be proper. I merely suggest that the amendment would avoid criticism on the part of any of the 60,000,000 of our people who might hereafter read the statute and claim it to be a precedent for the granting of land by the United States to a religious corporation.

The amendment of the committee was agreed to.

The title was amended by adding to it the words "this being an act to remove the cloud upon the title of said church."

The House bill (H. R. 3296) was laid on the table.

ARREARS OF TAXES IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. GROUT. I call up the bill (H. R. 5179) fixing the rate of interest to be charged on arrearages of general and special taxes now due in the District of Columbia if paid within a time specified.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the rate of interest to be collected of any person owing arrearages of general taxes prior to July 1, 1889, or assessments for special improvements, including the laying of water mains, now due to, and the liens for which are held by the District of Columbia, shall be 6 per centum per annum, in lieu of the rate and penalties now fixed by law and of all accrued costs: Provided, That this provision shall only apply to taxes and assessments paid on or before the 31st day of October, 1890.

Mr. GROUT. There are certain amendments which the committee recommend.

The amendments were read, as follows:

Amend, in line 5, by inserting the words "eighty-eight" in place of the words "eighty-nine," making it read "1888" instead of "1889."

Also, by inserting the word "thirtieth" in line 11, in place of "thirty-first," and by inserting "April" in place of "October," making it read "the 30th day of April."

Mr. CLEMENTS. Will the gentleman state in what respect this bill changes the existing law?

Mr. GROUT. There is no existing law upon this subject. This is simply a proposition to allow parties in arrears for taxes an opportunity to avoid the penalty of 2 per cent. per month by paying their taxes on or before the 30th of April next. The commissioners of the District thought that if they offered such an inducement many persons would pay within the period named.

It will be seen by reading the report that there are taxes in arrears amounting to $634,000 upon property which has been sold, to be sure, but upon which the title has not yet matured. The commissioners desire, if possible, to coax out of the defaulting tax-payer his taxes by remitting the penalties and the extremely high rate of interest (2 per cent. a month), and simply letting him pay the taxes and 6 per cent. per annum, which will place him upon precisely the same basis as the other tax-payers. That is the object of the bill, and that is the whole of it.

The amendments were agreed to.

ANACOSTIA AND POTOMAC RAILROAD.

Mr. GROUT. I desire to call up the bill (H. R. 5190) to amend the act giving the approval and sanction of Congress to the route and termini of the Anacostia and Potomac River Railroad in the District of Columbia, and I yield the floor to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ATKINSON].

Mr. ATKINSON, of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up the Senate bill S. 1083, and have it considered in place of the House bill.

The Senate bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act giving the sanction and approval of Congress to the route and termini of the Anacostia and Potomac River Railroad, approved February 18, 1875, amended March 24, 1876, and August 1, 1888, be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to authorize the said company to lay tracks and run cars thereon from the intersection of its tracks on M street, south, with Eleventh street, east, along Eleventh street to its tracks on G street, south. That the time for the completion of its track is extended one year. That in the construction of the tracks herein authorized the pattern of rail used shall be approved by the commissioners of the District of Columbia, and that all rails laid under authority of this act shall be on a level with the surface of the street.

Sec. 2. That Congress may at any time amend, alter, or repeal this act.

Mr. ATKINSON, of Pennsylvania. There is an amendment recommended by the House committee which I wish to have read.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Insert after the word "street," the last word in section 1, the following: Provided, That so much of the act of August 1, 1888, as authorized the company herein named to lay its tracks on Seventh street, east, between M street and G, is hereby repealed.

Mr. ATKINSON, of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, this bill merely changes the route of a railroad upon four squares. The company was incorporated in 1888, and the proposed change is one that I believe provokes little or no opposition. It has been recommended by the commissioners of the District, and I think time will be saved if the reading of the report is dispensed with.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. ATKINSON, of Pennsylvania, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The House bill (H. R. 5190) was laid on the table.

SALES OF PROPERTY FOR OVERDUE TAXES.

Mr. GROUT. I now call up the bill (H. R. 5825) prescribing the times for sales, and for notices of sales, of property in the District of Columbia for overdue taxes.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the commissioners of the District of Columbia shall prepare a list of all taxes on real property in said District, subject to taxation, upon which said taxes are levied and in arrears on the 1st day of July, 1899, and each and every year thereafter, including all taxes due to the late corporations of Washington City, Georgetown, the levy court of the county of Washington, and the District of Columbia. And said commissioners shall publish the same with a notice of sale in a pamphlet of which not less than 3,000 copies shall be printed for distribution to tax-payers applying therefor. Said commissioners shall, on the third Tuesday of March 1899, and the third Tuesday in March of each year thereafter, give notice by advertising twice a week for three successive weeks in the regular issue of two or more daily newspapers published in said District, that said pamphlet has been printed and that a copy thereof will be delivered to any tax-payer applying therefor at the office of the said commissioners, and that if the taxes due, together with the penalties and costs that may have accrued thereon, shall not be paid prior to the day fixed for sale, the property will be sold under the direction of the said commissioners at public auction at the office of the collector of taxes for the District of Columbia, commencing three weeks after the first publication of the said notice and continuing on each following day, Sundays and legal holidays excepted, until all said delinquent property is sold: Provided, however, That property which has once been advertised and sold for non-payment of taxes shall not be again advertised for the same tax. The expenses of said advertising and the printing of said pamphlet shall be paid by a charge of 20 cents for each lot or piece of property advertised.

SEC. 2. That all acts and parts of acts inconsistent herewith are hereby repealed.

Mr. GROUT. I move to amend this bill by striking out, in line 4 of section 1, the word "March" and inserting "April." This amendment is offered for the reason that there would not be time between now and the third Tuesday of March of the present year to make these sales. When the bill was prepared it was thought that the third Tuesday in March would be late enough.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GROUT. I move also to amend by inserting after the word "notice," in line 15, the words "which shall contain the name of each and every person in which said piece of property is assessed, together with the amount of assessment upon each piece."

The amendment was agreed to.

ECKINGTON AND SOLDIERS' HOME RAILWAY COMPANY.

Mr. GROUT. I call up the bill (S. 157) to amend the charter of the Eckington and Soldiers' Home Railway Company.

Mr. SPINOLA. Before that is entertained, I rise to a question of privilege.

The SPEAKER. A question of privilege is not in order during the pendency of this bill.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Eckington and Soldiers' Home Railway Company of the District of Columbia is hereby authorized to extend its tracks and to run its cars thereon through and along the following-named streets: Beginning at the intersection of New York avenue and Fifth street, northwest, south along Fifth street, northwest, to G street, northwest, and thence west along G street, northwest, to the east line of Fifteenth street, northwest; and also beginning at the present terminus of its Cemetery branch on the east side of Lincoln avenue, and thence northerly along Lincoln avenue to a point opposite the entrance to Glenwood Cemetery; and also beginning at the intersection of New York avenue and North Capitol street, thence north along said street to the south boundaries of the grounds of the Soldiers' Home: Provided, That if electric wires or cables are used to propel its cars over said streets (from New York avenue and Fifth to Fifteenth street, northwest), the same shall be placed under ground: And provided further, That the said company shall not be permitted to stop its cars at its (western) terminus, or at any point within the city limits, for a longer time than is necessary to take on and let off its passengers. Said company shall charge not exceeding five cents fare for one continuous ride from any point on its line to the terminus of its main line or any of its branches. And said company is authorized to use overhead wires on its (North Capitol street) branch.

SEC. 2. That so much of the original charter of the Eckington and Soldiers' Home Railway Company, granted by act approved June 19, 1888, as authorized the construction of a branch on First street, west, from New York avenue to the south boundary of the Soldiers' Home be, and the same is hereby, repealed.

SEC. 3. That said company is authorized to increase its capital stock $175,000 for the purpose of enabling it to extend and equip its line as provided in this act.

SEC. 4. That unless said extensions are commenced within three months and the cars run thereon within one year from the passage of this act the authority herein granted shall be void: Provided, That said company shall have one year to complete the North Capitol Street Branch after said street is opened and graded.

SEC. 5. That Congress reserves the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act.

The amendment proposed by the committee was read, as follows:

At the end of the bill add the following as a new section:

"SEC. 6. That this act shall be considered as an amendment to the act of June 19, 1888, granting a charter to the Eckington and Soldiers' Home Railroad, and shall be construed as being subject to all limitations and conditions of said original act, except as specifically provided otherwise herein."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CANNON. I would like to put a question to my friend from Vermont [Mr. GROUT], and I will preface the question with a statement.

As I understand, this is a charter to enable an electric railway company, known as the Eckington Railroad Company, to extend its line to the Treasury Department.

Mr. GROUT. Yes, sir—to Fifteenth street.

Mr. CANNON. I am very heartily in sympathy with the bill and shall vote for it, but I want to ask the gentleman what objection there is in his mind to the committee considering and bringing in a bill which will enable any association of gentlemen to form a corporation under general law and construct a street railway in Washington on any avenue or street, so far as the right depends on the city, provided they will use the electric motor or some other rapid motor?

Mr. GROUT. Well, Mr. Speaker, I know of no objection to formulating such a measure, unless that it might be well to have each individual proposition carefully considered by itself, with some supervising power over the grant, so that there might not be too many of these street railways. The proposition suggested by the gentleman has not been brought to the attention of the committee, and I am now answering individually. If such a bill should be introduced, authorizing the incorporation of street railways under a general act, I promise that it will receive careful consideration by the committee; and I do not see that it is not a safe and proper way to dispose of these questions.

Mr. CANNON. The gentleman understands that I do not antagonize this bill.

Mr. GROUT. I am glad to know that.

Mr. CANNON. After an experience of a great many years in Washington with the horse-cars (crowded as they usually are), and with a knowledge of the unavailing efforts for the introduction of any other motor (except that I believe they have almost completed a cable line on Seventh street), and after having seen from time to time various bills for the construction of various street railways proposed and defeated in this House, my object in speaking to the gentleman now was to draw his attention, as chairman of the committee, and the attention of his committee, to the necessity for taking some steps which will enable somebody to build railways about Washington with the electric or other rapid motor, so as to accommodate the people of this country who come to the national Capital. If I have succeeded in getting the gentleman to think about this question, I have accomplished all I desire.

Mr. GROUT. I will say to the gentleman that the way to accomplish a practical result would be to bring in a bill.

Mr. SPINOLA. I move to amend by adding as a new section the provision which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. — That said company shall pay into the Treasury of the city of Washington 5 per cent. of the gross receipts of said company upon that part of said road authorized to be constructed by this act, the same to be in addition to any other tax paid by said company.

Mr. GROUT. Mr. Speaker, this bill is an amendment to the original charter, which provides for the payment of a 4 per cent. tax upon the gross receipts of the company, a sum which was then thought and is now thought by the committee to be a suitable amount.

Mr. SPINOLA. I am aware of that provision.

Mr. GROUT. This bill, by a section which the committee has added, is made a part of the original charter, and the authority now granted will be subject to all the provisions of the original charter with reference to the issue of stock, the payment of taxes, etc.

Mr. HEARD. If my friend from New York [Mr. SPINOLA] will permit me a few words, I think I can convince him that this act, if amended as he proposes, would be impossible of execution.

Mr. SPINOLA. I am ready to be convinced.

Mr. HEARD. As has been stated by the gentleman from Vermont, the original act to which this bill is amendatory provides that 4 per cent. of the entire gross receipts of this company shall be paid into the Treasury, practically as a consideration for the franchise, just as the gentleman from New York desires in this case.

Now, the gentleman proposes, as I understand his amendment, on the new part of the road or the extension now proposed, that a different rate shall be levied; that is, 5 per cent. I submit it will be impossible to sever the receipts of the new part from the receipts of the old part, and therefore a uniform rate would have to be adopted. It would be impossible to say how much was the receipt for riding from Fifteenth street to New York avenue and from there to Ivy City, and how much to the Soldiers' Home, for one ticket will carry you over the entire road.

Mr. SPINOLA. There is nothing in the suggestion of my friend from Missouri who has just taken his seat. In regard to the point the chairman of the committee has stated it is proposed here to use a new power on this road.

Mr. HEARD. The gentleman does not understand; they are now using electric power.

Mr. SPINOLA. The so much stronger my case will be, for roads run by electricity or by cable are claimed to be run for one-third less than horse-railroads. If that can be done then they should pay into the treasury of this city for this great right. It is an extraordinary grant, and it will run for a hundred or two hundred years. When this city comes to have a million of inhabitants this will be a most valuable franchise. No man can say what it will be worth. There is no special tax on it, and if they paid 9 per cent on the gross receipts when compared with the price of running a horse-road they could make and pay 25 per cent. dividend. I make that statement on my own knowledge of roads of this character.

I do not wish to interfere with the construction of roads of this sort in this city, because they are necessary, but when we grant a power like this to a half-dozen individuals who expect to make thousands and thousands of dollars out of it they should be made to pay something back to the people. This is all that my amendment proposes.

Let me say to the gentlemen here, they should remember when this city gets to have a million of population and this becomes a valuable franchise, the people will begin to ask how it was it should be given for so small a sum as 4 per cent.

There is no trouble to get a tally for what is paid out on one part of the road and what is paid out on another. They get it in New York City from Fifteenth street to the Battery, and a separate account is kept of every passenger who gets on or off of the cars.

Mr. ATKINSON, of Pennsylvania. How much of the gross receipts is paid by the Broadway Railroad Company into the treasury of New York City.

Mr. SPINOLA. Nearly a million of dollars, I believe.

Mr. ATKINSON, of Pennsylvania. How much on the gross receipts?

Mr. SPINOLA. They pay 5 per cent., and they pay also a gross sum of $40,000 a year. Here this railroad is to be allowed to use the electric cable, which is a great saving over the horse-railroad. In my judgment we should not give away this valuable franchise without compelling these people to pay just compensation for it.

Mr. MILLS. Do I understand there is in the charter a right reserved to amend, alter, or repeal?

Mr. SPINOLA. Yes, sir; to amend, alter, and repeal.

Mr. HEARD. Mr. Speaker, I promise to detain the House but an instant in order to explain to the gentleman from New York, because I think that every member of the House who was a member of the last House will remember that when the bill, of which this is amendatory, was passed, this new principle of legislation was ingrafted upon it. I believe the Eckington charter was the very first granted in this city which contained a provision taxing the gross receipts of a road in consideration of the grant of the franchise. These people have built the best road in this District, and the commissioners say it is the best road in the world. As to what that tax should be, I would submit that the House agreed to fix it at 4 per cent., and the House, in doing that, thought it was not proper to fix by an irrevocable law any rate, whether 5 per cent. or 10 per cent., but to provide a fair per cent. on the earnings of the road now, and leave it in the power of Congress to alter it to suit its views as to what may appear right in the future, and upon that principle it was considered that 4 per cent. was the right tax now.

There is reserved to Congress, as the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MILLS] elicited by his inquiry, the right to amend or repeal this charter at any time, so that whenever it becomes apparent to Congress that this company can afford to pay more than 4 per cent. they can be made to do it. In my judgment, the better course would be, whenever the receipts of the company will bear it, to benefit the people who ride by reducing the rate of transportation. Whenever it becomes practicable the people who travel on the road should get the benefit of a lower rate instead of being taxed by a high rate in order that the company may pay money into the District treasury. That is the principle upon which this bill was originally constructed.

Mr. SPINOLA. Well, Mr. Speaker, there is nothing in that proposition. We have been all through that in New York, and when you come down to fixing the benefit for the people alone, then you have got to fix the fare at 4 cents and be on the safe side.

Mr. HEARD. But Congress reserves the right to regulate that hereafter by amending the act if necessary.

Mr. SPINOLA. Oh, I know, and we all know what that amounts to. Congress reserves the right, but it never exercises it. It has never been known to interfere with the charter rights of corporations authorized by Congress, by reducing their income—never. What you do in that direction must be done now, at once, in the act of incorporation. Now is the time to perfect the bill, to protect the interests of the people and see that what is fair and just shall be accorded to them. You will not do it at all if you do not do it now, nor will they ever have any relief if you depend on the generosity of corporations or look to the action of some future Congress to remedy the evil. It will never be wiped out if you do not do it now. This is a rapidly growing city, and this route and charter will be beyond value to the corporation inside of twenty-five years. Therefore I appeal to the House to protect the citizens against these corporations while we have a chance to do so.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the gentleman from New York.

The question was taken; and there were on a division—ayes 34, noes 43.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. WASHINGTON. Mr. Speaker, I would like to offer an amendment to the bill.

The SPEAKER. The amendment will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Whereas the street-car service in the city of Washington is primitive, slow, and inefficient, many of the cars being old, unclean, and uncomfortable; and Whereas the condition of the streets between and on each side of the tracks, paved as they are with stone, presents a rough and dangerous obstacle to the passage of vehicles, and is a space for the collection of mud and refuse matter to such an extent as to be a nuisance alike offensive to the smell and sight and impassable for pedestrians without great discomfort; and

Whereas under the present system of horse power used for propelling the cars twice as much time is required as should be to make a trip between any two points in the city: Therefore,

Be it resolved, First, That the Committee on the District of Columbia be, and is hereby, required to report to this House, as soon as practicable, by bill or otherwise, such legislation as may be necessary to so amend the charters as to compel, within a reasonable time, the Washington and Georgetown Street Railway Company, with its Fourteenth street extension, and the Metropolitan Street Railroad Company to substitute some form of cable or electric motor, in place of the horses now used.

Second, To equip their respective lines with more modern and better cars; to supply a number of cars sufficient to avoid crowding passengers, and to furnish seats for those who pay fares, and in fact to render a service adequate and in proportion to the great value of the franchise and monopoly now enjoyed by the said railroad lines.

Third, To require said companies to readjust their tracks; to pave all the space between the rails and tracks and for two feet on each side of the tracks uniformly with and of the same material as that now used in paving said streets.

Fourth, To amend said charters so as to compel said street railroads to pay, in lieu of other taxes, 5 per cent. of the gross receipts of said lines into the treasury of the District of Columbia.

Fifth, That all street railroads in the District of Columbia be compelled to issue transfer tickets without extra charge and to transfer passengers to and with all other street-car lines at their respective points of crossing or junction.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not think the amendment of the gentleman is in order.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and being read the third time, was passed.

Mr. HEARD moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

GEORGETOWN AND TENNALLYTOWN RAILWAY COMPANY.

Mr. GROUT. I now call up the bill (S. 280) to amend an act to incorporate the Georgetown and Tennallytown Railway Company of the District of Columbia, which became a law August 10, A. D. 1888.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act entitled "An act to incorporate the Georgetown and Tennallytown Railway Company of the District of Columbia" be, and the same hereby is, amended, by substituting, after the words "and along High street, in Georgetown, to the Tennallytown road," the words "and thence along and in said road" for the words "but wholly outside of the limits of said road and along the side of said road:" Provided, That the inner line of rails shall be at the minimum distance of 8 feet from the center of the improved roadway: And provided further, That said railway shall be located on such side of the roadway as may be indicated by the commissioners of the District of Columbia.

Mr. MCADOO. I would like to inquire of the gentleman in charge of the bill, or some gentleman on the committee, why it is that we can not procure any of these District bills? I have sent to the desk and am informed that there are none to be had. I would like to vote intelligently upon these questions.

Mr. GROUT. I will take great pleasure in handing the gentleman a bill.

Mr. ATKINSON, of Pennsylvania. I can accommodate gentlemen here who may not be supplied with them. I have several at my desk and they can be had at the document-room without difficulty, all of them.

Mr. GROUT. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ATKINSON].

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the bill.

Mr. O'NEIL, of Massachusetts. Before the question is submitted, Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask one or two questions of the gentleman in charge of this bill. I desire to ask, first, if there is a provision in the act which regulates the rate of speed at which cars may be run over this line?

Mr. ATKINSON, of Pennsylvania. My recollection of the bill as it originally passed the House, and of which this is an amendment, is that the speed is limited within the corporate limits of Georgetown, and I believe a different rate of speed is fixed outside of the corporate limits; at all events, the rate is limited, as I understand it.

Mr. O'NEIL, of Massachusetts. Another question. The experience of other cities which have authorized electric roads or cable roads has shown the necessity of placing fenders on the fronts of the cars, and I would like to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill if there is such a provision in this act.

Mr. ATKINSON, of Pennsylvania. I do not understand the gentleman's question.

Mr. O'NEIL, of Massachusetts. My question is if there is a provision in the bill which requires the placing of what would be a cow-catcher on a steam-engine, and what are called fenders on cable or electric cars, the cars of this line.

Mr. ATKINSON, of Pennsylvania. In answer to the inquiry of the gentleman, I wish to say that the bill is guarded in this way, and, besides, the construction and equipment of the road is all subject to the control of the District commissioners.

I may say further in response to the inquiry of the gentleman that animals in the section through which the road runs are not suffered to run at large, and whether there is need for the placing of such a structure as the gentleman refers to on the cars or not I am unable to say. It is the custom, however, to leave practical matters of this character to the judgment of the commissioners of the District, who are capable men and able to regulate the construction and equipment of the road.

Mr. O'NEIL, of Massachusetts. I only wish to say in reply to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that there is no law which prevents two-legged animals from running at large. If, therefore, the cars are not limited to a certain rate of speed and they come on people suddenly, they may do them a serious injury by knocking them down. If there are no fenders on the cars they are almost sure to run over them; but if there are fenders the chances are that the fender may pick a person up who has been thrown to the ground by the car, and, while he may be seriously hurt, yet he would not be run over and killed, as would almost inevitably be the case otherwise.

Mr. ATKINSON, of Pennsylvania. I do not know that there is anything in the bill specifically requiring that to be done on this line, but if it ought to be done I am satisfied the District commissioners will insist upon it.

Mr. CANNON. The original charter gave to these parties the right to condemn private property on the right of way, I believe.

Mr. ATKINSON, of Pennsylvania. It did not give the right to condemn, but it provided, and the provision was adopted in the House, that the road should be constructed on private property, off the side of the main road along which this line is to pass. I believe the gentleman who offered the amendment had the impression that the owners of property along the line would be willing to donate it for the purpose indicated. But they refused to make any such donation, and the company had no power of condemnation in their charter, nor is there a general power of condemnation given under any law now in force in the District, and the result is that they were not able to construct their line after reaching the Tennallytown road.

Further, the cost of the front along this road would be so high as to render it almost impracticable for any street-railway company to buy it, even if they had the power of condemnation given them.

Mr. CANNON. Now, I want to ask the gentleman whether this railway company, in whole or part, by condemnation or otherwise, has gotten the right of way along the line of this road upon which it can construct this railway.

Mr. ATKINSON, of Pennsylvania. It has not a foot of right of way on the face of earth so far as I know, except only on High street, in Georgetown, which is a public street, upon which they have constructed a double-track road about a mile and a half in length. They are now engaged in the construction of the power-house, have made the contract for their cars, have purchased a part of the iron necessary to be laid along this Tennallytown road, and there is no obstruction or objection to the construction and completing of this road, except only that they have no place to put it on along the road without authority of Congress.

Mr. CANNON. I am not opposing the gentleman's bill, yet I have heard it alleged or rumored, I do not know where, that after the passage of the act, or before, this corporation obtained, in whole or in part, a right of way as the original bill provided that it should have, and that now, for the purpose of making that property valuable, instead of constructing their road upon the property which they own, they come here and ask us for this charter. I do not know whether that is true or not.

Mr. ATKINSON, of Pennsylvania. My friend from Illinois has been misinformed respecting that. They will not secure a single foot of ground from private parties.

Mr. CHEADLE. I would like to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania a question.

Mr. ATKINSON, of Pennsylvania. Go on.

Mr. CHEADLE. How far into the country do they propose to extend their railroad?

Mr. ATKINSON, of Pennsylvania. The bill provides that it shall be extended to the District line, which I understand is a short distance beyond the village of Tennallytown.

Mr. CHEADLE. How long will the line be from the city of Georgetown?

Mr. ATKINSON, of Pennsylvania. About 3 miles long, I think, from the city of Georgetown.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. ATKINSON, of Pennsylvania. I ask that the House bill upon the same subject be laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. ATKINSON, of Pennsylvania, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. GROUT. Mr. Speaker, I express for the Committee on the District of Columbia their obligation for the considerate attention which the House has given their business this morning, and I will say that this completes the business that the committee has to offer.

POTTAWATOMIE INDIANS OF MICHIGAN AND INDIANA.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will lay before the House the bill (S. 308) to ascertain the amount due the Pottawatomie Indians of Michigan and Indiana. The Chair is informed that it is substantially the same as the House bill which has been favorably reported by the Committee on Indian Affairs, and that the committee desire to have it passed upon by the House. The Clerk will read the bill.

The bill was read, as follows:

A bill (S. 308) to ascertain the amount due the Pottawatomie Indians of Michigan and Indiana.

Whereas representatives of the Pottawatomie Indians of Michigan and Indiana, in behalf of all the Pottawatomie Indians of said States, make claim against the United States on account of various treaty provisions which, it is alleged, have not been complied with: Therefore,

Be it enacted, etc., That the Court of Claims is hereby authorized to take jurisdiction of and try all questions of difference arising out of treaty stipulations with the said Pottawatomie Indians of Michigan and Indiana, and to render judgment thereon; power is hereby granted the said court to review the entire question of difference de novo, and it shall not be estopped by the joint resolution of Congress approved 28th July, 1866, entitled "Joint resolution for the relief of certain Chippewa, Ottawa, and Pottawatomie Indians," nor by the receipt in full given by said Pottawatomies under the provisions of said resolution, nor shall said receipt be evidence of any fact except of payment of the amount of money mentioned in it; and the Attorney-General is hereby directed to appear in behalf of the Government, and if the said court shall decide against the United States the Attorney-General may, within thirty days from the rendition of the judgment, appeal the cause to the Supreme Court of the United States; and from any judgment that may be rendered the said Pottawatomie Indians may also appeal to said Supreme Court: Provided, That the appeal of said Pottawatomie Indians shall be taken within sixty days after the rendition of said judgment, and the said court shall give such cause precedence.

Sec. 2. That said action shall be commenced by a petition stating the facts on which said Pottawatomie Indians claim to recover, and the amount of their claims, and said petition may be verified by a member of any "Business Committee" or authorized attorney of said Indians as to the existence of such facts, and no other statements need be contained in said petition or verification.

The SPEAKER. The question is upon the third reading of the bill.

Mr. CARLISLE. Mr. Speaker, this may be a very important bill, but we can not tell from the mere reading of it what its ultimate effect may be. I observe that it is proposed to annul a receipt in full heretofore given to the Government by these Pottawatomie Indians. I think the House ought to have some information as to the amount of this claim and the reasons why the legal effect of this receipt in full is to be annulled in this instance.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Kentucky is correct. The bill is somewhat important in its provisions. It is a bill, however, to which the Committees on Indian Affairs in both Houses of Congress have given considerable attention. They have considered this matter carefully, and the House committee had reported substantially the same bill before this bill received favorable consideration in the Senate. These Pottawatomie Indians have claimed year after year that under treaty obligations there was a large sum of money due to them. They pressed that claim upon the attention of Congress and upon the attention of the Department from year to year, and finally, at the time suggested in this bill, Congress passed a joint resolution providing that they should be paid $39,000 in full satisfaction of their demands, and under the provisions of the joint resolution they were to receipt in full upon accepting this money for all the claims that they had against the Government. They accepted the money and gave the receipt.

There is no trouble in regard to that feature of this claim; but the Indians claim, and the evidence shows, that we did not pay them in full; that there was a large sum of money due them in excess of the amount appropriated. The auditing department and the officers of the Government who have investigated it have reported from time to time that in their judgment there is from $130,000 to $170,000 due these Indians in excess of the amount paid, to say nothing about interest upon that sum. Your committee upon investigation became satisfied that there was quite a considerable sum due these Indians, although it did not attempt to ascertain accurately the amount; that the amount appropriated did not in fact satisfy every demand; that it was unjust to compel them to accept it in full satisfaction of their claim, and the feeling of the committee seemed to be that the Government was strong enough and rich enough to do justice to these Indians; that it ought not to plead this appropriation and receipt as a defense or in bar of the money honestly due these Indians.

The bill is recommended by both committees of Congress, and it is the judgment of the officers of the Government that it should be paid. Senator TELLER, when Secretary of the Interior, recommended its payment and Secretary Vilas recommended it; so also did Commissioner Atkins and Commissioner Price during the time they were Commissioners of Indian Affairs; and the present Commissioner of Indian Affairs also recommends it.

Mr. CARLISLE. Does this bill propose to allow interest?

Mr. PERKINS. No, sir; it simply provides that they may go to the Court of Claims and have their claim investigated so that it may be ascertained under treaty obligations what is due them, and that the receipt and joint resolution are not to stand in bar of their claim. That is the effect of this bill.

Mr. McMILLIN. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. PERKINS. Certainly.

Mr. McMILLIN. When was the appropriation of $39,000 made?

Mr. PERKINS. It was made by the joint resolution of July 28, 1866, and the Indians accepted the money appropriated, but did so under protest, because of their pressing necessities, and, as it is claimed, with the assurance of the agent who paid them the money that the Government would do what was fair and right with them, notwithstanding their receipt in full.

Mr. McMILLIN. Out of what does the indebtedness grow?

Mr. PERKINS. Out of treaties made with these Indians years and years ago.

Mr. McMILLIN. On what account is it due?

Mr. PERKINS. On account of lands purchased from them and treaty obligations entered into with them years ago, two or three different treaties. My friend from Indiana [Mr. SHIVELY], who is a member of the Committee on Indian Affairs, reported the House bill and is quite familiar with all the circumstances of the case, and I will yield the floor to him in a moment.

Mr. CUTCHEON. About what is the amount of this indebtedness?

Mr. PERKINS. In answer to the gentleman from Michigan I will state that the Department has estimated that there is from $138,000 to $170,000 due these Indians in excess of the amount that was appropriated.

Mr. SHIVELY. Mr. Speaker, I do not care to take the time of the House in discussing this measure further. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. PERKINS] has stated the situation fully. This legislation was recommended by Mr. TELLER when he was Secretary of the Interior, and has been recommended by every Secretary of the Interior since that time and by all the Commissioners of the Indian Bureau. It proposes simply to allow these people to go into the Court of Claims and establish their rights, and it provides, as gentlemen observe, that either party may take an appeal to the Supreme Court. It further provides that no interest is to be paid upon any sum that may be found due. I think it is simply a measure of justice to these people and that no possible harm can result from its passage.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. PERKINS moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The House bill (H. R. 7255) was, by unanimous consent, laid on the table.

TAKING THE CENSUS IN ALASKA.

Mr. DUNNELL. Mr. Speaker, I am instructed by the Committee on the Eleventh Census to report back the Senate joint resolution in relation to taking the census in Alaska with the recommendation that it do pass; and I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The SPEAKER. The joint resolution will be read, after which the Chair will ask for objection.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Joint resolution (S. R. 63) providing for taking the census in Alaska.

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives, etc., That the Superintendent of Census is hereby authorized to pay special agents in Alaska, in addition to their salaries, a per diem allowance to cover all expenses of subsistence and transportation, not to exceed $7 per diem.

Mr. DUNNELL. This joint resolution was passed by the Senate unanimously, and it is desirable that it should be considered immediately.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this joint resolution?

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope the report will be read.

Mr. DUNNELL. I will send to the desk a communication from the Superintendent of the Census to show the importance of the early passage of this joint resolution:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, CENSUS OFFICE,
Washington, February 14, 1890.

SIR: I have the honor to refer the following matter for your consideration: Under section 17 of the "act to provide for taking the eleventh and subsequent censuses" it is provided that "the Superintendent of Census shall collect and publish the statistics of the population, industries, and resources of the district of Alaska with such fullness as he may deem expedient and as he shall find practicable under the appropriations made, or to be made, for the expenses of the Eleventh Census."

Under this provision of the act, Mr. Ivan Petroff, who conducted a similar investigation in the Tenth Census, and who made the first really satisfactory report in relation to the resources and population of Alaska, has been appointed special agent to take charge of the work in connection with the Eleventh Census.

After carefully going over this entire matter with Mr. Petroff and Mr. Gannett (the geographer of the Eleventh Census), I have concluded to divide "the district of Alaska" into seven divisions, namely:

First, the Southeastern or Sitka division; second, the Kodiak division; third, the Oonahaska division; fourth, the Nushagak division; fifth, the Kuskovim division; sixth, the Yukon division; seventh, the Arctic division.

Each division should be placed in charge of a special agent, who should be a resident of the division, if such can be found with the necessary qualifications; the duties of each special agent to be the collection of such statistics as are desirable and obtainable, and the transmittal of the same to a shipping point nearest to his division, as may be agreed upon hereafter.

As in all other cases, I have requested of Mr. Petroff an estimate of the probable expense of this work. I have the honor, therefore, to inclose a copy of Mr. Petroff's reply to this request, and to ask that the subject-matter be referred to the honorable the Secretary of the Treasury for reference to the First Comptroller with the view of obtaining the opinion of the latter as to what latitude may be allowed Mr. Petroff relative to expenditures, so that there may be no misunderstanding hereafter with regard to the settlement of his accounts and that of the other special agents as they come in.

I should be glad if you would have this matter determined at as early a date as possible, as I do not desire to start Mr. Petroff on this investigation until the matter is thoroughly understood by yourself and the officials of the Treasury Department.

In view of the fact that so much interest is just now centering in the development of the resources of Alaska—it being not improbable that discoveries of gold may be made there, and the fact that the vast timber interests are attracting so much attention from Eastern capitalists—I think it likely that the maximum expenditure suggested by Mr. Petroff will not be too great when the importance of the undertaking is considered. I should be glad to receive your approval of my proposed action in the premises.

Very respectfully,

ROBERT P. PORTER,
Superintendent of Census.

Hon. SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, CENSUS OFFICE,
Washington, February 12, 1890.

DEAR SIR: In obedience to your request and supplementary to the plan for census work in Alaska previously submitted, I have the honor to append hereby an estimate of cost:

For salary of 7 special agents, at $5 per diem (123 days).....	$1,305
Expenses of the same, not to exceed $8 per diem.....	6,838
Chief special agent, salary one year.....	2,100
Chief special agent, expenses.....	1,000
Stenographer and type-writer, one year.....	900
Rent of office, one year.....	240
Total.....	15,523

To which it may be necessary to add one additional man in the southeastern division, $1,500.

A reduction of the estimated expense may be made, if the office be located in Washington, of $1,140; and if the chief special agent should find it practicable to attend to the Arctic division in person, of $1,500.

In connection with the above estimate, I would call the attention of the Superintendent of Census to the fact that the expenses of special agents in Alaska can not be estimated upon the same basis as in the civilized countries. The expenditures will have to be made for the hire of boats and canoes, and the payment of native paddlers or oarsmen, for which it will be next to impossible to obtain vouchers. Some agreement should be had previously with the proper authorities of the Treasury Department to insure the allowance to such expenditures. My previous experience as special agent of the Tenth Census in the same field has taught me a rather severe lesson. For a period of seven years subsequent to my services in connection with this office I have been paying bills to the Alaska Commercial Company on accounts disallowed by the Treasury Department.

As far as my experience goes, the expense of hiring canoes does not in any part of Alaska exceed $1 per day for the canoe and $1 per day for men, from two to four men being required for the work. These canoe journeys will only continue for a few days at a time. Transportation by steamer in the southeastern and Kodiak division can be obtained at rates very little in excess of those prevailing in this country.

In the case of the special agent in charge of the Arctic division, for whom passes must be obtained on the revenue marine and naval vessels making the tour of the Arctic coast of Alaska, the expenses will consist of but little beyond his proportional share of the mess bill on board of such vessels, as boats will probably be placed at his disposal.

In submitting the above I feel confident that the actual expenditures will be within the estimated total.

Very respectfully,

IVAN PETROFF,
Special Agent in Charge of Alaska Division.

Hon. ROBERT P. PORTER,
Superintendent of Census.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, CENSUS OFFICE,
Washington, February 18, 1890.

SIR: I have the honor to inclose herewith copy of supplemental letter from Ivan Petroff, special agent in charge of statistics of Alaska, in regard to the matter which came up in our interview the other day. Will you please cause this letter to be transmitted to the Treasury Department, so that it may be with the other papers in the case?

If this could be done to-day it would be a great convenience, as I should like to have the letter before the Comptroller at the time he makes his decision.

Very respectfully,

ROBERT P. PORTER,
Superintendent of Census.

Hon. JOHN M. NOBLE,
Secretary of the Interior.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, CENSUS OFFICE,
Washington, February 15, 1890.

DEAR SIR: With reference to a plan of operation in taking the census of Alaska and the estimated cost thereof, I have the honor to state that since submitting the same I have given the subject of enumeration of expenses of special agents in Alaska districts additional consideration. I have inquired into many cases which had arisen from difficulties in settling expense accounts pertaining to the taking of the Tenth Census in Alaska, and as progress is made the conviction grows upon me that under the usual system of adjusting accounts of this nature we shall meet with almost insuperable difficulties in the taking of the Alaska census.

If there be a possibility of obtaining a special ruling on the part of the First Comptroller of the Treasury to cover this particular case, I should like to have the opportunity to present an argument on the matter to that official, and to endeavor to convince him of the necessity for special action in this case.

I will here only mention a few difficulties encountered in the settlement of accounts during the last census. It was my personal experience to meet with shipwreck and loss of supplies, which had to be replaced at prices higher than those originally paid, and this in places where there was no possibility of making the proper affidavit. I was compelled to purchase native canoes where I could not hire them, and having no written authority for such action the accounts were disallowed.

In traveling about in the interior of the country or along the coast, tents were blown away or torn to pieces and had to be replaced. Provisions had to be obtained in many instances by barter, and purchases of supplies to cover such cases had to be made at trading posts.

In one instance the pay of an interpreter, Ivan Ladygin, was advanced by a Mr. J. W. Clarke, agent of the Alaska Commercial Company, at Nushagak, and in presenting this particular account I made the request that the draft be made payable to Mr. Clarke directly. This request was disregarded, and a check forwarded to Ivan Ladygin after a delay of nearly a year. The check found the man at a point 500 miles from Nushagak in the interior. It was then indorsed by him, but being just 500 miles from the nearest ink bottle, it had to be done in pencil. Upon being presented at the subtreasury in New York, more than two years after the original transaction, this check was refused payment on the ground that it was not indorsed in ink, and the much traveled scrap of paper was sent upon another journey. In this case the final payment of a paltry sum of $25 was not made until three years had elapsed.

I could recount numberless other instances of the kind, but they would increase the bulk of this already long communication indefinitely. I will only briefly mention the case of Alexander Miletich, my assistant in Southeastern Alaska during the Tenth Census. In this instance the man died long before any decision was arrived at in the disposal of his vouchers, which had first reached this office without signature.

To a certain extent the difficulties alluded to will be lessened during the present census by the division of the field among a number of special agents, who will have to devote themselves to a comparatively circumscribed section of the country; but one of the difficulties remaining consists in the fact that, being residents of their respective sections of Alaska, communications with them can be had only at rare intervals; in some instances, only twice a year, as regular monthly mail service extends only to a part of one of the divisions, the southeastern.

It seems obvious that the settlement of accounts of these agents would very probably extend over a more prolonged period, and any explanation required by the Treasury authorities as to items of expenditure would of necessity have to be obtained from Alaska. Equally obvious would seem the hardships imposed upon such agents, employed only for a brief period of four months, by such a mode of procedure. It should not be forgotten that a special ruling would have to be obtained in these cases also, on account of the inability of the special agents referred to to make the necessary jurat to their expense accounts. Officials empowered to administer oaths are located only in two of the districts of Alaska, and these could not be reached by the special agents of the other divisions.

As it is of the utmost importance, in order to secure satisfactory results of the present investigation, as well as for reasons of economy, that the special agents should be men residing in and familiar with the country, I would most earnestly urge the necessity of a strong effort to secure the consent of the First Comptroller of the Treasury to a fixed per diem allowance for expenses of the special agents in Alaska; and, as mentioned above, I would be glad to have an opportunity to argue the matter personally in the proper quarter.

I can only trust that I have expressed myself strongly enough upon the subject, upon which a bitter experience has caused me to feel strongly.

Should favorable action be had upon this suggestion, I should recommend that, in order to cover all contingencies, the expense of allowance be placed at the limit mentioned in the estimate previously submitted.

Very respectfully,

IVAN PETROFF,
Special Agent in charge Alaska Division.

HON. ROBERT P. PORTER,
Superintendent of Census.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, Washington, February 25, 1890.
SIR: I transmit herewith for your information copy of a decision of the First Comptroller of the Treasury, dated the 21st instant, relative to certain allowances and per diem expenses to special agents of census statistics for Alaska, said decision having been rendered in compliance with requests from this Department dated the 14th and 18th instant, respectively.

Very respectfully,

JOHN W. NOBLE, Secretary.

The SUPERINTENDENT OF CENSUS.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, FIRST COMPTROLLER'S OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., February 21, 1890.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge your reference to this office, for my consideration and report thereon, of the letter addressed to you on the 14th instant by the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a copy of a letter addressed to him by the Superintendent of Census, accompanied by an estimate submitted by Special Agent Ivan Petroff, in regard to the expense necessary to obtain such statistics from Alaska as are desirable and obtainable, to be transmitted to the Superintendent of Census to be incorporated in the next census; which matter the honorable Secretary of the Interior requests may be referred to the First Comptroller for his opinion as to what latitude may be allowed Mr. Petroff relative to expenditures necessary and proper in connection with the contemplated work in Alaska.

I have also received, by reference, the letter addressed to you on the 18th instant by the Secretary of the Interior, inclosing a copy of letter from the Superintendent of Census, bearing the same date, accompanied by a copy of a supplemental letter from Special Agent Ivan Petroff, relating to the same matter.

These communications sufficiently explain the difficulties which will probably be encountered by the special agents, operating in the remote regions of Alaska, in obtaining proper vouchers for their expenditures, made up in accordance with the regulations of the Department of the Interior and the rulings of the accounting officers. These difficulties are duly appreciated by me, and as far as may be consistent with the law I shall be pleased to make due allowance therefor in such cases as may be specially approved and authorized by the Secretary of the Interior. Section 17 of the act of March 1, 1889, "to provide for taking the eleventh and subsequent censuses" (25 Stat., 765), provides that "The Superintendent of Census shall collect and publish the statistics of the population, industries, and resources of the district of Alaska with such fullness as he may deem expedient and as he shall find practicable under the appropriations made, or to be made, for the expense of the Eleventh Census."

Section 18 of said act (25 Stat., 765) provides that the "Superintendent may employ experts and special agents to investigate and ascertain the statistics of the manufacturing, railroad, fishing, mining, cattle, and other industries of the country, and of telegraphing, express, transportation, and insurance companies as he may designate and require," and that such experts and special agents "shall receive compensation at rates to be fixed by the Superintendent of Census, with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior: Provided, That the same shall in no case exceed $5 per day and actual necessary traveling expenses."

With respect to the compensation of the special agents to be assigned to the work in Alaska, there can be no room for doubt, provided such compensation is fixed by the Superintendent of Census, approved by the Secretary of the Interior, and does not exceed the limit prescribed in the act.

In the estimate submitted by Special Agent Ivan Petroff seven special agents are named at compensation of $5 per day, and one chief special agent, at salary for one year, $2,190. The compensation named for the chief special agent is at the rate of $5 per day, but it should be so specifically stated in accordance with the terms of the statute, and not by the year, should that rate of compensation for the chief special agent be fixed by the Superintendent of Census and approved by the Secretary of the Interior.

It will be observed that the proviso to section 18 of the act above referred to, respecting the compensation of experts and special agents, is: "That the same shall in no case exceed $5 per day and actual necessary traveling expenses."

The act of June 16, 1874, (18 Statutes, 72), also contains the following provision: "Provided, That only actual traveling expenses shall be allowed to any person holding employment or appointment under the United States, and all allowances for mileage and transportation in excess of the amount actually paid are hereby declared illegal; and no credit shall be allowed to any of the disbursing officers of the United States for payment or allowances in violation of this provision."

The modifications in the law above referred to made by subsequent legislation have no relation to the special agents of the Census Office.

Therefore, under existing law, I should have no authority to consent to "a fixed per diem allowance for expenses of the special agents in Alaska," as suggested by Special Agent Petroff. Such authority can only be granted by Congress.

In this connection I would respectfully suggest that much difficulty in the settlement of traveling-expense accounts of the Census Office might be obviated and perhaps greater economy insured should the Secretary of the Interior or the Superintendent of Census procure the passage of a joint resolution by Congress authorizing the allowance of a per diem in lieu of subsistence, not to exceed a reasonable limit to be fixed in the resolution, for such experts, special agents, officers, and employees of the Census Office as may be lawfully authorized to incur traveling expenses, the amount of per diem to be allowed in lieu of subsistence to be fixed by the Superintendent of Census and approved by the Secretary of the Interior.

The actual cost of subsistence is limited to $5 per day, under the circular of the Secretary of the Interior of May 15, 1889, governing traveling expenses, and it is presumed that there will be no occasion or necessity to exceed this amount in Alaska, since the cost of hiring canoes and other items of travel referred to in the communication of Mr. Petroff are not included in the actual cost of subsistence.

Respecting the inability of the special agents to make the necessary jurat to their expense accounts, by reason of being located at a great distance from any official empowered to administer oaths, to which Mr. Petroff adverts, I have to say that the requirement that expense accounts shall be sworn to is contained in the regulations of the Department of the Interior of May 15, 1889, above referred to. Should cases occur where it would be impossible for a special agent in Alaska to make oath to his expense account, for the reason alluded to by Mr. Petroff, I should be inclined to allow such account, if otherwise correct, upon the certificate of the special agent that the account is just and correct and expense charged has been actually and necessarily incurred, provided the account be specially approved by the Secretary of the Interior showing that pro tanto the provisions of the circular are waived.

The letters of the Secretary of the Interior, with the accompanying inclosures, are herewith returned.

I am, very respectfully,

A. C. MATTHEWS, Comptroller.

HON. SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. DUNNELL] for the present consideration of this joint resolution?

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope the gentleman will at least make a statement of the purpose of the joint resolution.

Mr. DUNNELL. I will make this statement, Mr. Speaker: It is very difficult for the agents in Alaska to get the vouchers necessary to adjust the accounts properly in the Treasury Department. A great deal of money has to be paid out for canoes and boatmen and in various unusual ways, and the vast extent of the Territory combines with other causes to render it difficult to get regular vouchers. It has been recommended, therefore, by the Comptroller of the Treasury, that instead of requiring the agents there to render accounts in the ordinary form they be allowed a definite amount per day, $8. The Senate, however, determined to fix the amount at $7 per day. By adopting this plan the accounts can be easily adjusted.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. HOLMAN. How many agents are to be employed?

Mr. DUNNELL. The entire estimate for taking the census in Alaska is fifteen thousand and some odd dollars, no more than it cost ten years ago, and the Comptroller is satisfied that it is in the line of economy to allow this per diem rather than to require ordinary accounts.

The joint resolution was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. DUNNELL moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

LEAGUE ISLAND NAVY-YARD.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Mr. Speaker, I am instructed by the Committee on Naval Affairs to report back the resolution which I send to the desk, and ask that it be adopted.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Navy be requested to communicate to the House of Representatives, if, in his opinion, it is not incompatible with the public interest, the report of the board of naval officers, or commission, appointed by order of the Secretary of the Navy under date of July 25, 1889, and filed with the Department October 10, 1889, in relation to League Island navy-yard, Philadelphia, Pa., as to its availability and adaptation for a naval station and ship-building yard.

The resolution was adopted.

WATER SUPPLY FOR WASHINGTON, D. C.

Mr. CLEMENTS. Mr. Speaker, I desire to present a privileged report from the Committee on Appropriations.

The report was read, as follows:

"Whereas there has been appropriated the sum of $2,575,270.30 for increasing the water supply of the city of Washington, as proposed by the act of July 15, 1882, and nearly all of said sum was expended in said work without accomplishing the object desired; and

"Whereas the joint select committee of the two Houses, appointed under a concurrent resolution of the 8th of October, 1888, to investigate the work performed upon the Washington Aqueduct tunnel, and for other purposes, in their report, February 26, 1889, state that "it appears from the report of the experts and from the testimony taken to be beyond all question that substantially the whole and every part of the lining of the tunnel is absolutely and enormously defective, and that it is scarcely too much to say that there is hardly any continuous length of 10 feet in the whole lining where the backing, particularly over the arch of the lining, is not either absolutely wanting or only partly filled in, or, when fully filled in, so badly constructed as to make the whole backing of the lining entirely worthless;" and

"Whereas it further appears from said report and from the testimony taken by the said joint committee that gross frauds were perpetrated against the Government in the prosecution of said work; Therefore,

"Be it resolved, That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, requested to inform this House whether the contractors for the work of lining said tunnel are not liable individually and on their bond for loss to the Government incident to the defective work done thereon; if so, whether any legal proceedings have been or will be instituted against them for such recovery; also, whether they or their subcontractors, or others connected with said work, are not liable to criminal prosecution; and, if so, whether any steps looking towards such prosecution have been or will be taken against them."

The Committee on Appropriations, to whom was referred the resolution calling upon the Secretary of War for certain information touching the construction of the Washington Aqueduct tunnel, having considered the same, report it back herewith, and recommend its adoption.

The resolution was adopted.

WITHDRAWAL OF A BILL.

Mr. COMPTON. I ask unanimous consent to withdraw from the files of the Committee on Claims and of the House the bill (H. R. 4037) for the relief of William H. Hayden.

There being no objection, the bill was withdrawn.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The morning hour begins at ten minutes before 2 o'clock. The call rests with the Committee on Commerce.

BRIDGE ACROSS MISSOURI RIVER AT PIERRE, S. DAK.

Mr. BAKER. I am directed by the Committee on Commerce to call up a number of bills. The first on the list is the bill (H. R. 4130) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at the city of Pierre, S. Dak.

The Clerk proceeded to read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Pierre Ponton Bridge Company, a corporation duly organized and existing under the laws of the State of South Dakota, its successors or assigns, be, and are hereby, authorized to construct and maintain a bridge, and approaches thereto, across the Missouri River between the city of Pierre, in the State of South Dakota, and Stanley County, in the State of South Dakota. Said bridge shall be constructed to provide for the passage of railway trains, wagons, and vehicles of all kinds, steam and street cars, animals, foot-passengers, and for all road travel, for such reasonable rates of toll and under such reasonable rules and regulations as may be prescribed by said corporation, its successors, or assigns.

Sec. 2. That any bridge built under this act and subject to its limitations shall be a lawful structure, and shall be recognized and known as a post-route, upon which also no higher charge shall be made for the transmission over the same of the mails, the troops, and the munitions of war of the United States than the rate per mile paid for the transportation over the railroads or public highways leading to the said bridge, and it shall enjoy the rights and privileges of other post-roads in the United States; and equal privileges in the use of said bridge shall be granted to all telegraph companies, and the United States shall have the right of way across said bridge and its approaches for postal-telegraph purposes.

Sec. 3. That said bridge shall be constructed as a ponton draw-span bridge, and shall contain a ponton draw-span of not less than 300 feet in length, which draw-span shall be maintained over the main channel of the river at an accessible and navigable point, and the piers of said bridge shall be parallel with and the bridge itself at right angles to the current of the river: Provided, That said draw shall be opened promptly by said company or corporation upon reasonable signal for the passage of boats and rafts, and said company or corporation shall maintain, at his own expense, from sunset to sunrise, such lights or other signals on said bridge as the Light-House Board shall prescribe. No bridge shall be erected or maintained under the authority of this act which shall at any time substantially or materially obstruct the free navigation of said river; and if any bridge erected under such authority shall, in the opinion of the Secretary of War, obstruct such navigation, he is hereby authorized to cause such change or alteration of said bridge to be made as will effectually obviate such obstruction; and all such alterations shall be made and all such obstructions shall be removed at the expense of the owner or owners of said bridge; and in case of any litigation arising from any obstruction or alleged obstruction to the free navigation of said river, caused or alleged to be caused by said bridge, the case may be brought in the district court of the United States of the State of South Dakota in which any portion of said obstruction or bridge may be located: Provided further, That nothing in this act shall be so construed as to repeal or modify any of the provisions of the law now existing in reference to the protection of the navigation of rivers or to exempt this bridge from the operations of the same: Provided, That said company may construct a wagon and foot bridge alone; and in case of the construction of a wagon and foot bridge alone, the draws shall be of the same length herein provided, and shall be of such construction as shall be approved by the Secretary of War, and shall be subject to all the provisions herein contained in respect to being promptly opened to admit of the unobstructed navigation of said river, and of keeping the same lighted as herein provided in relation to the use for railroad purposes shall not apply.

Sec. 4. That all railroad companies desiring the use of said bridge shall have and be entitled to equal rights and privileges relative to the passage of railroad trains or cars over the same, and over the approaches to the same, upon the payment of a reasonable compensation for such use; and in case the owner or owners of said bridge and the several railroad companies, or any one of them, desiring such use, shall fail to agree upon the sum or sums to be paid, and upon the rules and conditions to which each shall conform in using said bridge, all matters at issue between them shall be decided by the Secretary of War upon a hearing of the allegations and proofs of the parties.

Sec. 5. That any bridge authorized to be constructed under this act shall be built and located under and subject to such regulations for the security of navigation of said river as the Secretary of War shall prescribe; and to secure that object the said company or corporation shall submit to the Secretary of War, for his approval and examination, a design and drawings of the bridge, and a map of the location, giving, for the space of one-half mile above and one-half mile below the proposed location, the topography of the banks of the river, the shore-lines at high and low water, the direction and strength of the currents at all stages, and the soundings, accurately showing the bed of the stream, the location of any other bridge or bridges, and shall furnish such other information as may be required for a full and satisfactory understanding of the subject; and until the said plan and location of the bridge are approved by the Secretary of War the bridge shall not be commenced or built, and should any change be made in the plans of said bridge during the progress of its construction, such changes shall be subject to the approval of the Secretary of War.

Sec. 6. That this act shall be null and void if actual construction of the bridge herein authorized be not commenced within one year and completed within three years from the date thereof.

Mr. BAKER (before the reading of the bill was concluded). Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask unanimous consent that the reading of these bridge bills at length be dispensed with. They all contain the usual provisions, reserving to Congress the right to alter, amend, or repeal; and they conform to the recommendations of the War Department. Unless some gentleman desires to have this bill read through it is an unnecessary waste of time.

The SPEAKER. Is there unanimous consent that the reading of this bill be dispensed with? The Chair hears no objection.

The following amendment reported by the committee was read:

After the word "thereof" at the end of section 6 add the following:

"Provided, That Congress reserves the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BAKER. I shall, when we get through our business, submit a general motion to reconsider and to lay that motion on the table. I now call up the bill which I send to the desk.

BRIDGE ACROSS TRAIL CREEK, INDIANA.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 5667) to amend an act to authorize the construction of a bridge across Trail Creek, in the city of Michigan City, Ind.

Be it enacted, etc., That an act to authorize the construction of a bridge across Trail Creek, in the city of Michigan City, Ind., approved June 23, 1888, be hereby amended by substituting for section 2 of the aforesaid act the following:

"Sec. 2. That if the construction of the bridge hereby authorized shall not be commenced within two years from the time this act takes effect and be completed within four years after its commencement, then this act shall be void and all rights hereby conferred shall cease and determine."

Sec. 2. That all acts or parts of acts inconsistent herewith are hereby repealed.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

PORTS OF DELIVERY IN MICHIGAN.

Mr. BAKER. I next call up the bill which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 3672) to amend section 2599 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, designating ports of delivery in the district of Michigan.

Be it enacted, etc., That subsection first of section 2599 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be so amended as to read as follows:

"First. The district of Michigan, to comprise all the waters and shores of the State of Michigan lying west of the principal meridian and south of the latitudinal line dividing township 13 from township numbered 44 north of the baseline of the State, except the territory bordering on Green Bay and including the island of Bois Blanc, in which Grand Haven shall be the port of entry, and Duncan City, Manistee, and Ludington ports of delivery."

The amendment reported by the committee was read, as follows:

In lines 12 and 13 strike out the words "Duncan City" and insert "Cheboygan."

The amendment was agreed to.

RAILROAD BRIDGE AT FORT SMITH, ARK.

Mr. BAKER. I call up the bill (S. 1905) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the building of a railroad bridge at Fort Smith, in the State of Arkansas," approved July 19, 1888.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That an act entitled "An act to authorize the building of a railroad bridge at Fort Smith, in the State of Arkansas," approved July 19, 1888, be, and the same is hereby, revived and declared to be in full force and effect from and after the passage of this act. And section 7 of said act, which provides that said act shall be null and void if actual construction of the bridge therein authorized be not commenced within one year and completed within three years from the date thereof, shall be, and the same is hereby, so amended that the time within which said bridge is required to be commenced shall be one year from the passage of this act and the time within which it is required to be completed shall be three years from the date of the passage of this act.

Mr. ROGERS addressed the Chair.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. ROGERS. I rose for the purpose of moving that the vote on the passage of this bill be reconsidered, and that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. BAKER] has announced that he proposes to make one motion of that kind covering all these bills.

Mr. BAKER. I will submit that motion when we get through.

Mr. ROGERS. Very well.

RAILROAD AND WAGON BRIDGE, SOUTH ST. PAUL, MINN.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the next bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 505) for the construction of a railroad and wagon bridge across the Mississippi River at South St. Paul, Minn.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the South St. Paul Belt Railroad Company, its successors and assigns, be, and they are hereby, authorized to construct and maintain, at a point suitable to the interest of navigation, a railroad bridge or a combined railroad, wagon, and foot-passenger bridge across the Mississippi River, from a suitable point on its west bank, at or near the city of South St. Paul, in the State of Minnesota, and within the limits of section 35, township 23, range 22 west, to a corresponding point on its west bank, and to lay on or over said bridge a railroad track or tracks for the more perfect connection of any railroad or railroads that are or shall be constructed to said river, on either or both sides thereof, at or opposite said places, under the limitations and conditions hereinafter provided; that said bridge shall not interfere with the free navigation of said river beyond what is necessary in order to carry into effect the rights and privileges hereby granted, and in case of any litigation arising from any obstruction or alleged obstruction to the free navigation of said river or damage resulting from the same, the cause may be tried before the circuit court of the United States in and for any district in which any portion of said bridge or obstruction touches; said bridge may, at the option of the company building the same, be constructed to provide for the passage of railroad trains alone or for the passage of railroad trains and for the safe passage of wagons and vehicles of all kinds, for the transit of animals, and for foot-passengers, all for such reasonable rates of toll as may be fixed from time to time by the Secretary of War.

Sec. 2. That any bridge built under the provisions of this act shall be constructed as a pivot draw-bridge, with a draw over the main channel of the river at an accessible and navigable point, and with spans giving a clear width of water way of not less than 200 feet on each side of the central or pivot pier of the draw, and the span or spans adjoining the draw shall give such clear width of water way as in the opinion of the Secretary of War is required by the interests of navigation; and said spans shall give a clear head-room of not less than ten feet above extreme high-water mark; and the piers of said bridge shall be parallel with the current of the river where said bridge shall be erected; And provided also, That said draw shall be operated by steam or other reliable mechanical power, and shall be opened promptly upon reasonable signal for the passage of boats, except when trains are passing over the draw; but in no case shall unnecessary delay occur in opening the said draw during or after the passage of trains.

Sec. 3. That any bridge constructed under this act and according to its limitations shall be a lawful structure and shall be known as a post-route, and the same is hereby declared to be a post-route, upon which also no higher charge shall be made for the transmission over the same of the mails, the troops, and the munitions of war of the United States, or for passengers or freight passing over said bridge, than the rate per mile paid for their transportation over the railroads and public highways leading to said bridge; and the United States shall have the right of way for postal-telegraph purposes across said bridge.

Sec. 4. That all railway companies desiring to use said bridge shall have and be entitled to equal rights and privileges in the passage of the same, and in the use of the fixtures and machinery thereof, and of all the approaches thereto, under and upon such terms and conditions as shall be prescribed by the Secretary of War upon hearing the allegations and proofs of the parties in case they shall not agree.

Sec. 5. That the structure herein authorized shall be built and located under and subject to such regulations for the security of the navigation of said river as the Secretary of War shall prescribe; and to secure that object the said company or corporation shall submit to the Secretary of War for examination and approval a design and drawing of the bridge and a map of the location, giving, for the space of 1 mile above and 1 mile below the proposed location, the topography of the banks of the river, the shore-lines at high and low water, the direction and strength of the current at all stages, and the soundings, accurately showing the bed of the stream, the location of any other bridge or bridges, and shall furnish such other information as shall be required for a full and satisfactory understanding of the subject; and until the said plan and location of the bridge are decided by the Secretary of War to be such as will not materially affect the interests of navigation the bridge shall not be commenced or built. And should any change be made in the plan of said bridge during the progress of construction such changes shall be subject to the approval of the Secretary of War; and the said bridge shall be constructed with such aids to the passage of said bridge in the form of booms, dikes, piers, or other suitable and proper structures for confining the flow of water to a permanent channel for a distance of not less than 1 mile above the bridge and for a proper distance below, and for the guiding of rafts, steam-boats, and other water-crafts safely through the draw and raft spans as the Secretary of War shall prescribe and order to be constructed and maintained at the expense of the company owning said bridge; and the said structure shall be at all times so kept and managed as to offer reasonable and proper means for the passage of vessels through or under said structure; and for the safety of vessels passing at night there shall be displayed on said bridge, from the hours of sunset to sunrise, such lights as may be prescribed by the Secretary of War; and a record shall be kept, and posted where it will be plainly visible to boats passing the draw, showing each day the stage of water and whether the river is rising or falling; and the said structure shall be changed or removed at the cost and expense of the owners thereof from time to time, as Congress may direct, so as to preserve the free and convenient navigation of said river; and the authority to erect and continue said bridge shall be subject to revocation and modification by law when the public good shall, in the judgment of Congress, so require, without any expense or charge to the United States.

Sec. 6. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

Mr. BAKER (after the Clerk had begun the reading of the bill). I ask unanimous consent that the reading of this bill be dispensed with.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think it had better be read.

Mr. BAKER. The bill is in the usual form.

Mr. HOLMAN. We had better conform to the usual practice.

The Clerk resumed and concluded the reading of the bill.

The amendments reported by the committee were read, as follows:

In line 10 of section 1, strike out "range" and insert "range."

At the end of the bill add the following as a new section:

"Sec. 7. That this act shall be null and void if actual construction of the bridge herein authorized be not commenced within one year and completed within three years from the approval of this act."

The amendments were agreed to.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, A PORT OF DELIVERY.

The SPEAKER. The next bill in order will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 5682) to amend an act entitled "An act to constitute Columbus, Ohio, a port of delivery, and to extend the provisions of the act of June 10, 1880, entitled 'An act to amend the statutes in relation to immediate transportation of dutiable goods, and for other purposes,' to said port of Columbus, Ohio," approved February 9, 1889.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That an act entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to constitute Columbus, Ohio, a port of delivery, and to extend the provisions of the act of June 10, 1880, entitled 'An act to amend the statutes in relation to immediate transportation of dutiable goods, and for other purposes,' to said port of Columbus,' approved February 9, 1889, be, and hereby is, amended to read as follows, namely: "That Columbus, in the State of Ohio, be, and is hereby, constituted a port of delivery, and that the privileges of the seventh section of the act approved June 10, 1880, entitled 'An act to amend the statutes in relation to immediate transportation of dutiable goods, and for other purposes,' be, and the same are hereby, extended to said port, and that there shall be appointed at said port a surveyor with a compensation at $1,000 per annum and the usual fees and commissions."

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the time, and passed.

BRIDGE OVER COLUMBIA RIVER BETWEEN OREGON AND WASHINGTON.

The SPEAKER. The next bill in order will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 7617) to authorize the Oregon and Washington Bridge Company to construct and maintain a bridge across the Columbia River between the State of Oregon and the State of Washington, and to establish it as a post-road.

Whereas the act of Congress approved July 16, 1888 (25 Statutes at Large, page 296), has become null and void by failure of the Columbia Bridge Company, the corporation in said act named, or its assigns, to commence the construction of the bridge in said act authorized within one year from date of said act: Therefore

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Oregon and Washington Bridge Company, a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of Oregon, its successors and assigns, be, and is hereby, authorized to construct and maintain, if in the opinion of the Secretary of War the same be a public necessity, a bridge across the Columbia River, at a place suitable to the interests of navigation, at a point at or near La Camas, in the State of Washington, and to lay on or over said bridge a track or tracks for the more perfect connection of any railroad or railroads that are or shall be constructed to said river, on either or both sides thereof, at or opposite said point, under the limitations and conditions hereinafter provided; that said bridge shall not interfere with the free navigation of said river, and in case of any litigation arising from any obstruction, or alleged obstruction, to the free navigation of said river, the cause may be tried before the circuit court of the United States in and for any district in whose jurisdiction any portion of said obstruction or bridge touches. Said bridge shall be constructed to provide for the passage of railroad trains, and, at the option of the said company or corporation, its successors and assigns, for the safe and convenient passage of wagons and vehicles of all kinds, animals, and foot-passengers, for such reasonable rates of tolls as may be fixed from time to time by the Secretary of War.

Sec. 2. That said bridge shall be provided with two or more draw-openings, each having not less than 200 feet clear channel-way; and in addition to said draw-openings one or more fixed channel-spans, each having not less than 50 feet clear channel-way; and every part of the superstructure of said bridge shall give a clear head-room of not less than 10 feet above extreme high-water mark; Provided, That all spans shall be so located as to afford the greatest possible accommodation to the river traffic, and a draw-opening shall, if practicable, be located next or near shore; Provided also, That, if the physical characteristics of the locality so require and the interests of navigation be not injured thereby, the lengths of the fixed spans or the number of draw-openings may be reduced; Provided also, That, for any two adjacent draw-openings of 200 feet each, one draw-opening of 300 feet may be substituted if the interests of navigation be not injured thereby.

Sec. 3. That all draw-spans authorized by this act shall be operated by steam or other reliable mechanical power, and shall be opened promptly upon reasonable signal for the passage of boats, except when trains are passing over said span or spans; but in no case shall unnecessary delay occur in opening said draw after the passage of trains; and also, that in case the opening of a draw is delayed by reason of the passing of a train after the signal has been given from a boat ready to pass through, the draw shall be opened for the passage of such boat before another train is allowed to pass over the said span or spans; nor shall there be any unnecessary delay in the passage of trains over the bridge.

Sec. 4. That all piers shall be built parallel with the current of the river at that stage of water which is most important for navigation, and the bridge itself shall be built as nearly as may be at right angles thereto; and that riprapping or other protection for imperfect foundations which will lessen the required water-way shall not be permitted; and also that piers which will produce cross-currents or bars dangerous to navigation shall not be constructed; and if after construction any piers or accessory works are found to produce the above-mentioned effects, or if any riprapping or other protection prohibited by this section is found to exist, the nuisance shall be abated or corrected under the direction of the Secretary of War at the expense of the company or persons owning, controlling, or operating said bridge.

Sec. 5. That the approaches to said bridge shall be so designed and constructed as not to interfere with the free discharge of said river in seasons of flood; and any encroachment on the high-water cross-section by piers, solid embankments, or otherwise which will result in unduly accelerating the high-water current at the site of the bridge shall not be allowed.

Sec. 6. That any corporation, company, or persons owning, controlling, or operating the bridge built under the authority of this act shall build and maintain at all times, as accessory works to such bridge, such booms, piers, dikes, guard fences, and similar devices as may be necessary to insure at all times a permanent channel for a sufficient distance above and below the bridge site, and for the guiding of rafts, steamboats, and other water craft safely under or through said bridge; and if at any time after the construction of the bridge and its accessory works the approaches to draw-openings, channel spans, or raft passages in said bridge are found to be dangerous or difficult of access by any important class of river traffic, the Secretary of War may, upon the recommendation of the Chief of Engineers, United States Army, order the corporation, company, or persons owning, controlling, or operating said bridge to construct under his directions, and to maintain such additional sheer booms, dikes, and other devices as will obviate the difficulty mentioned, which additional sheer booms, dikes, and other devices shall be built and maintained at their own expense by said company or persons; and that said company or persons shall maintain at their own expense, from sunset to sunrise throughout the season of navigation, such lights and other signals on said bridge as may be required by the Light-House Board for the security of navigation.

SEC. 7. That the bridge authorized to be constructed by this act shall be located and built under and subject to such regulations for the security of navigation on said river as the Secretary of War shall prescribe; and to secure that object said corporation shall submit for his examination a design and drawings of the bridge, piers, approaches, and accessory works, and a map of the location, giving, for a space of at least 3 miles above and 1 mile below the proposed location the topography of the banks of the river and the shore-lines at high and low water. This map shall be accompanied by others drawn on the scale of 1 inch to 200 feet, giving for a space of one-half a mile above the line of the proposed bridge and one-quarter of a mile below an accurate representation of the bottom of the river by contour lines 2 feet apart, determined by accurate soundings, and also showing over the whole width of this part of the river the force and directions of the currents at low water, at high water, and at least one intermediate stage by triangulated observations on suitable floats. The map shall also show the location of other bridges in the vicinity, and shall give such information as the Secretary of War may require for a full and satisfactory understanding of the subject, and the construction of the proposed bridge shall not be commenced until the location and plans thereof are approved by the Secretary of War.

SEC. 8. That any bridge constructed under the authority of this act shall be built under the general supervision of the Secretary of War, and no changes or alterations in plans shall be made during construction of said bridge or after its completion, unless said changes or alterations conform to the provisions of this act and are authorized by the Secretary of War. That such alterations and changes as may be required by the Secretary of War or Congress in said bridge so as to preserve free and convenient navigation shall be made, under the direction of the Secretary of War, at their own expense, by the company or persons owning, controlling, or operating said bridge. That during original construction or in carrying out any authorized changes or repairs of said bridge a navigable channel shall be preserved at the site of the bridge at all times, and the water way of the river shall not be obstructed to a greater extent than is absolutely necessary, and such lights and buoys shall be kept on all coffer-dams, piles, etc., as may be necessary for the security of navigation.

SEC. 9. That whenever the Secretary of War has good reason to believe that any of the provisions of sections 4, 6, and 8 of this act have not been complied with by the company or persons owning, controlling, or operating the bridge authorized under its provisions, it shall be the duty of the Secretary of War, on satisfactory proof thereof, to require the said company or persons to comply with the provisions of said sections, and on failure of said persons or company to comply with said requirements within a reasonable time the Secretary of War shall proceed to cause the necessary work, in the form of additions, alterations, repairs, or removals of obstructions, to be made at the expense of the United States, and shall refer the matter, without delay, to the Attorney-General of the United States, whose duty it shall be to institute, in the name of the United States, proceedings in the circuit court of the United States, or any State in which any portion of said obstruction or bridge touches, for the recovery of the cost thereof, and all moneys accruing from such proceedings shall be covered into the Treasury of the United States: Provided, That in the construction of additional accessory works not contemplated by the approved plan of bridge and accessory works no greater sum than $15,000 shall be required to be expended upon said bridge in a single year: And provided further, That such sum of money as may be necessary to execute the provisions of this section is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, to be paid on requisition of the Secretary of War.

SEC. 10. That all railroad companies desiring the use of the bridge authorized by this act shall have, and be entitled to, equal rights and privileges relative to the passage of railway trains or cars over the same, and over the approaches thereto, upon the payment of a reasonable compensation for such use; and in case the owner or owners of said bridge and the several railroad companies, or any one of them, desiring such use shall fail to agree upon the sum or sums to be paid, and upon rules and conditions to which each shall conform in using said bridge, all matters at issue between them shall be decided by the Secretary of War upon a hearing of the allegations and proofs of the parties; and equal privileges in the use of said bridge shall be granted to all telegraph and telephone companies.

SEC. 11. That the bridge constructed, maintained, and operated under this act and according to its limitations shall be a lawful structure, and shall be recognized and known as a post-route, upon which also no higher charge shall be made for the transportation over the same of the mails, the troops, and the munitions of war of the United States than the rate per mile paid for transportation of said mails, troops, and munitions over the railroads and public highways leading to said bridge; and the United States shall have the right of way for postal-telegraph and telephone purposes over said bridge.

SEC. 12. That this act shall be null and void if actual construction of the bridge herein authorized be not commenced within two years and completed within four years from the date of passage or approval thereof.

SEC. 13. That all former acts or parts of acts granting authority for the erection of any bridge or bridges over the portion of said Columbia River over which the construction of a bridge is authorized by this act, be, and the same are hereby, repealed in each and every case where actual construction of said bridge or bridges be not commenced on or before the date of the passage or approval of this act.

SEC. 14. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved; and the right to require the entire removal of the bridge constructed under the provisions of this act, at the expense of the owners thereof, whenever Congress shall decide that the public interests require it, is also expressly reserved.

Mr. BAKER (when the Clerk had begun the reading of the bill). I ask unanimous consent that the reading of this bill, which is a bridge bill in ordinary form, be dispensed with.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I think I must object.

Mr. KILGORE. The bill had better be read.

Mr. BAKER. It will take considerable time.

Mr. KILGORE. We had better transact our business in a business-like way.

Mr. HERMANN. This bill has been approved by the Secretary of War and is properly guarded.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made by two gentlemen to dispensing with the reading.

The Clerk resumed and concluded the reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

PREVENTION OF CONTAGIOUS DISEASES.

Mr. BAKER. I call up for consideration the bill (S. 140) to prevent the introduction of contagious diseases from one State to another and for the punishment of certain offenses.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That whenever it shall be made to appear to the satisfaction of the President that cholera, yellow-fever, small-pox, or plague exists in any State or Territory or in the District of Columbia, and that there is danger of the spread of such disease into other States, Territories, or the District of Columbia, he is hereby authorized to cause the Secretary of the Treasury to make and promulgate such rules and regulations as in his judgment may be necessary to prevent the spread of such disease from one State or Territory into another, or from any State or Territory into the District of Columbia, or from the District of Columbia into any State or Territory, and to employ such inspectors and other persons as may be necessary to execute such regulations to prevent the spread of such disease. And any person who shall willfully violate any rule or regulation so made and promulgated shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction shall be punished by a fine of not more than $500 or imprisonment for not more than two years, or both, in the discretion of the court.

SEC. 2. That any officer or person acting as an officer or agent of the United States at any quarantine station, or other person employed to aid in preventing the spread of such disease, who shall willfully violate any of the quarantine laws of the United States or any of the rules and regulations made and promulgated by the Secretary of the Treasury, as provided for in section 1 of this act, or any lawful order of his superior officer or officers, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction shall be punished by a fine of not more than $500 or imprisonment for not more than one year, or both, in the discretion of the court.

SEC. 3. That when any common carrier or officer, agent, or employé of any common carrier shall willfully violate any of the quarantine laws of the United States, or the rules and regulations made and promulgated as provided for in section 1 of this act, such common carrier, officer, agent, or employé shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall, on conviction, be punished by a fine of not more than $500, or imprisonment for not more than two years, or both, in the discretion of the court.

Mr. CRISP. Does not that bill carry an appropriation? If it does not, I reserve the point of order.

The amendments of the committee were read, as follows:

In lines 19 and 11 of section 1, being line 9 of the printed bill, after the word "to," strike out the words "make and," and in line 29 of section 1, being line 16 of the printed bill, after the word "disease," insert: "The said rules and regulations shall be prepared by the Supervising General of the Marine-Hospital Service, under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury."

Mr. CRISP. Does not that bill involve an appropriation or charge upon the Treasury?

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not see anything which implies an appropriation.

Mr. CRISP. There is in the law a provision for payment for diseased cattle which may be killed. If this has any relation to that the point of order lies against it.

The SPEAKER. There is nothing of that kind in this bill. The gentleman misunderstood it.

Mr. CRISP. There is a law providing for payment for diseased cattle which may be killed.

The SPEAKER. This does not apply to that.

Mr. BAKER. It makes no charge upon the Treasury.

Mr. CRISP. I understood from the reading of the bill at the Clerk's desk that it relates to the transportation of cattle. I thought it related to the transportation of cattle, but if it is a different bill, of course I do not insist on my point of order.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BAKER moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

REGULATION OF STEAM-VESSELS.

Mr. BAKER. I call up for consideration the bill (S. 1629) to amend section 4414, Title LII, of the Revised Statutes of the United States, "Regulation of steam-vessels."

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 4414 of the Revised Statutes be amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 4414. There shall be, in each of the following collection districts, one inspector of hulls and one inspector of boilers, namely: The districts of New York, N. Y.; Boston, Mass.; Philadelphia, Pa.; San Francisco, Cal.; Albany, N. Y.; New London, Conn.; Baltimore, Md.; Buffalo, N. Y.; Cleveland, Ohio; New Orleans, La.; Norfolk, Va.; St. Louis, Mo.; Galena, Ill.; Detroit, Mich.; Chicago, Ill.; Michigan, Mich.; Milwaukee, Wis.; Port Huron, Mich.; Willamette, Oregon; Portland, Me.; Puget Sound, Wash.; Savannah, Ga.; Pittsburgh, Pa.; Oswego, N. Y.; Charleston, S. C.; Duluth, Minn.; Louisville, Ky.; Evansville, Ind.; Memphis, Tenn.; Nashville, Tenn.; Cincinnati, Ohio; Gallipolis, Ohio; Wheeling, W. Va.; Superior, Mich.; Burlington, Vt.; Apalachicola, Fla.; Galveston, Tex.; Mobile, Ala. and Providence, R. I.

"The inspector of hulls and the inspector of boilers in the districts enumerated in the preceding paragraph shall be entitled to the following salaries, to be paid under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, namely:

"In districts inspecting less than one hundred steamers, to a salary of $1,200 per year each.

"In districts inspecting over one hundred and less than one hundred and fifty steamers, to a salary of $1,500 per year each.

"In districts inspecting over one hundred and fifty and less than two hundred steamers, to a salary of $1,800 per year each.

"In districts inspecting two hundred and less than three hundred steamers, to a salary of $2,000 per year each.

"In districts inspecting three hundred and less than five hundred steamers, to a salary of $2,250 per year each.

"In districts inspecting five hundred steamers and upward, to a salary of $2,500 per year each.

"The Supervising Inspector-General shall report to the Secretary of the Treasury at the end of each fiscal year the number of steamers inspected in each local district in that year, which number shall be the basis upon which shall be determined the salaries to be paid to local inspectors for the following fiscal year, in the ratio described in the preceding paragraphs of this section. And in addition the Secretary of the Treasury may appoint, upon the nomination of the supervising inspector of the district, in collection districts where there are two hundred and twenty-five steamers and upward to be inspected annually, assistant inspectors, at a salary, for the district of New York, $2,000 a year each; for the district of New Orleans, La.: Philadelphia, Pa.: Baltimore, Md.: Boston, Mass.; and San Francisco, Cal., at $1,800 per year each; and for all other districts, at a salary not exceeding $1,600 a year each; and he may appoint a clerk to any such board at a compensation not exceeding $1,200 a year to each person so appointed. Every inspector provided for in this or the preceding sections of this title shall be paid for his actual and reasonable traveling expenses at the rate of 8 cents per mile, incurred in the performance of his duty, together with his actual and reasonable expenses for transportation of instruments, which shall be certified and sworn to under such instructions as shall be given by the Secretary of the Treasury."

SEC. 2. That the said original section 4414 be, and the same is hereby, repealed.

SEC. 3. That this act shall take effect July 1, 1890.

Mr. HOLMAN. That involves an appropriation.

Mr. McMILLIN. I make the point of order that the bill involves an appropriation and must have its first consideration in a Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not understand how it got upon the House Calendar. It does not properly belong upon this Calendar.

Mr. BAKER. All right.

The SPEAKER. One moment.

Mr. McMILLIN. The bill is not before the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman makes the point of order that the bill makes an appropriation and should have its first consideration in Committee of the Whole. Unless the bill fails to change existing law it seems quite apparent, on the face of the bill, that it should go to the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. McMILLIN. It increases largely the number of offices.

The SPEAKER. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. BAKER. I withdraw the bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not understand how this bill got on the House Calendar.

Mr. McMILLIN. If it requires a motion I move that it be referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER. It does not, but the bill will go to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union under the rules. It should not have been put upon the House Calendar.

BRIDGE OVER MISSISSIPPI RIVER NEAR LYONS, IOWA.

Mr. BAKER. I now call up for consideration the bill (S. 1297) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the construction of a wagon and foot-passenger bridge across the Mississippi River at or near Lyons, Iowa."

The Clerk proceeded with the reading of the bill.

Mr. BAKER. I move, at the request of several gentlemen, that the reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The SPEAKER. Is it in the ordinary form?

Mr. BAKER. It is.

Mr. McCREARY. I ask for the reading of the bill.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That an act entitled "An act to authorize the construction of a wagon and foot-passenger bridge across the Mississippi River at or near Lyons, Iowa," approved March 2, 1889, be, and the same is hereby, amended as follows, namely:

Strike out the title of said act and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"An act to authorize the construction of a railroad or wagon and foot-passenger bridge across the Mississippi River at or near Lyons, Iowa."

Strike out the first section of said act and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"That the Lyons and Fulton Bridge Company, a corporation organized and existing under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Iowa, its successors or assigns, be, and they are hereby, authorized to construct and maintain a bridge and approaches thereto over the Mississippi River, at a location suitable to the interests of navigation, from a point in or near the city of Lyons, Iowa, to the opposite shore of said river, in the State of Illinois. Said bridge shall be constructed to provide for the safe and convenient passage of wagons, road-way vehicles of all kinds, animals, and foot-passengers, and, at the option of said corporation, its successors or assigns, may be so constructed as to provide for and be used for the passage of railroad trains, for such reasonable rates or tolls as may be fixed from time to time by said corporation, its successors or assigns, and subject to approval and change by the Secretary of War."

Strike out section 2 of said act and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"SEC. 2. That any bridge built under the provisions of this act may, at the option of the company building the same, be built with unbroken and continuous spans, or as a draw-bridge, or as a ponton draw-bridge: Provided, That if said bridge shall be made with unbroken and continuous spans it shall have one or more channel spans, each giving not less than 350 feet clear channel way and not less than 55 feet clear head-room above high-water mark, and the clear head-room under other than channel spans may be less than 55 feet, but no part of the superstructure of such spans shall be less than 10 feet above high-water mark: Provided, That the interests of navigation be not injured by such reduction of height: And provided further, That if any bridge built under the provisions of this act shall be constructed as a draw-bridge, it shall have two or more draw-openings, each giving not less than 200 feet clear channel way, and, in addition to said draw-openings, shall have one or more fixed channel spans, each giving not less than 350 feet clear channel way, and every part of the superstructure of draw-bridges shall give a clear head-room of not less than 10 feet above high-water mark: And provided further, That if any bridge built under the provisions of this act shall be constructed as a ponton draw-bridge, it shall be built subject (except as herein modified) to all the terms, requirements, and limitations contained in the act entitled 'An act to legalize and establish a ponton railway bridge across the Mississippi River at Prairie du Chien, and to authorize the construction of a similar bridge at or near Clinton, Iowa,' approved June 6, 1874, so far as they may be applicable thereto: And provided, also, That it shall be constructed with one suitable ponton draw giving not less than 300 feet clear channel way, and such other ponton draws and other openings as may, in the opinion of the Secretary of War, be necessary: And provided further, That the piers of any bridge authorized by this act shall be parallel with the current of the river and the bridge itself at right angles thereto, and the spans of any such bridge shall be so located as to afford the greatest possible accommodation to the river traffic, and the draw-spans of any such bridge shall be opened promptly by steam or other reliable mechanical power upon reasonable signal for the passage of boats: And provided further, That the dimensions of all spans, not definitely fixed by this act, shall be such as in the opinion of the Secretary of War will best serve the interests of navigation: And provided further, That for any two adjacent draw-openings of 300 feet each one draw-opening of 300 feet may be substituted, if the interests of navigation be not injured thereby: And provided further, That if the physical characteristics of the locality where a bridge authorized by this act is to be constructed require, and the interests of navigation be not injured thereby, the length of the fixed openings or the number of draw-openings required by this act may be reduced by the Secretary of War."

Strike out section 4 of said act and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"SEC. 4. That if any bridge built under the provisions of this act shall be constructed to provide for the passage of railroad trains, all railroad and other companies desiring to use the same shall have and be entitled to equal rights and privileges in the passage of the same, and in the use of the machinery and fixtures thereof, and all approaches thereto, under and upon such terms and conditions as shall be prescribed by the Secretary of War, upon hearing the allegations and proofs of the parties, in case they shall not agree."

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BAKER moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

BRIDGE OVER RED RIVER OF THE NORTH.

Mr. BAKER. I call up for consideration the bill (H. R. 3876) authorizing the construction of a bridge across the Red River of the North.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the assent of Congress is hereby given to the Crookston, Fort Stephenson and Montana Railroad Company, a corporation existing under the laws of the State of Minnesota, and to its successors and assigns, to construct and maintain a pivot draw-bridge and approaches thereto, across the Red River of the North, between the State of Minnesota and the Territory of Dakota at such point on said river, on the boundary-line between Polk County, in the State of Minnesota, and the Territory of Dakota, as may accommodate the lines of railroad which said corporation may build to said point. Said bridge shall be constructed to provide for the passage of railway trains, and, at the option of the said corporation, may be used for the passage of wagons and vehicles of all kinds, for the transit of animals, and for foot-passengers, for reasonable rates or tolls to be fixed by the Secretary of War; and the Secretary of War shall have the right, from time to time, to revise such rates or tolls.

SEC. 2. That the said bridge shall be constructed as a pivot draw-bridge, and shall be so constructed that a free and unobstructed passage may be secured to all water-craft, rafts, or logs navigating said river at the point aforesaid: Provided, That the draw of said bridge shall be opened promptly upon reasonable signals for the passage of boats or vessels; and said corporation shall maintain, at its own expense, from sunset to sunrise, such lights or other signals on said bridge as the Secretary of War shall prescribe. The said bridge shall be located and built under and subject to such regulations for the security of the navigation of said river as the Secretary of War shall prescribe; and to secure that object the said company shall submit to the Secretary of War, for his examination and approval, a design and drawings of said bridge and piers, and a map of the location, giving, for the space of one mile below and one mile above the proposed location, the topography of the banks of the river, the shore-lines at high and low water, the direction and strength of the current at all stages, and the soundings, accurately showing the bed and channel of the stream, and shall furnish such other information as shall be required for a full and satisfactory understanding of the subject; and until the said location and plan of the bridge hereby authorized to be constructed are approved by the Secretary of War, the said bridge shall not be built; and should any change be made in the plan of such bridge during the progress of construction thereof, such change shall be subject to the approval of the Secretary of War.

SEC. 3. That all railroad companies desiring the use of the bridge constructed under this act shall have and be entitled to equal rights and privileges relative to the passage of railway trains, cars, and locomotives over the same, and over the approaches thereto, upon the payment of a reasonable compensation for such use, to be fixed by the Secretary of War, in case the owner or owners of the said bridge and the several railroad companies, or any of them desiring such use, shall fail to agree upon the sum or sums to be paid; and the Secretary of War shall prescribe the rules and conditions to which each shall conform in using said bridge, and all matters of difference between them shall be decided by the Secretary of War upon a hearing of the allegations and proofs of the parties.

SEC. 4. That the bridge authorized to be constructed under this act shall be a lawful structure, and shall be recognized and known as a post-route, and the same is hereby declared to be a post-route, upon which also no higher charge shall be made for the transmission over the same of the mails, troops, and munitions of war of the United States, or for through railway passengers or freight passing over said bridge, than the rate per mile for their transmission over the railroads leading to said bridge; and the United States shall have the right of way across said bridge and its approaches for postal-telegraph purposes.

SEC. 5. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act, so as to prevent or remove all material and substantial obstructions to the navigation of said river by the construction of the said bridge, is hereby expressly reserved; and any alterations or changes that may be required by Congress in the bridge constructed under this act shall be made by the corporation owning or controlling the same, at its own expense.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. That is not the next bill on the Calendar.

The SPEAKER. The committee is not required to call them up in their order on the Calendar.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Why should the next bill on the Calendar be superseded?

The SPEAKER. There is nothing in the rule which requires the Calendar to be followed.

Mr. BAKER. I ask the Clerk to read the amendment reported from the committee in the nature of a new section.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 6. That the time within which the construction of said bridge shall be commenced shall be three years from and after the passage of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BAKER. I ask for the reading of the other amendments. The bill as reported was not reprinted, but the amendments were indicated in the report.

The SPEAKER. The amendments will be read.

The Clerk read the amendments, as follows:

Section 1, line 8, strike out the word "Territory" and insert in lieu thereof the word "State," and before the word "Dakota" insert the word "North;" also, make the same changes in line 10.

Section 2, line 11, after the word "river," insert the following: "and such requirements as to location and direction of piers and spans, clear headway at high water and clear spans at low water."

Same section, line 14, strike out the words "a design and."

Same section, line 15, after the word "bridge," insert the words "and piers."

The amendments were adopted.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE COLUMBIA RIVER.

Mr. BAKER. I now call up the bill (H. R. 7618) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Columbia River in Oregon and Washington by the Columbia Bridge Company; and I make the same request with respect to this bill. I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the bill be dispensed with, it being in the usual form.

Mr. McMILLIN. I submit, Mr. Speaker, that bills that are of sufficient importance to demand the attention of Congress ought to be at least read once in the presence of the House.

Mr. HERMANN. If the gentleman from Tennessee will permit me, I will state that this bill is word for word, except as to the location of the structure, similar to the language of the other bill which has just been passed. The same phraseology is used and every provision is incorporated which is demanded by the Secretary of War for the protection of the Government's rights.

Mr. McMILLIN. I think that these bills ought to be read when the House is called upon to consider them, and I therefore object.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Columbia Bridge Company, a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of Oregon, its successors and assigns, be, and is hereby, authorized to construct and maintain, if in the opinion of the Secretary of War the same be a public necessity, a bridge across the Columbia River at a place suitable to the interests of navigation at a point at or near a crossing of the Columbia Slough road and the section line dividing sections 9 and 10, township 1 north, range 1 east, of the Willamette meridian, in Multnomah County, Oregon, and to lay on or over said bridge a track or tracks for the more perfect connection of any railroad or railroads that are or shall be constructed to said river, on either or both sides thereof, at or opposite said point, under the limitations and conditions hereinafter provided: That said bridge shall not interfere with the free navigation of said river, and in case of any litigation arising from any obstruction or alleged obstruction to the free navigation of said river, the cause may be tried before the circuit court of the United States in and for any district in whose jurisdiction any portion of said obstruction or bridge touches. Said bridge shall be constructed to provide for the passage of railroad trains, and, at the option of the said company or corporation, its successors and assigns, for the safe and convenient passage of wagons and vehicles of all kinds, animals, and foot-passengers, for such reasonable rates of toll as may be fixed from time to time by the Secretary of War.

Sec. 2. That said bridge shall be provided with two or more draw openings, each having not less than 200 feet clear channel way, and in addition to said draw openings one or more fixed channel spans, each having not less than 350 feet clear channel way, and every part of the superstructure of said bridge shall give a clear head-room of not less than 10 feet above extreme known high-water mark: Provided, That all spans shall be so located as to afford the greatest possible accommodation to the river traffic, and a draw opening shall, if practicable, be located next or near shore: Provided, also, That, if the physical characteristics of the locality so require and the interests of navigation be not injured thereby, the length of the fixed spans or the number of draw openings may be reduced: Provided, also, That for any two adjacent draw openings of 200 feet each one draw opening of 300 feet may be substituted if the interests of navigation be not injured thereby.

Sec. 3. That all draw-spans authorized by this act shall be operated by steam or other reliable mechanical power, and shall be opened promptly upon reasonable signal for the passage of boats, except when trains are passing over said span or spans; but in no case shall unnecessary delay occur in opening said draw after the passage of trains; and also, that in case the opening of a draw is delayed by reason of the passing of a train after the signal has been given from a boat ready to pass through, the draw shall be opened for the passage of such boat before another train is allowed to pass over the said span or spans; nor shall there be any unnecessary delay in the passage of trains over the bridge.

Sec. 4. That all piers shall be built parallel with the current of the river at that stage of water which is most important for navigation; and the bridge itself shall be built as nearly as may be at right angles thereto, and that riprapping or other protection for imperfect foundations which will lessen the required water way shall not be permitted; and also, that piers which will produce cross-currents or bars dangerous to navigation shall not be constructed; and if, after construction, any piers or accessory works are found to produce the above-mentioned effects, or if any riprapping or other protection prohibited by this section is found to exist, the nuisances shall be abated or corrected under the direction of the Secretary of War, or at the expense of the company or persons owning, controlling, or operating said bridge.

Sec. 5. That the approaches to said bridge shall be so designed and constructed as not to interfere with the free discharge of said river in seasons of flood, and any encroachment on the high-water cross-section by piers, solid embankments, or otherwise, which will result in unduly accelerating the high-water current at the site of the bridge, shall not be allowed.

Sec. 6. That any corporation, company, or persons owning, controlling, or operating the bridge built under the authority of this act shall build and maintain at all times as accessory works to such bridge such booms, piers, dikes, guard-fences, and similar devices as may be necessary to insure at all times a permanent channel for a sufficient distance above and below the bridge site, and for the guiding of rafts, steam-boats, and other water-craft safely under or through said bridge; and if at any time after the construction of the bridge and its accessory works the approaches to draw-openings, channel-spans, or raft passages in said bridge are found to be dangerous or difficult of access by any important class of river traffic, the Secretary of War may, upon the recommendation of the Chief of Engineers, United States Army, order the corporation, company, or persons owning, controlling, or operating said bridge to construct, under his directions, and to maintain such additional sheer-booms, dikes, and other devices as will obviate the difficulty mentioned; which additional sheer-booms, dikes, and other devices shall be built and maintained at their own expense by said company or persons; and that said company or persons shall maintain, at their own expense, from sunset to sunrise, throughout the season of navigation, such lights and other signals on said bridge as may be required by the Light-House Board for the security of navigation.

Sec. 7. That the bridge authorized to be constructed by this act shall be located and built under and subject to such regulations for the security of navigation on said river as the Secretary of War shall prescribe; and to secure that object said corporation shall submit for his examination a design and drawings of the bridge, piers, approaches, and accessory works, and a map of the location, giving, for a space of at least 3 miles above and 1 mile below the proposed location, the topography of the banks of the river and the shore-lines at high and low water. This map shall be accompanied by others drawn on the scale of 1 inch to 200 feet, giving, for a space of one-half a mile above the line of the proposed bridge and one-quarter of a mile below, an accurate representation of the bottom of the river, by contour lines 2 feet apart, determined by accurate soundings, and also showing over the whole width of this part of the river the force and directions of the currents at low water, at high water, and at least one intermediate stage, by triangulated observations on suitable floats. The map shall also show the location of other bridges in the vicinity, and shall give such information as the Secretary of War may require for a full and satisfactory understanding of the subject, and the construction of the proposed bridge shall not be commenced until the location and plans thereof are approved by the Secretary of War.

Sec. 8. That any bridge constructed under the authority of this act shall be built under the general supervision of the Secretary of War, and no changes or alterations in plans shall be made during construction of said bridge or after its completion, unless said changes or alterations conform to the provisions of this act and are authorized by the Secretary of War. That such alterations and changes as may be required by the Secretary of War or Congress in said bridge, so as to preserve free and convenient navigation, shall be made under the direction of the Secretary of War, at their own expense, by the company or persons owning, controlling, or operating said bridge. That during original construction or in carrying out any authorized changes or repairs of said bridge a navigable channel shall be preserved at the site of the bridge at all times, and the water way of the river shall not be obstructed to a greater extent than is absolutely necessary, and such lights and buoys shall be kept on all coffer-dams, piles, etc., as may be necessary for the security of navigation.

Sec. 9. That whenever the Secretary of War has good reason to believe that any of the provisions of sections 1, 6, and 8 of this act have not been complied with by the company or persons owning, controlling, or operating the bridge authorized under its provisions, it shall be the duty of the Secretary of War, on satisfactory proof thereof, to require the said company or persons to comply with the provisions of said sections, and, on failure of said persons or company to comply with said requirements within a reasonable time, the Secretary of War shall proceed to cause the necessary work, in the form of additions, alterations, repairs, or removal of obstructions, to be made at the expense of the United States and shall refer the matter without delay to the Attorney-General of the United States, whose duty it shall be to institute, in the name of the United States, proceedings in the circuit court of the United States, or any State in which any portion of said obstruction or bridge touches, for the recovery of the cost thereof, and all moneys accruing from such proceedings shall be covered into the Treasury of the United States: Provided, That in the construction of additional accessory works not contemplated by the approved plan of bridge and accessory works, no greater sum than $15,000 shall be required to be expended upon said bridge in a single year: And provided further, That such sum of money as may be necessary to execute the provisions of this section is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, to be paid on requisition of the Secretary of War.

Sec. 10. That all railroad companies desiring the use of the bridge authorized by this act shall have and be entitled to equal rights and privileges relative to the passage of railway trains or cars over the same, and over the approaches thereto, upon the payment of a reasonable compensation for such use; and in case the owner or owners of said bridge and the several railroad companies, or any one of them, desiring such use shall fail to agree upon the sum or sums to be paid, and upon rules and conditions to which each shall conform in using said bridge, all matters at issue between them shall be decided by the Secretary of War upon a hearing of the allegations and proofs of the parties; and equal privileges in the use of said bridge shall be granted to all telegraph and telephone companies.

Sec. 11. That the bridge constructed, maintained, and operated under this act according to its limitations shall be a lawful structure, and shall be recognized and known as a post-route, upon which also no higher charge shall be made for the transportation over the same of the mails, the troops, and the munitions of war of the United States than the rate per mile paid for transportation of said mails, troops, and munitions over the railroads and public highways leading to said bridge; and the United States shall have the right of way for postal-telegraph and telephone purposes over said bridge.

Sec. 12. That this act shall be null and void if actual construction of the bridge herein authorized be not commenced within two years and completed within four years from the date of passage or approval thereof.

Sec. 13. That all former acts or parts of acts granting authority for the erection of any bridge or bridges over the portion of said Columbia River over which the construction of a bridge is authorized by this act, be, and the same are hereby, repealed in each and every case where actual construction of said bridge or bridges be not commenced on or before the date of the passage or approval of this act.

Sec. 14. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved; and the right to require the entire removal of the bridge constructed under the provisions of this act, at the expense of the owners thereof, whenever Congress shall decide that the public interests require it, is also expressly reserved.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

BRIDGES ACROSS THE MINNESOTA RIVER.

Mr. BAKER. I now call up the bill (H. R. 507) granting the counties of Hennepin and Dakota, Minnesota, the right to build two bridges across the Minnesota River.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the board of county commissioners of the county of Hennepin and State of Minnesota be, and the same hereby are, authorized to construct and maintain two bridges over the Minnesota River and approaches thereto; one bridge to be located, by a majority of the said board of county commissioners of said Hennepin County and a majority of the board of county commissioners of the county of Dakota, in said State of Minnesota, either in section 13, in township 27, range 24 west of the fourth principal meridian, or in section 18, township 27, range 23 west of the fourth principal meridian, as in the judgment of said majority of said commissioners shall be the best place for the construction of said bridge and approaches thereto; and one bridge and ap-proachesthereto, between and connecting said Hennepin County and the county of Scott, in said State of Minnesota, at the point or place on said Minnesota River commonly known as and called "Bloomington Ferry" or "Lyndale Avenue," or at any place where said board of county commissioners of Hennepin County may decide between said points. Said bridges and approaches shall be of such plans and material as said board of county commissioners of Hennepin County shall in their discretion determine, except that said bridges shall be constructed as draw-bridges, and shall be and remain forever free. Said bridge or bridges shall be constructed to provide for free passage of wagons and vehicles of all kinds, for the transit of animals and for foot-passengers.

SEC. 2. That any bridge built under this act and subject to its limitations shall be a lawful structure, and shall be recognized as a post-route, and shall enjoy the rights and privileges of other post-roads in the United States: Provided, That the United States may construct a postal telegraph over said bridge or bridges without charge therefor.

SEC. 3. That any bridge built under this act shall be constructed as a pivot draw-bridge, with a draw over the main channel at an accessible and the best navigable point, and with draw-spans; a clear water way, measured at the lowest stage of water known at the locality, of not less than 80 feet in clear width, as herein provided for, shall not be reduced by deposits of rip-rap, or by other material about the piers and abutments; and the spans shall not be of less elevation than 3 feet above extreme high-water mark, as shown at the point of location, measuring to the lowest part of the superstructure of said bridge, and provision shall be made in the location and construction of the abutments and approaches to allow the free passage of flood water; and the piers of said bridge shall be parallel to and the bridge itself at right angles to the direction of the current of said stream: Provided, also, That the said draw, or draws, shall be opened promptly upon reasonable signal, for the passage of boats, and said board of county commissioners of said Hennepin County shall maintain at the expense of said Hennepin County such lights or other signals thereon as the Light-House Board may prescribe, and said Hennepin County shall provide at its own expense such sheer-booms, guide-piers, or other device as may be at any time deemed necessary by the Secretary of War to facilitate the safe passage of boats or other water craft through the spans of said bridge. No bridge shall be erected or maintained under authority of this act which shall at any time substantially or materially obstruct the free navigation of said river; and if any bridge erected under such authority shall, in the opinion of the Secretary of War, obstruct said navigation, he is hereby authorized to cause such change or alteration of said bridge to be made as will effectually obviate such obstructions, at the expense of said county of Hennepin, and in case of any litigation arising from any obstruction, or alleged obstruction, to the free navigation of said river caused, or alleged to be caused, by said bridges, or either, the case may be brought in the circuit court of the United States of the district in which said obstruction or bridges are located: Provided further, That nothing in this act shall be so construed as to repeal or modify any of the provisions of law now existing in reference to the protection of the navigation of rivers, or to exempt any bridge or bridges constructed by virtue thereof from the operation of the same.

SEC. 4. That any bridge or bridges authorized to be constructed under this act shall be built and located under and subject to such regulations for the security of navigation of said river as the Secretary of War shall prescribe, and to secure that object the said board of county commissioners of said Hennepin County shall submit to the Secretary of War, for his examination and approval, designs and drawings of the proposed bridges and a map of the location, giving for the space of one mile above and one mile below the proposed locations the topography of the banks of the river, the shore lines at high and low water, the direction and strength of the currents at all stages, and the surroundings, accurately showing the bed of the stream, the location of any other bridges, and shall furnish such other information as may be required for a full and satisfactory understanding of the subject; and should any change be made in the plan of said bridge or bridges such change shall be subject to the approval of the Secretary of War.

SEC. 5. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved, and the right to require any changes in such structure or structures, or the entire repeal thereof, at the expense of the owners, whenever Congress shall decide that the public interest requires it, is also expressly reserved.

SEC. 6. That this act shall be null and void if actual construction of the bridges herein authorized be not commenced within one year and completed within three years from the date thereof.

The committee recommend the adoption of the following amendments:

Section 3, line 4, omit semicolon after the word "draw spans" and insert the word "having."

Same section, line 6, strike out the words "as herein provided for" and insert in lieu thereof the word "which," and after the word "not" insert the word "thereafter."

Same section, line 9, strike out the word "three" and insert in lieu thereof the word "ten."

The amendments recommended by the committee were adopted.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

INSPECTION OF HULLS AND BOILERS, GALENA DISTRICT.

Mr. BAKER. I call up the bill which I send to the desk, and ask its present consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 278) to amend paragraph 3 of section 4414 of the Revised Statutes. Be it enacted, etc., That paragraph 3 of section 4414 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be amended as follows: "Strike out the word 'Galena' in said paragraph 3 and insert the word 'Dubuque.'"

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

Mr. HITT. Mr. Speaker, I move to recommit that bill. It concerns the district which I represent. I was not informed of the consideration of the bill, as the gentleman states, by inadvertence; but I telegraphed and have just received a response from the city of Galena, the board of trade of that city, requesting this action, and stating that they desire to be heard upon the bill. I therefore move to recommit this bill to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. One moment, Mr. Speaker, before that motion is submitted.

Mr. HITT. I wish, before the gentleman from Iowa proceeds, to state the reason why I did not appear before the committee. In the first place the title of the bill does not disclose its true nature; and the gentleman on the committee with whom I conferred had no suggestion in reference to the time it would be called up or as to my appearing before the committee.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, this same bill, identically of the same title, was introduced in the last Congress, and the gentleman from Illinois had full knowledge then of the character of the bill. I have been fighting ever since I have been in Congress, in pursuance of the demands of the commerce of the Mississippi River, for this legislation. It was introduced before the adoption of the new rules and has been fully considered in the Committee on Commerce. The gentleman from Illinois, as a member of that committee, knew of the presence of the bill before the committee.

This bill has its merits in a nutshell, and that is to provide that the Mississippi River interest shall not be compelled to transact their business in the interior of the State of Illinois instead of on the river, where it should be done.

Now, I am opposed to the recommitment of this bill, and I want to say to my colleague from Illinois that he can have ten minutes to discuss the bill and I will take but two, and then I am perfectly willing to leave it to the House to determine what shall be done. I want action on the bill now. I do not want it to be hung up again, by being sent to the Committee on Commerce for further delay or to throttle this legislation. Hence I earnestly protest against its recommitment. This bill was introduced in the House, was considered by the committee, is fairly on the Calendar, and I myself spoke to the gentleman from Illinois about this coming up three or four days ago, supposing all the time that he knew everything about it—

Mr. HITT. Be fair, now.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. I am fair. Did I not inform you?

Mr. HITT. You told me so on Saturday.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Well, that is three days ago. You only confirm my own statement.

Now, I have been diligent in trying to secure this legislation. Let us have a fair discussion, which must necessarily be brief, because there can not be much said about it. It is a simple thing, important to be done, and I am opposed to its recommitment, and hope the motion will not prevail.

Mr. HITT. Well, the gentleman stated, and I know that he did not mean to be misconstrued, for he is truthful, that it had been fully considered by the committee, and that the member from Illinois was there. Why, I think—

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Why, I did not say that the gentleman from Illinois on the committee was in the committee-room when it was considered; but I said that the member from Illinois on the committee knew that it was done, and got the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. SWENEY] to hold up the report for several days on his account.

Mr. HITT. That gentleman seemed to me, when I spoke to him, to know nothing about the merits of the bill, and the chairman had to have it described to him in order to know what it was. I ask that a constituency have a hearing by the committee. It is the usage on bills of this kind to have the state of facts from the Department, and not trust to the declamation of a member representing the district. I will not undertake to go into the merits of the bill.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. I wish you would go into the merits of the bill.

Mr. HITT. I do not think it fair to dispose of it now, as I have received a telegram from the board of trade of that very well known city asking that they shall have an opportunity to make argument on the proposition. I desire that they shall be heard at the proper time and place before the committee, where I had the right to appear and where I certainly would have appeared had there been any intimation given me that such legislation was pending, or as any member of the House would have been where the interests of his constituents were involved.

I know that the gentlemen on the committee are incapable of being unfair; and I think they would have given me an intimation that this bill was pending; and, being a bill affecting my district, I ask of the House that it go back to the committee so that I may have a hearing. If the committee shall then report it, I will meet it here fairly. These people are requesting that I have a chance to speak for my people before the committee on this bill.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. This bill is here regularly. It was introduced regularly, considered by a full committee, and reported.

Mr. HOPKINS. Will the gentleman from Iowa yield to me for a question?

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Certainly.

Mr. HOPKINS. Now, if this proposition has merit, how will you or your interests be harmed by recommitting the bill to the committee and give the constituency of Mr. HITT an opportunity of being heard?

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. I do not want it to be recommitment. I did not know that he was not before the committee, but I will give you and your colleague [Mr. HITT] and the entire Illinois delegation ten minutes to my one to present it here on the floor of the House. My objection to its recommitment is that we do not want the bill taken back to the committee and there hang up and its final settlement delayed. The committee has considered and reported it, and I want it disposed of.

Mr. HOPKINS. That is not the point at all. The point is to give the gentleman from the Sixth district of Illinois [Mr. HITT] an opportunity for his constituents to be heard before the committee. Now, this is a matter that seems to me appeals to the fairness of any gentleman.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. The gentleman asked me to yield to him for a question, and he is making a statement. I have the floor.

Mr. HOPKINS. Will your interests not be as well served by letting it go to the committee?

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. All I want is fair treatment in this matter. I have taken no advantage of any one. The constituency of the gentleman from Illinois knew that this was pending in the last Congress, and know that the owners and shippers on the Mississippi River have petitioned Congress year after year asking that the offices of the inspectors of boilers and hulls be on the Mississippi River, and not in the interior, where there is no navigable stream connecting it with the Mississippi River.

The gentleman can well represent in this House the interest of his constituents. My bill is here, honorably and honestly brought here; and I do not want the third time to have delay in this Congress on a matter that is so simple that I would be willing to make a referee of my friend from Illinois [Mr. HITT] on the merit of this question, but would not do so because he represents that district.

Mr. HOPKINS. You have never answered my question as to how you will be harmed by the recommitment of this bill.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Because it will delay action on the bill.

Mr. KERR, of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, is this a motion to recommit the bill?

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. KERR, of Pennsylvania. I rise to a question of order, and my point of order is that this is a matter that is before the House and that the motion made by the gentleman from Illinois is not debatable.

The SPEAKER. Under the rules it is debatable.

Mr. KERR, of Pennsylvania. Then that settles it.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say that Mr. SWENEY, of Iowa, stated to me that Mr. MASON, a member on the committee from Illinois, came into the committee-room, and Mr. SWENEY called his attention to the bill and that it had been acted upon favorably. That is the way the bill has come before the House.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Is it not also true that Mr. MASON asked that the bill be held up until he could inquire about it? Was that the bill on which he made that request? I know he made that request in reference to some bill, and I think it was this one.

Mr. SWENEY. Mr. Speaker, I will answer the inquiry of the gentleman from Kansas. This bill was acted upon by the committee, and I was authorized, as a member of the committee from the State of Iowa, to make the report of the committee favorably. Immediately after that action was taken Mr. MASON, from Illinois, who is a member of the committee, came into the room, and it occurred to me that he, representing the State of Illinois, ought to have knowledge of what had been done; so I called the attention of the chairman of the committee, Mr. MASON, and other members of the committee to the action had. Mr. MASON asked that it be held up for a few days, that he might have a chance of conferring with reference to it.

Mr. HITT. With whom?

Mr. SWENEY. He did not designate the party.

Mr. HITT. I was the one who ought to have had the knowledge of it. I never knew of this bill until it came here.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. That was not the fault of Mr. SWENEY or myself.

Mr. SWENEY. I supposed I had acted with entire courtesy and fairness in the matter in considering Mr. MASON's reasons. I held up the report for a week or ten days, and hearing nothing from him until after he went from here to Chicago, I made the report on the bill. [Cries of "Vote!"]

Mr. HITT. I never heard of the bill.

Mr. VANDEVER. Mr. Speaker, I have some personal knowledge of the situation in this matter. For many years I resided in the city of Dubuque, and I know the situation of the city of Galena. It is no longer upon the navigable waters of the Mississippi River. Galena River, entering the Mississippi, long ago ceased to be navigable. Galena is not the proper place for the office of inspectors of hulls and boilers of steam-boats plying on the Mississippi River. He might as well reside at Chicago as at Galena. Such has been the case for a number of years, and the men engaged in the navigation of the Mississippi River can not go to Galena, 12 miles away from a navigable stream, to have their boats inspected; any fair and impartial man who lives either in Illinois or in Iowa must say that these inspection officers ought to be at Dubuque, and not at a distance from the navigable waters of the Mississippi.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I ask unanimous consent that this bill be recommitted to the committee, they to have the privilege of reporting it back for consideration at any time, and to be required to report it within ten days.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. I will consent to that suggestion cheerfully.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed as in Committee of the Whole with the consideration of certain bills reported by the Committee of Commerce and now upon the Union Calendar.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Speaker, has the morning hour expired?

The SPEAKER. It has not expired.

Mr. SPRINGER. How long is this hour?

The SPEAKER. As long as the House chooses to make it.

Mr. SPRINGER. Have the sixty minutes expired, so that it would be in order to move to take up other business?

The SPEAKER. That motion would be in order.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. Speaker, there are some other bills reported from the Committee on Commerce, but not yet printed, that should be on the Calendar, and I suppose the committee will have the right to the floor to finish the second hour on the next call.

The SPEAKER. Which second hour? [Laughter.]

Mr. BAKER. The committee did not have the whole of the first hour.

The SPEAKER. The committee will have the right to finish the first second hour, but not the second one. [Laughter.]

Mr. PERKINS. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the consideration of the bill of the Senate S. 895, with the House substitute therefor.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. Speaker, I should have made the motion to reconsider the vote by which the bills called up by the Committee on Commerce were passed.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. BAKER] gave notice that he would make a general motion to reconsider the several votes upon the bills passed this morning at the instance of the Committee on Commerce. Without objection, the motion to reconsider will be entered in each case, and will be laid on the table.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. LACEY. Pending the motion of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. PERKINS], I ask unanimous consent to present a privileged report. It is a resolution reported unanimously from the Committee on Elections, and its consideration will take but a moment.

Mr. PERKINS. I will give way for that.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the report.

CLAYTON VS. BRECKINRIDGE.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. LACEY, from the Committee on Elections, makes the following report: On the 16th day of December, 1889, the following resolution was passed by the House of Representatives:

"Whereas it is well known that a contest for a seat in this House was duly commenced by Hon. John M. Clayton, of Arkansas, against Hon. C. R. Breckinridge, a sitting member; and

"Whereas it is a matter of public notoriety that said Clayton, while engaged in taking testimony in the said contest, was assassinated, and all further proceedings thereby suspended;

"Resolved, therefore, That the Committee on Elections be, and is hereby, directed to inquire and report what further proceedings should be had in relation to the said case; and they are authorized to send for persons and papers, if deemed necessary by them, for the investigation of the said matter."

In pursuance of the directions contained in the foregoing resolution, the committee have obtained the notice of contest and answer of the contestee and all the evidence which had been taken up to the time of the death of Mr. Clayton. The attorney for Mr. Clayton has presented to the committee a memorial in relation to the said contest, which memorial has been submitted to Mr. Breckinridge, and he has presented to the committee a statement in his own behalf. We have directed that the foregoing papers be printed for the information of the House.

The committee have proceeded as far as they can under the said resolution, and they therefore report—

That, owing to the alleged assassination of Colonel Clayton, whereby the contest has been suspended, it is of the highest importance that the facts in the case should be thoroughly investigated, and recommend the passage of the following resolution:

"Resolved, That a subcommittee of five be appointed by the chairman of the Committee on Elections to make a full and thorough investigation of the contested-election case of Clayton vs. Breckinridge; to take and report all the evidence in regard to the methods of said election, and as to whether the contestant or the contestee or either of them was lawfully elected, and report such evidence to the Committee on Elections, and said committee will report said evidence and its findings to the House for further action.

"Said subcommittee is empowered to issue subpoenas for witnesses; to send for persons and papers; to employ a stenographer and deputy sergeant-at-arms, and to sit during session of the House. Said subcommittee may proceed to Arkansas, if deemed necessary by them, to take any part of said testimony.

"That all expenses of said committee shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House. That all vouchers or expenditures shall be certified by the chairman of the subcommittee of the Committee on Elections. The Clerk of this House is authorized to advance the necessary funds to the chairman of said subcommittee upon his drafts therefor in sums not exceeding $1,000 at any one time, to be accounted for under the terms of this resolution, under the supervision of the Committee on Accounts."

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, I have submitted that resolution to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE], and he suggests an amendment to the resolution, and I now offer the amendment, to come in at the point indicated in the manuscript.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Amend by adding, after the words "in regard to the method of said election," the words "to the contest, and all events relating thereto or arising therefrom after said election."

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Speaker, the Committee on Elections was directed by the House to inquire into the question as to who was elected to this House as a Representative from the Second district of Arkansas. That committee, by a subcommittee, after seeing all the papers that are in existence and the evidence already taken in the case, decided that, in order to determine the question as to who was elected, it would be necessary to take more evidence.

As I understand the amendment just offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY] it relates to another matter than the question who was or was not elected from this district in Arkansas. If I correctly understand the amendment, I object to it. I do not know of any constitutional power in this House or the other House, or in both Houses, to inquire into any matter in Arkansas or in any other State, unless the inquiry be made by virtue of some special power in the Constitution authorizing it or in pursuance of some power incident to or connected with a power expressly conferred upon us by the Federal Constitution.

I am perfectly willing (and that is the extent to which the resolution as reported goes—a resolution which, I may say, was unanimously reported from the Committee on Elections without any objection anywhere)—I am perfectly willing that this committee shall proceed to ascertain who was elected in this district in Arkansas. Any fact incident thereto or connected therewith or that will throw light upon that question would necessarily be investigated by this committee. But I understand that this amendment proposes to extend the investigation to events which have transpired since the election; and in my judgment, unless such events are directly connected with or throw light upon the proposition, this House has no authority to order such an inquiry; and I for one shall object to it.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Mr. Speaker, the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Iowa was drawn by me, as I believe the gentleman has stated. We know that while it has often been said, and upon this floor, that my opponent was killed while taking testimony, yet the remark has been uniformly made in a connection which conveyed the meaning on the part of the person speaking that my opponent was killed because he was taking testimony. We know also that the proposition has been brought up in various quarters that it is time for the Federal Government to consider whether some means should not be devised for protecting contestants from the animosities of their opponents.

As to the constitutional question involved here, I believe that every question of the constitutional power of Congress should be proceeded with prudently and advisedly. But it did not seem to me, and it does not now, that there is any impropriety in making an inquiry as to the propriety of legislation of the character I have just spoken of. I can not admit for a moment that any part of our country is more interested in a question of that kind than another. Neither can I see impropriety in an inquiry into events subsequent to an election or prior to it if they have any real or supposed connection to the right of representation here.

I did not draw the amendment with very special care nor with that consultation of which I would have availed myself if I had felt that the proposition needed to be particularly guarded. My idea was that inasmuch as it is claimed that the death of this gentleman was intended to prevent the taking of testimony in a pending contest and to affect the right to a seat on this floor, it is eminently proper and especially due to the community in which that event occurred that a full inquiry should be made into all things incident to this matter.

If my language is faulty I trust it will be improved upon, but not in any way to circumscribe the inquiry. My idea is to broaden the inquiry so that this House will have the fullest possible information upon everything relating to this matter or shedding light upon the election, directly or indirectly, and to serve full and fair notice upon all who have any complaints to make of that people or of this election, upon all who have any charges to make in these matters against the officials of my State, to come before this inquiring tribunal now and prove their case, or else forever hold their peace. That is the object I had in view, and I am anxious that this object should be carried out.

The SPEAKER. The question is upon agreeing to the amendment. The amendment was agreed to.
The resolution as amended was adopted.

MEMORIAL ADDRESSES ON HON. WILLIAM D. KELLEY.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the proceedings in commemoration of the life and services of my late colleague, Judge Kelley, be held at 2 o'clock Saturday next, the 15th instant, instead of 3 o'clock, as heretofore ordered.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, that order will be made. There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

Mr. WILSON, of West Virginia, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, the papers in the case of Martha B. Stribling.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:
To Mr. WILSON, of Kentucky, indefinitely, on account of sickness and important business.

To Mr. PERRY, indefinitely, on account of important business.

To Mr. FEATHERSTON, for six days, on account of the sickness of his wife.

To Mr. KNAPP, for ten days, on account of important business.

To Mr. BLAND, indefinitely, on account of sickness.

To Mr. WHEELER, of Michigan, indefinitely, on account of important business.

SALES IN DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA FOR OVERDUE TAXES.

Mr. GROUT. I ask unanimous consent for a verbal correction in one of the bills which was passed this morning, the bill (H. R. 5825) prescribing the times for sales and for notices of sales of property in the District of Columbia for overdue taxes. I ask the Clerk to read the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 14 of section 1, amend by striking out the word "third" and inserting in lieu thereof the word "first."

There being no objection, the amendment was agreed to.

OKLAHOMA.

Mr. PERKINS. I now move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (S. 895) to provide a temporary government for the Territory of Oklahoma.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union (Mr. PAYSON in the chair), and resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 895) to provide a temporary government for the Territory of Oklahoma.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read section 4 of the bill.

Mr. MCRAE. I desire to offer an amendment to section 3.

The CHAIRMAN. As the Chair understands, section 3 was passed, Mr. MCRAE. But it was passed while I was on my feet for the purpose of offering the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will be entertained.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend section 3 by adding, after the word "Territory," in line 6, as follows: "And who shall be qualified electors of the Territory." Strike out the following words, in lines 27 and 28: "has not been a bona fide resident of said Territory for sixty days previous to said election," and insert in lieu thereof the words "are actual residents of said Territory at the time of the passage of this act."

Mr. MCRAE. I ask the amendments be agreed to.

The amendments were agreed to.

Section 4 was read, as follows:

SEC. 4. That for the purpose of facilitating the organization of a temporary government in the Territory of Oklahoma, six counties are hereby established therein, until after the first election in the Territory, as the First County, the Second County, the Third County, the Fourth County, the Fifth County, and the Sixth County, the boundaries of which shall be fixed by the governor of the Territory until otherwise provided by the Legislative Assembly thereof.

The county seat of the First County shall be at Guthrie. The county seat of the Second County shall be at Oklahoma City. The county seat of the Third County shall be at Norman. The county seat of the Fourth County, which shall embrace the Fort Reno military reservation, shall be fixed by the governor. The county seat of the Fifth County shall be at Lisbon or Kingfisher City. The place also to be fixed by the governor. The Sixth County shall embrace all that portion of the Territory lying west of the one hundredth meridian, known as the Public Land Strip, the county seat of which shall be at Beaver.

At the first election for members of the Legislative Assembly the people of each county may vote for a name for such county, and the name which receives the greatest number of votes shall be the name of such county. If two or more counties should select the same name, the county which casts the greatest number of votes for such name shall be entitled to the same, and the names receiving the next highest number of votes in the other counties shall be the names of such counties.

Mr. HARE. I move to amend as follows.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the following words "fixed by the governor," in lines 14 and 15, and insert "El Reno." Also strike out the words "or Kingfisher City, the place also to be fixed by the governor," in lines 16 and 17; so it will read as follows: "The county seat of the Fourth County, which shall embrace the Fort Reno military reservation, shall be at El Reno. The county seat of the Fifth County shall be at Lisbon."

Mr. HARE. The bill provides for six counties and designates the county seats for four of them, but leaves the county seats in the other two unnamed, and provides they shall be fixed by the governor of the Territory. Why four are designated and two are not I do not know, but I do know there is a contest about the county seats of the two counties not named. In order to prevent any contest down there I have designated these two places to be named with the other four county seats. The adoption of this amendment will settle the contest so far as these county seats are concerned.

Mr. PERKINS. I hope the amendment of the gentleman from Texas will not be agreed to. I think it fair to these towns we should not become parties to the contest prevailing for county seats. We should not, by designating one, prejudice the other.

In the county in which Fort Reno will be situated there are three or four growing and ambitious towns. Frisco is perhaps the largest. Frisco is anxious to be designated as the county seat. El Reno is another growing town and El Reno City is ambitious to be named as the county seat. Darlington is another growing town and ambitious to be designated as the county seat.

The committee thought that it was not right at the present time to designate one of these places to the prejudice of the others. We believed when the governor was appointed he would be able to give to the question more intelligent consideration and be better able to determine which should be the county seat.

As to Kingfisher and Lisbon the contest is substantially the same. They are growing and rival towns. It was the general belief of the committee they should be left to settle it between themselves. As to the other towns designated there is no contest or rivalry. There is no rival to Guthrie and no rival to Oklahoma as to the county seat.

There is no rival to Norman, and none to Beaver, in No Man's Land, so far as the commission could find. Hence we designated them. But as to the two mentioned by the gentleman from Texas, we did not think it right or proper to indicate the site where there was such a contest as I have referred to. For that reason, Mr. Chairman, I hope the amendment will not prevail.

Mr. HARE. Mr. Chairman, the very reason that there is a contest, as suggested by the gentleman, is the very reason why the amendment should be accepted. The town of El Reno has a railroad now running through it and another is being graded in another direction. The town of Lisbon is joined to the section in which Kingfisher is located, and the railroad line is run through the adjoining section. Now, the very object of the amendment is to take away this contest amongst the settlers and put at rest those questions of the county seat by establishing them here, as should be done, in this bill.

Mr. PETERS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I am opposed to the amendment of the gentleman from Texas, though I am opposed to this provision of the bill which leaves the selection of the county seats to the governor. I believe with the gentleman from Texas that this bill ought to select a location for the county seat of the county in each case. But I think, also, that El Reno is not the place which should be so selected, for several reasons. In the first place, it is a town situated upon one side of the county as proposed to be designated by this bill. In the next place, it is not very much of a town, to start with. There are only a very few houses there. It is simply a newspaper town, or probably nothing more than a station upon a railroad. The fact of it is, Mr. Chairman, that Frisco is the place that ought to be designated as the county seat of this county, not only because it is by far the largest place in the county, having a population of 500 now, I understand, but also because it is more nearly in the center of the county, as proposed to be formed by the bill.

I hope the amendment of the gentleman from Texas will be voted down.

Mr. HARE. I would like to ask the gentleman from Kansas a question.

Mr. PETERS. Certainly.

Mr. HARE. Is not Frisco several miles from any railroad?

Mr. PETERS. Yes, sir; it is not on any railroad now, but it is on a line which is proposed to be built east and west.

But, Mr. Chairman, so far as that is concerned, it is much more convenient to the people who will probably be the inhabitants of the county to go to the center of the county to the county seat, instead of being compelled to go to one corner of it, simply because it may happen to be on the line of a railroad. The mere fact of its being located upon the line of a railroad that is off on one side of the county entirely overbalances any benefit that might be understood to arise from having railroad communication.

As a matter of fact, all of the people in this new county will probably have to travel 40 or 50 miles to get to the county seat. But if, as suggested by the gentleman, it should be placed at El Reno, near one side of the proposed county, and not put in the center of the county, where it should be, a small proportion only of the populace would have the advantage of railroad communication. All those living in the interior, or at the other extreme of the county, would have to go entirely across it to the opposite side in order to reach the county seat. Manifestly this would be a great disadvantage to them. But if the county seat is established in the center of the county, it would be equally fair to all persons who live in the county, whether they be on or off a railroad.

Mr. HARE. Does not the governor control the establishment of the boundaries of the counties? If so, then how does the gentleman say this is on one side of the county?

Mr. PETERS. As I understand it, the county seat of the Fourth County, which shall embrace the Fort Reno military reservation, shall be fixed by the governor—that is, the county seat.

Mr. HARE. But the boundaries of the county are fixed by the governor.

Mr. PETERS. The difficulty is this, if my friend from Texas will give me his attention for a moment. The governor can not extend the boundaries of the Territory, and yet he would be obliged to do so if he made a county in that section of the Territory which would place El Reno in the center of it. It is very near the Arapaho Indian reservation.

Mr. HOOKER. Mr. Chairman, I would like to inquire, before offering an amendment, of the chairman of the committee, if he will be kind enough to give me his attention, as to what is the object and purpose of the committee in providing in the 4th section as follows:

The county seat of the Fourth County, which shall embrace the Fort Reno military reservation, shall be fixed by the governor.

I should like to know what is the meaning of the expression, "which shall embrace the Fort Reno military reservation" and where was the necessity of making any such provision in the bill?

Mr. PERKINS. In the temporary division of the Territory into these six counties, for the convenience of the people, we thought it well to designate to that extent where this county should be; that is to say, that it should be on the southwest border of the Territory, embracing the Fort Reno military reservation. That was all we had in view.

Mr. HOOKER. About what part of the county would the Fort Reno military reservation be in?

Mr. PERKINS. I can not say, because I do not know what boundaries will be fixed by the governor, and I can only answer from my general knowledge of the geographical character of the country that it would necessarily be in the western part.

Mr. HOOKER. I do not precisely understand the terms of the amendment proposed by my friend from Texas, but I want to give notice of the following amendments, and as probably they might interfere with the construction of the bill if the amendment of the gentleman from Texas was offered first, I desire to state now that I have two amendments which I propose to offer. One is to strike out these words in the fourth section:

The county seat of the Fourth County, which shall embrace the Fort Reno military reservation, shall be fixed by the governor.

I do not understand what particular reason there can be for directing that the Fort Reno military reservation shall be included in any particular county; and I would ask the chairman of the committee further if the Fort Reno military reservation is in point of fact within the limits of the Territory as designated by this bill?

Mr. PERKINS. It is.

Mr. HOOKER. How far from the Kansas line?

Mr. PERKINS. Oh, 150 miles at least; it is nearer to Texas.

Mr. HOOKER. I intended to ask how far it was from the Texas line?

Mr. PERKINS. It is probably 75 miles from the Texas line.

Mr. HOOKER. I offer this amendment to the fourth section.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will first report the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Texas.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by striking out, in lines 14 and 15, the following words: "Fixed by the governor," and inserting in lieu thereof "El Reno."

Also strike out, in lines 16 and 17, the following words: "Or Kingfisher City, the place also to be fixed by the governor;" so that it will read:

"The county seat of the Fourth County, which shall embrace the Fort Reno Military reservation, shall be at El Reno; and the fifth county seat shall be at Lisbon."

Mr. HOOKER. I now offer the following amendment as an amendment to that of the gentleman from Texas.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk proceeded to read as follows:

Amend by striking out all of the section which designates the county sites.

Mr. HOOKER. If the Clerk will return the amendment to me I will read it in the form I desire to offer it.

I offer this as a substitute:

Amend section 4 by striking out all of the section which designates the county seats or allows the governor to do so, from line 10 down to line 29, inclusive, in section 4, and add:

"The people shall by vote fix the county seats and names of the counties at the first election held in said Territory."

I do not see any reason, Mr. Chairman, why the committee should fix the designation of the counties by numbers, nor do I see why they fix the names of the counties. Now, I want to call the attention of the committee to the peculiarities in the phraseology of this section. It provides, after designating in the first paragraph of section 4, that in order to facilitate the organization of a temporary government there shall be six counties, to be known, until after the election in the Territory, as the First County, the Second County, the Third County, the Fourth County, the Fifth County, and the Sixth County. That—

The county seat of the First County shall be at Guthrie. The county seat of the Second County shall be at Oklahoma City. The county seat of the Third County shall be at Norman. The county seat of the Fourth County, which shall embrace the Fort Reno military reservation, shall be fixed by the governor.

Why should the governor be invested with the authority of fixing the county seat in this county and not given the same authority in respect to all the counties? What motives can there be for this? The county seat of the fifth county is fixed alternatively at Lisbon or Kingfisher City, that place also to be fixed by the governor. Then it provides:

The Sixth County shall embrace all that portion of the Territory lying west of the one hundredth meridian, known as the Public Land Strip, the county seat of which shall be at Beaver.

It will be observed that all the county seats are fixed with the exception of two. The provision for the Fourth County is that it shall embrace the Fort Reno military reservation, most probably with a view of fixing the county seat at El Reno. Why should it not also be left to the people of this county to fix the naming of the county as well as to indicate the county seat?

I have received a letter from a gentleman entirely unknown to me, of whom I have never heard a word at all until I received his letter, in reference to this provision of the bill, which provides that the Fourth County shall embrace the Fort Reno military reservation. His name is John M. Canon, and in a part of this letter he objects to the fixing of the county seat or allowing the governor to fix it. He objects to the fact that the Fourth County is to embrace the Fort Reno military reservation with a view of fixing the county seat at or near Fort Reno. This gentleman, as I stated, is a total stranger to me. He writes from the Indian Territory.

Mr. PERKINS. From Frisco.

Mr. HOOKER. From Frisco. He refers me in his letter to Hon. JOHN MORRILL, chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions, from the First district of Kansas. Before using this letter, as I did not know this gentleman, I spoke to the gentleman from Kansas to know whether or not this gentleman's statements were credible and would be admitted. He stated that he was a neighbor of his; that he knew him well, and that any statement made by him would be worthy of credit. Now, in connection with my remarks I will ask to have this letter read.

The Clerk read as follows:

FRISCO, IND. T., February 27, 1893.

DEAR SIR: I am a resident of Frisco and consequently am very much interested in the welfare of the town, and on this account it might be said that I would color statements. Be that as it may, I believe that I can tell the truth, nevertheless. Frisco is the largest town in population by far of any town in the southwest portion of Oklahoma. It has not so many houses as Reno City, but it has more people than Reno City and El Reno both together. It is situated upon the east side of section 1, township 12, range 6, and the west side of section 6, township 12, and range 5, in the very best farming lands in Oklahoma, and you can see that it is in the geographical center of this country. It has no rivals but the two Renos, El Reno and Reno City. The west line of each of these towns joins upon the Cheyenne and Arapaho country, and they are only 3 miles apart, north and south.

Members of the committee who framed this bill say that they have named a few of the county seats for the convenience of the people. Now, would it not look very much like a travesty upon justice to name a town clear outside of Oklahoma as one bill, the first that was offered upon Territorial government (SPRINGER'S), when it placed the location in these words, "at or near Fort Reno?" And others say there were so many towns that wanted the county seat in this county that Congress could not go into this matter, but would leave the location to the governor. If that was a good thing for us why not a good thing all round and not name any? That kind of talk is a good deal like what is said by Bret Harte about the gambling Chinaman, "child-like and bland." A little too laud-like for Western Congressmen, especially when in the fourth section of the bill they say that the Fourth County shall embrace the Fort Reno military reservation. Why do they wish this to be taken into this Territory, when in the State of Kansas and other States the Government asks the States to cede jurisdiction to it?

I was a member of this last or present Legislature of Kansas, and one of its last acts was to cede jurisdiction to the Government of the Fort Riley military reservation. There might be a plausible reason given by some men that it was on account of the prohibition law of Kansas. Even that would not look well or sound well for a Congressman to speak of in Congress assembled, but when you go a little farther into the bill you can see the symptoms of the true inwardness of this matter; for instance, the first clause of the fourth section says that the governor shall establish the county line, subject to the future action of the Territorial Legislature. Yet in this particular county that bill says that this county shall embrace the Fort Reno military reserve. If the governor was to have the establishing of the county lines, why not let him do so? But no; this particular county must have that post embraced within its limits. Now, the majority of the people of this county, and I believe of the whole Territory, think this is an injustice and an iniquity that should not be allowed to pass so honorable a body as the Congress of the United States, nor do I believe it will be, if the members understand the situation fully.

The military reservation does not adjoin Oklahoma proper, but a part of the Cheyenne country intervenes between the two. But the crowning infamy of this proposed measure is that an American part which places the location of the county seat of the county beyond the reach of the governor or the Legislature of this Territory, or even the vote of the people themselves to change it; nothing but an act of Congress could change it. Now, do you believe that all these things could or have happened in the usual course of legislation? No, these things do not happen that way; there is a purpose in all these things that will develop further on. As the Chaplain of your House once had as the theme for a lecture "What a blind man saw in England," so can we who are here see though we have not the eyes of Congressmen.

I feel assured that when this matter is fully understood such a measure will not be forced upon us, as there is no precedent that I have ever heard of for such action. What possible benefit would it be to the Government to have the Fort Reno reserve embraced in this county? None; but on the other hand there would be embarrassment on account of conflict of jurisdiction. I believe that the workers of the scheme expected that the infamy of placing the county seat beyond the reach of the people might be discovered. Then they would still have the leverage of all of the Army attachés at the fort and agencies there, and it could be used for a herding ground for voters, to keep the county seat at some point at or near Fort Reno. When Kansas was admitted, or rather was organized into a Territory, all of the attachés of troops were debarred from voting, but there is nothing of the kind in this bill.

Truly yours,

JOHN M. CANON.

Hon. HOOKER, Washington City.

P. S.—You can ask Major MORRILL of the First Kansas district if I am responsible for what I say.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose, Mr. BREWER in the chair as Speaker pro tempore, and a message was read from the Senate, by Mr. MCCOOK, its Secretary, announcing the passage of bills of the following titles; in which concurrence was requested:

A bill (S. 2653) providing for the terms and place of holding terms of the United States courts in the State of Washington;

A bill (S. 1219) providing for the construction of a public building at Salt Lake City, Utah; and

A bill (S. 680) for the relief of Alice E. Robertson.

The committee resumed its session.

TERRITORY OF OKLAHOMA.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Chairman, I dislike to be compelled on an occasion of this kind to reply to letters which are read in debate by members of this House, and which I am sure they do not indorse.

This gentleman sends a letter to a Representative in Congress in which he impugns the motives of the Committee on Territories and insists that there is some sort of a job or scheme in this proposition, and the honorable gentleman from Mississippi has had it read as a part of his remarks.

Now, Mr. Chairman, in the first place, this letter relates to the section of the bill before it was reported to this House and while it was pending in the committee, when the text was that the county seat of this county should be at or near Fort Reno. I believe that the people who live in the town that this gentleman represents object to that language, because it cuts that town out from competing for the county seat, and to oblige this gentleman I suggested this change; and it seems that he is not obliged now. Now, if there is any scheme about the gentleman who wrote that letter, he wrote me also, and objected to the text of the bill, which was amended to suit him, I think, and that objection comes from himself.

Now, the text originally stated that the county seat should be at or near Fort Reno. He objected to that because his town of Frisco, 12 miles from Fort Reno, he thought would be cut off from competing. I asked the Committee on Territories to make this change, and I thought this change was made necessary. There was no point at which we could designate the location of the county unless we stated that it was a county that was to embrace this reservation of Fort Reno, as the reservation had to be in some county; it was simply a geographical designation of the southwestern part of the Territory, and if gentlemen want it better understood than by having it stated as the county which shall embrace Fort Reno, they can make it in the southwestern part of the Territory.

This gentleman supposes that he knew more than members of Congress about it who had studied this matter from a disinterested standpoint and did not have any town-site or town interest in the place and who had no other disposition than to be fair. We had this change made simply so as to obviate such an objection; and I am perfectly willing that it shall not be designated as the county to embrace the Fort Reno military reservation, but it shall be called the southwestern part of the Territory. There must be some county within which the Fort Reno military reservation must be, and for the purpose of a geographical designation it was so named. Here is a map, if any gentleman desires to locate it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MANSUR. In regard to this matter, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I remember full well when it was before the committee, and I opposed the proposition at the time that the location should be at or near Fort Reno, because there were three or four towns almost right together within two, three, or four miles of each other, and knowing that there would be a conflict between them I proposed that it ought to go, as I thought, to Frisco, that being about an equal distance between Fort Reno and Oklahoma City. It was discussed fully by the committee. There was considerable difference of opinion, and finally, for the purpose of reconciling the different opinions as to where the county seat should be, we thought of this: That, inasmuch as the governor was to be appointed by the President and inasmuch as he was to call the Legislature within thirty days after its election, it was a question that could be left to the people there at the time to determine which town ought to have it.

We thought that the best thing to be done with the rival contests between three or four towns (three, I believe) that are within two and a half and three miles in distance. It will probably be determined by whichever point may happen to be selected in the extension of the Rock Island road, which is running down there. The railroad town will most likely be made the county seat, and it will be located in the interest of the public; so that it was finally determined to leave it to the governor to locate it. That is the reason for the adoption of that language by the committee.

Mr. HAKE. The report of the committee I indorse throughout with the exception of not naming the county seats of the two counties named. To adopt the amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HOOKER] would simply bring up the six counties in which there would be so many contests for the county seat. I think it was proper to lay off the Territory into counties, and, wherever it was practicable, it was right to name the county seats, in order to keep them from being matters of contest among the people. This letter that has been read shows that there is a contest; and to settle such questions right here, whenever it can be done, is, in my judgment, right and proper. The town I have named is crossed by railroads, and the other one, Kingfisher, is on a disputed pre-emption. Therefore, to settle these controversies here and now and take away the occasion for these contests, I oppose the gentleman's amendment and insist that my own is proper.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate upon this amendment is exhausted.

Mr. PICKLER. I move to strike out the last word. I desire to ask the gentleman who has charge of this bill a question. The bill provides for temporary county seats by these locations?

Mr. PERKINS. Yes.

Mr. PICKLER. How are the permanent county seats to be fixed?

Mr. PERKINS. They will be fixed as the Legislature of the new Territory of Oklahoma shall provide.

Mr. PICKLER. Does the bill make that provision?

Mr. PERKINS. There is nothing in the bill which precludes them from doing that, and it provides that these county seats shall be only temporary, until the organization of the Territorial government.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. The language of the bill provides that the government of the counties or the boundaries of the counties shall be temporary, but there is nothing in it which provides that the county seats shall be temporary, and I was about to suggest an amendment in the second line of the last paragraph of section 4, so as to make the provision read: "At the first election for members of the Legislative Assembly the people of each county may vote for a county seat and for a name for such county," etc.

Mr. PERKINS. The only objection to that is that at the time of the first election the Legislature will not yet have had an opportunity to define the boundaries of the counties; so that it would not be well for the people at that time to undertake to permanently locate their county seats.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. So far as this bill is concerned it does specifically designate the county seats. Now, this being an act of Congress and there being in it no language which indicates that the county seats shall be temporary, while there is something in it which indicates that the boundaries shall be temporary, may it not be held that the Territorial Legislature could not pass any act by which the people would change the county seats, even after the new counties are designated by the Legislature?

Mr. PERKINS. I think not; but we have no objection that an amendment shall be offered to the effect that these designations are only temporary in their character if any one desires it; because they are so in fact and in effect. The counties are temporarily designated and the provision of the bill is that they are temporary, and when the legislature convenes and marks out the boundaries of the counties then necessarily the county seats must conform to those counties, as the Legislature shall prescribe.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HOOKER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. The amendment which I have offered as a substitute for that of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HARE] proposes to give the people the right to determine the names of the counties and to fix the sites of the county seats, and I submitted the letter which has been referred to by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER], because it seemed to me to contain an argument for not doing what the bill proposes to do. If there is in it any reflection upon the committee, I do not very well see it, and I certainly do not see any suggestion that there is any "nigger in the wood-pile," as one honorable gentleman seems to think.

The letter speaks for itself. It was written to me by a man whom I have never seen and never heard of before. He is one of the people there. He went from the good State of Kansas, and he seems to have been a member of the Legislature of that State at one time, and is a man of high character. He is evidently in favor of Frisco, which is admitted, I believe, to be the largest and most populous place in that county.

The writer of this letter has a right to be heard upon the subject as a citizen, and in writing that letter to a member of Congress I presume that he exercised simply his right to express his opinion, and to give not only the committee, but the House the benefit of the information which he has acquired by being on the spot. He certainly knows vastly more than I know or can pretend to know on the subject, and I submitted his letter because it seemed to me to present a forcible argument in support of my amendment, which refers to all the counties. I think there should be no designation of the names of the counties by Congress, and certainly no designation of the county seats, because upon that question the people ought to have the right to pass.

If there be a contest or anything of that kind as between El Reno and Frisco, let the people determine where they think the county seat ought to be. As I understand, it is conceded that the town of Frisco is more central than any other in this southwestern county and has a larger population. I offered my amendment to apply to all the counties. If there be towns in the other counties so well situated by nature and having so large a population as to be naturally indicated for the county seats, there will be no difficulty in applying this amendment to them, but I think the county seats should be selected by the people. For instance, it is provided that the county seat of the First County shall be at Guthrie; of the Second County at Oklahoma City; of the Third County at Norman. Now, if these are the places which would probably be selected by the people, and if there be any doubt as to this county whether the county seat should go to El Reno or Frisco, why not allow the people to designate the site? It seems to me there can be no possible objection to my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate on the amendment is exhausted.

Mr. SPRINGER. I move to amend by striking out the last word. I desire to explain this matter briefly to the gentleman from Mississippi. It is provided in the bill that the laws of Arkansas be extended over this territory until the adjournment of the first session of the Territorial Legislature. If these county seats be fixed before a vote is taken in the Territory, the Territorial Government will be in full operation the very moment the governor enters upon his duties; the county officers will then all take their places. The returns of the first election must be sent to some place; there should be some point designated which the people will recognize as the county seat; and we propose merely to fix this county seat until the Legislature can otherwise provide.

Now, as to Guthrie, as to Oklahoma City, as to Norman, they are just as much fixed as county seats, by reason of their great preponderance of population, as the capitals of any of the States of the Union are fixed as capitals. These designations are made in the bill for the purpose simply of facilitating the temporary government.

Mr. HOOKER. I move to amend by striking out the last two words. It has been said that this change was made in committee. As I understand, this gentleman in his letter refers not to the present bill, but to the bill of a former Congress with regard to the first organization of Oklahoma Territory. In that measure, as I understand, it was provided that the county seat should be at or near Fort Reno. But that bill of a former Congress embraced an entirely different area.

As to the argument that the laws of Arkansas are extended over this Territory, I do not understand that that provision has been adopted; it has not yet been reached in the consideration of this bill, and we may never adopt it; there is every probability, I think, that it may not be adopted at all.

I submit, therefore, that this important matter of the selection of a county seat should be left to the people interested, and I do not see any reason why the selection should not be made by them at the first election. If these places have been indicated by population, by geographical position, etc., as the proper points for the county seats there is no reason for supposing the people will not select them. But if there be in any one county two points between which a question may arise, it seems to me the most obvious method of settlement is to allow the people of the whole county to vote on the question whether the county seat shall be at one point or the other.

As has been well suggested by my friend from Kansas, there is very good reason for apprehending that if we now fix the county seat by the terms of this act, it may be out of the power of the Territorial Legislature to make a change in that respect without further action by Congress. That would seem to be the natural construction of the phraseology of the bill: that, as this county seat is fixed by Congress, it can only be unfixed by Congress. When we, by this act, establish the Territory and designate this particular point, it may very well be assumed that we thereby take away from the people the right to determine this question, though it is one naturally belonging to them. Look at the language of the bill:

SEC. 4. That, for the purpose of facilitating the organization of a temporary government in the Territory of Oklahoma, six counties are hereby established therein, to be known, until after the first election in the Territory, as the First County, the Second County, the Third County, the Fourth County, the Fifth County, and the Sixth County, the boundaries of which shall be fixed by the governor of the Territory until otherwise provided by the Legislative Assembly thereof.

Under this language it is a very serious question for the consideration of this Committee of the Whole whether the Territorial Legislature would have any power to make any change on this subject; whether, after Congress has made this location, as it has the right to do, the Territory will have any authority to supersede the legislation of Congress on this subject. So that, as has been very properly suggested, an act of Congress might be required to get rid of the incumbency which you would thus place on the people of the county by fixing the county seat at a particular point, although a majority of the legal voters of the county might desire another.

The question being taken on agreeing to the substitute of Mr. HOOKER, there were—ayes 23, noes 39.

Mr. HOOKER. No quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi makes the point that no quorum of the Committee of the Whole has voted. The Chair will count the committee. [A pause.] One hundred and eight members are present in the body of the Hall. The noes have it; and the proposed substitute of the gentleman from Mississippi is rejected. The question now recurs upon the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. OATES. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. I desire to know by what rule the Chair, under the present circumstances, counts to ascertain whether a quorum is present or not?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair expects that the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OATES] is as well advised on that point as the Chair. The Chair undertakes to count the members present because, the point being made, it is necessary to know whether a quorum is in attendance or not.

Mr. OATES. The gentleman from Alabama does not know any rule which authorizes the Chair to count in that way to ascertain whether there is a quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. In answer to the gentleman's parliamentary inquiry, the Chair states that, on the point being made he assumes the power to count whether a quorum is present in the Hall, precisely as is done under the rules in the House, and announces that a quorum is present, there being 108 members actually in the Hall.

Mr. OATES. The Chair refuses to specify any rule?

The CHAIRMAN. It is unnecessary. The question recurs on the amendment of the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. PICKLER. I desire to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. As the Chair understands, the amendment of the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. PICKLER] is not an amendment to the amendment of the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. PETERS. I move to amend the amendment by striking out "El Reno," in the first portion of the amendment, and inserting "Frisco."

The CHAIRMAN. An amendment to the amendment is already pending, and no other motion to amend is in order unless it be in the form of a substitute.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I desire to know whether an amendment I propose to offer would be a substitute for the amendment both of the gentlemen from Kansas and the gentleman from Texas? If so, I shall now submit it.

The CHAIRMAN. If it is a substitute for both the Chair thinks it would be in order at this time.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. The amendment is to strike out the word "governor," where it occurs in this section, and insert the word "President."

Mr. PICKLER. I would like to have my amendment read first.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman propose it as an amendment to the amendment of the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. PICKLER. No, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Then let it remain for the present until this other amendment is disposed of, and the Chair will recognize the gentleman.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I move, as a substitute for both the pending propositions, that the word "governor" be stricken out and "President" inserted in the fifteenth and seventeenth lines of section 4.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks that would hardly be proper as a substitute.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I doubted it myself. But I submitted it with this idea, that, if the committee made it a substitute for the proposition of the gentleman from Texas as proposed to be amended by the gentleman from Kansas, that would be a declaration of its purpose that the sites should not be named, as proposed in the bill, but should be named by some officer, and then the proposition would stand as an amendment to the original text.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman to offer the amendment later.

Mr. PETERS. I desire to be heard, Mr. Chairman, for a moment on the amendment I have submitted. I stated in my remarks before the main reasons why I believe that Frisco should be made the county seat of this county, and do not deem it necessary to do more than to call the attention of the committee succinctly to these reasons.

I hope that in the consideration of this question, whatever might have been supposed to be offensive in that letter, which has been written and read, will not have any weight upon the committee in fixing the county seat of this county. We all know and have had experience in county-seat elections how terribly bitter these contests may become.

I have heard it remarked frequently that the most bitter cases in court were those between members of the same family, members of the same church, and county-seat cases. And I think it safe to say that these cases, which involve the question of settling county seats, will create more bitterness, antagonism, and feeling than any other cases that can probably be brought into the courts. I state this much in extenuation of whatever may have been improperly said in the letter which has been already quoted here on the floor.

The town of Frisco, Mr. Chairman, is the largest in the county, having, as I have said, a population of about 500 people. It is nearly in the geographical center of the proposed county, as it must be formed by the governor by reason of the Territorial lines. These are strong reasons in favor of its location, and the only objection to the location is that it is off the line of the railroad, whereas the town proposed by the gentleman from Texas being on the railroad it is claimed gives it an advantage in that direction. It should not, Mr. Chairman, give it any advantage, because the large bulk of the population of that county, which will necessarily be agricultural, must in the nature of things be off the line of the railroad; and consequently it would be more subservient to their convenience and more to their advantage, as far as the mass of the population of the county is concerned, to locate it at the point I have named rather than on the line of the railroad.

Now, I hope the committee will take into consideration in the location of these county seats, although they be but temporary, the fact that they ought to be located with reference to the convenience of the people that will probably inhabit the Territory thus to be made into counties; and as there are houses in Frisco, a number of them, for the convenience of the county officers and for the convenience of the records of the county and as it is in the center of this new and proposed county, it seems to me it is just and wise legislation to locate the seat at Frisco.

Aside from that we have named Guthrie, which is already a town of considerable importance; we have named Oklahoma City, a town of considerable importance; we have named Norman, which is not equal to the claims of Frisco, for it has not half the population of Frisco, as I am informed, and we have named either Kingfisher or Lisbon, neither of which alone has the population of Frisco. And so, Mr. Chairman, if you take into consideration the question of population, the question of where the people can most conveniently go to the county seat, the question of where they have settled and the geographical location of the county seat, certainly Frisco should be named as the county seat of this county.

Mr. HARE. Mr. Chairman, the reasons that Judge PETERS has assigned for the establishment of a county seat I fully indorse. These county contests, wherever they are waged, are extremely bitter. He states, however, that Frisco should be named as the county seat instead of El Reno.

I want to say that since this bill has been introduced in the House a railroad passes from north to south through El Reno and another from Fort Smith, running west, is now graded through the same point. I want to state further that since the introduction of this bill the population of that town to-day runs up, as it is claimed, in the neighborhood of 1,000 souls, or nearly twice the population of Frisco, and since this bill was introduced people are flocking there by the hundred daily. This is my information; and the reason is that, the governor having the power to determine the boundary lines of the county and to name where it is, El Reno being near or within 4 miles of Fort Reno military reservation, it makes the county in the southeast part of the Territory and a proper site for the county. And the very reasons which the gentleman from Kansas urges indicate the correctness of my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Kansas to the amendment of the gentleman from Texas.

The amendment of Mr. PETERS to the amendment of Mr. HARE was rejected.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. HARE, the committee divided; and there were—ayes 22, noes 46.

Mr. TURNER, of New York. I make the point that no quorum has voted.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order being made that no quorum has voted, the Chair will count the members of the committee present.

After counting, the Chair announced the presence of 121 members—more than a quorum of the committee.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I desire now, Mr. Chairman, to submit the amendment which I offered a few moments ago.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the word "governor," in the sixteenth and seventeenth lines of this section, and insert the word "President."

Mr. PERKINS. I would suggest to the gentleman from Kentucky to designate the Secretary of the Interior instead of the President and there will be no objection.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I have no objection to the modification. I thought originally of doing that, but concluded that as the Secretary of the Interior would be only a secretary to the President, I would insert the name of the President. But I accept the suggestion of the gentleman.

The amendment of Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky, was adopted.

Mr. PICKLER. I now ask the reading of the amendment which I have submitted.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add, after the word "Beaver," in the twentieth line of section 4, the following: "Provided the county seats located by this act may be changed in such manner as the Territorial Legislature may provide."

The amendment was adopted.

Mr. DOLLIVER. I submit the amendment I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend section 4 by striking out the word "six," in the third line, and inserting in lieu thereof the word "seven;" also amend by adding the words "and the Seventh County" after the words "Sixth County" in the sixth line of section 4. Also by adding the following words after the word "Beaver" in the twentieth line: "the county seat of the Seventh County shall be at Stillwater, and said county shall embrace the northeast corner of the Territory."

Mr. DOLLIVER. The object of that amendment is to provide an additional county, with the seat at Stillwater. As I understand the geography of the Territory, it is about 60 miles from any of the county-seats provided by the bill, and this makes a county in the northeast portion of the Territory.

Mr. SPRINGER. I hope that that amendment will not be agreed to. The committee discussed this very thoroughly. We thought these were enough for the temporary organization of the government, and when the Legislature meets they could provide for the rest of them.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Chairman—

The CH. IRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa.

The question was put; and the Chairman announced that the "noes" seemed to have it.

Mr. DOLLIVER. Division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 31, noes 28.

[Cries of "Tellers."]

Tellers were ordered.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will appoint the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. PERKINS] and the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. DOLLIVER] as tellers.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 60, noes 40.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

I tried to get the floor before the last vote was taken, but did not succeed. My purpose was simply to state that, for the credit of the House of Representatives, if we are going to create a seventh county in this bill (and about that I feel no concern whatever), we ought at least not to send it over to the Senate in the language of that amendment. The amendment says that the "seventh county shall be composed of the northeast corner of the Territory." I would like to know whether it is to contain 1 acre, 2 acres, 3 acres, or 40 square miles. I would dislike to be the father of an amendment to a bill the language of which was no more definite than that of the amendment which has just been adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Arkansas withdraw the pro forma amendment?

Mr. ROGERS. I withdraw it, of course.

The Clerk read as follows:

Sec. 6. That criminal cases shall be instituted and tried in the district court held in said Territory in the county in which the offense was committed, unless the case shall be removed to another county by change of venue. Civil suits shall be instituted in the district court in the county in which the defendant resides, or where the contract was made or the cause of action accrued, or where the defendant may be found; and shall be tried therein, unless the case shall be removed to another county by change of venue.

Persons charged with any offense or crime in the Territory of Oklahoma, and for whose arrest a warrant has been issued, may be arrested by the United States marshal or any of his deputies wherever found in said Territory, but in all cases the accused shall be taken, for preliminary examination, before a United States commissioner or a justice of the peace of the county whose office is nearest to the place where the offense or crime was committed.

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to submit an amendment to that section. I wish to call the attention of the gentleman having charge of the bill to the words in lines 4 and 5 of the section:

Civil suit shall be instituted in the district court in the county in which the defendant resides, or where the contract was made or the cause of action accrued, or where the defendant may be found.

Now, that does not seem to me to be a fair proposition. I think all after the word "resides" ought to be stricken out, so that it will read:

Civil suits shall be instituted in the district courts in the county in which the defendant resides.

That is the law in most of the States of the Union, I believe.

Mr. SPRINGER. Suppose you can not find him. He may be temporarily away.

Mr. HOLMAN. You serve process by copy in all the States of the Union by leaving them at the last known place of residence of the party. I do not believe that it is in harmony with the spirit of legislation for the last twenty-five years that a citizen shall be called to answer in a civil suit except in the county in which he resides. Prior to 1850 in the State of Indiana a provision similar to this proposition here was in existence.

Mr. SPRINGER. It is the common-law rule.

Mr. HOLMAN. And in 1850-'51 the constitution was amended, and one of the strongest contentions in the convention was concerning this very proposition relative to suing a man wherever he was to be found, whether he was traveling in the country or absent for any temporary purpose. Under the constitution as adopted the suit must be made where the man resides. Therefore, for twenty-five years in Indiana a citizen has not been called upon to answer in a civil suit except in the county in which he lives; and I think we are going backward in this provision to a state of things favorable to the creditor and injurious to the debtor, contrary to the reforms of our age.

Mr. SPRINGER. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. HOLMAN. Certainly.

Mr. SPRINGER. If a citizen of one county should have a contract to build a building in another county, and was in that other county where the building was being constructed and where the work was being done, it seems to me that the proper place for this suit to be laid would be where the contract was made and where the work was going on.

Mr. HOLMAN. My friend is occupying the little time I have.

Mr. SPRINGER. I just wanted to understand the gentleman's position.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think that some consideration ought to be had for the debtor class instead of the creditor class entirely, and that a citizen should not be called upon to answer a civil action anywhere else except in the county in which he lives. If he does not live in the State he ought to be sued wherever he can be found. I would be astonished to learn there was such a law in existence in the State of Kansas as this. I think if there is, it is about the only State now left in which such a law does exist.

Mr. PERKINS. I think the gentleman could improve his amendment by leaving out, in the sixth line, the words "or where the contract was made or the cause of action accrued."

Mr. HOLMAN. That will do.

Mr. HOOKER. I would like to hear the amendment read. I did not hear it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the following words in the sixth and seventh lines: "or where the contract was made or the cause of action accrued."

The question was taken on the amendment, and the Chairman announced that the "ayes" seemed to have it.

Mr. TURNER, of New York. Division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 69, noes 5.

Mr. TURNER, of New York. I make the point that no quorum has voted.

Mr. SPRINGER. Did you not vote in the affirmative? If you did, then you have got what you wanted.

Mr. TURNER, of New York. I do not like business to be transacted without a quorum.

The CHAIRMAN counted the committee, and announced that there were 113 members within the Hall of the House.

Mr. TURNER, of New York. I made the point that no quorum voted; and in the second section of Rule XXIII I find it stated that—

Whenever a Committee of the Whole House or of the Whole House on the state of the Union finds itself without a quorum, which shall consist of 100 members, the Chairman shall cause the roll to be called.

And I made the point of order that the House is without a quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee does not find itself without a quorum, there being 113 members within the Hall, as ascertained by the count by the Chairman. So the committee has a quorum. The point of order that no quorum has voted is overruled, and, the count by the Chair showing that 113 members are actually present, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. TURNER, of New York. From that I respectfully appeal to the House.

The CHAIRMAN. If a quorum is actually present it is immaterial whether a quorum vote. One hundred and thirteen members are actually present, and the Chair only announces a fact, which is not disputed, of the actual presence of a quorum.

The Chair, following the precedent which has been set in the House, and which precedent the Chair thinks is right and should be followed, because no provision is made for a count of members present except by the Chair, declines to entertain the appeal.

An actual quorum is present and, in the judgment of the Chair, the statement of the fact cannot be questioned in this way. [Cries of "Read!" "Read!"]

The Clerk read as follows:

Sec. 7. That the general statutes of Nebraska, which are not locally inapplicable or in conflict with this act or in conflict with any law of the United States, are hereby extended to and put in force in the Territory of Oklahoma until after the adjournment of the first session of the Legislative Assembly of said Territory. The governor of said Territory is authorized to divide each county into voting precincts and into such political subdivisions and school districts as may be required by the laws of the State of Nebraska; and he is hereby authorized to appoint all officers of such counties and subdivisions thereof, and all election officers until their election or appointment shall be provided for by the Legislative Assembly, but not more than two of the judges or inspectors of election in any voting precinct shall be members of the same political party, and the candidates of each political party who may be voted for at such election may designate one person who shall be present at the counting and canvassing of the votes cast in each precinct: Provided, That the supreme and district courts provided for in other sections of this act shall constitute the courts in said Territory in lieu of courts of like jurisdiction provided for by the laws of the State of Nebraska; and jurisdiction is hereby conferred upon said courts to enforce said laws.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment to this section.

Mr. HOOKER. Mr. Chairman, pending the consideration of that amendment I hope the gentleman in charge of the bill [Mr. PERKINS] will move that the committee rise.

Mr. PERKINS. Let us consider this amendment first.

The amendment of Mr. MORSE was read, as follows:

Amend section 7 by inserting immediately after the word "Territory," in line 6, the following:

"And provided, That no intoxicating liquor shall be introduced, under any pretense, into the Territory of Oklahoma until authorized by law, and that every person who, except for medicinal or mechanical purposes, sells, exchanges, gives, barter, or disposes of any intoxicating liquor to any person, or attempts to introduce any intoxicating liquor in the Territory, or to set up or continue any distillery or manufactory of any intoxicating liquor within said Territory, shall be punished by imprisonment for not more than two years and by a fine of not more than $1,000."

Mr. MORSE. Mr. Chairman, the Territory of Oklahoma, with reference to the government of which we are legislating, is surrounded by the Indian Territory and by the Indians, and this amendment to the seventh section which I have offered substantially continues the existing regulations of the liquor traffic with Indian tribes in Oklahoma until a Territorial government is organized and the people of that Territory have an opportunity to vote upon the question of allowing the manufacture or sale of strong drink within the Territory.

Mr. KILGORE. I desire to inquire of the gentleman from Massachusetts as to whether or no his amendment is the law of Massachusetts upon the subject of the liquor traffic.

Mr. MORSE. If it is not it ought to be. The sale of rum to a white man is bad, but it is very much worse to sell it to an Indian. I read of an Indian once who pointed to a barrel of whisky that was being unloaded in his country, and remarked in his native tongue that there were five murders in that barrel and fifty fights; and it is easy to foresee the effect of legalizing the saloons, as the existing bill will do, in close proximity to the Indians. Brawls, massacres, and murders are certain to follow the sale of strong drink to the Indians surrounding and inhabiting this Territory. Citizens of the Territory of Oklahoma have waited upon me since this bill has been under consideration and urged the adoption of this amendment. The pending bill fixes the same regulation upon the liquor traffic as exists in Nebraska, which is high license.

It will not matter much, in its effect, whether an Indian buys rum and whisky at a high or low license saloon. Fights, bloodshed, and murder are sure to follow, and in the interests of the citizens of this Territory and in the name of justice and fair play I demand that the breweries, distilleries, and licensed saloons shall not be forced upon the people of that Territory without their consent.

Mr. KILGORE. I desire to ask the gentleman from Massachusetts a question.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts has the floor.

Mr. MORSE. I can not hear the gentleman from Texas—

Mr. SPRINGER. Will the gentleman from Massachusetts allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. MORSE. Certainly.

Mr. SPRINGER. I want to say to the gentleman from Massachusetts that he is mistaken in his assumption in regard to the position of the Indian reservation after this bill passes. The law of Congress which prohibits the introduction of intoxicating or spirituous liquors of any kind into those Indian reservations is not changed by this bill at all. That law will still exist, and, as gentlemen know, it contains a most stringent prohibition against introducing intoxicating liquors into any Indian reservation. Therefore the gentleman's amendment would apply only to that portion of this Territory that is opened for settlement, and over that is placed the law of Nebraska.

Now, any gentleman upon this floor who is familiar with the law of Nebraska will tell you that it prohibits the sale of intoxicating liquors of every kind until it has been authorized by a vote of the people and a license given therefor. Therefore, if the gentleman's object is to accomplish what he has stated, that object will be best obtained by letting the matter alone.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate on the amendment is exhausted.

Mr. MORSE. I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, in answer to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] I desire to say that no harm can possibly arise from making this matter so plain and distinct that he that runs may read, and I believe the gentleman from Illinois is too wise and too patriotic to desire to open liquor saloons in close proximity to these Indians. If they are opened there it is easy to see what will happen: murders, fights among the Indians, and massacres of the white people.

This amendment I believe to be a wise and judicious one. I believe it has the approval of at least some members of the Committee on Territories, and I trust the House will adopt it.

Let us take no chances. Let us make the law so plain that there can be no mistake. This amendment simply excludes the sale and manufacture of rum in that Territory until the new government has a right to act upon that question, nothing more, nothing less, and I submit that this amendment is in the interests of law and order, morality and virtue, and good government, and ought to prevail.

Mr. TURNER, of New York. Mr. Chairman, I trust that this amendment prohibiting the sale of alcoholic liquors in this newly organized Territory, or about-to-be-organized Territory, will receive at least the deliberate consideration of this House. I believe that no more serious matter can weigh upon the consciences of the several members of this committee than the question whether these untutored children of the wilderness, as we are taught by this Committee on Territories to believe they are, shall be assailed by this most dangerous temptation of civilization. I confess, sir, I for one feel that I should be unmindful of my duty to my constituents and to my fellow-men did I not rise in my place and raise even a feeble voice against any legislation which would expose these untutored children of nature to this most subtle temptation. [Laughter.]

Mr. MANSUR. I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. TURNER, of New York. I yield with much pleasure.

Mr. MANSUR. Is the gentleman aware that the laws of the United States in full force to-day make it a criminal offense to take intoxicating liquor into the reservation of any Indians?

Mr. TURNER, of New York. But I suggest to the gentleman that this is no longer a reservation, but a Territory.

Mr. MANSUR. But I desire to remind the gentleman that, as this bill expressly declares, this Territorial government or organization is not for any Indian reservation whatever; it does not apply to Indian reservations.

Mr. TURNER, of New York. I admit that I ought to have known that this committee, in the paternal care which they have exercised over the poor red man, in their intense and earnest solicitude to help him onward in the path of civilization, would not have neglected a single point. It is really presumption on my part to rise here and raise any question as to all these points, having received the most careful and deliberate consideration in all their minutiae and details.

But I would suggest that as long ago as 1819 these people who, we are told here, are unable of themselves to go forward in the road they have so nobly trod toward civilization—as long ago as 1819 the Cherokee people passed a prohibitory act. Am I not entitled to claim that they have been the vanguard in this army of temperance reform? I submit it is too bad that these Indians, after seventy years of faithful adherence to the total abstinence policy, should now be exposed to this temptation. I hope, therefore, this committee will consider very seriously and very soberly this question; and I suggest that the committee now rise that we may go home and in meditation—possibly in the retirement and secrecy of our closets—consider whether we should thus put temptation in the way of the untutored savage. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York moves that the committee now rise.

Mr. PERKINS. Oh, no.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. PAYSON reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, having had under consideration the bill (S. 895) to provide a temporary government for the Territory of Oklahoma, had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. McMILLIN. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 12 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

EXECUTIVE AND OTHER COMMUNICATIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

SENATE.

TUESDAY, March 11, 1890.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President, I move a call of the Senate. There is evidently not a quorum present. I make the point of no quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will call the roll of the Senate.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Aldrich,	Daniel,	Hoar,	Reagan,
Bate,	Davis,	Ingalls,	Sawyer,
Berry,	Edmonds,	McMillan,	Sherman,
Blackburn,	Evarts,	McPherson,	Sprouer,
Blair,	Farwell,	Mitchell,	Squire,
Butler,	Faulkner,	Moody,	Stanford,
Call,	Frye,	Morrill,	Teller,
Cassidy,	George,	Paaco,	Turpie,
Chandler,	Hale,	Pierce,	Vest,
Cole,	Harris,	Platt,	Wilson of Iowa.
Cullom,	Hawley,	Pugh,

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Forty-three Senators have answered to their names. A quorum of the Senate being present, the Journal of the proceedings of yesterday will be read by the Secretary.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

CREDENTIALS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented the credentials of WILLIAM B. ALLISON, chosen by the Legislature of Iowa a Senator from that State for the term beginning March 4, 1891; which were read, and ordered to be placed on file.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a communication of the 7th instant from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, explanatory of the necessity for additional buildings and improvements at the Chillicothe school in the Indian Territory; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 5667) to amend an act to authorize the construction of a bridge across Trail Creek in the city of Michigan City, Ind., was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

PORT OF COLUMBUS, OHIO.

The bill (H. R. 5682) to amend an act entitled "An act to constitute Columbus, Ohio, a port of delivery and to extend the provisions of the act of June 10, 1880, entitled 'An act to amend the statutes in relation to the immediate transportation of dutiable goods, and for other purposes,' to said port of Columbus, Ohio," approved February 9, 1889, was read the first time by its title.

Mr. FRYE. The Committee on Commerce of the Senate has reported a bill identical with this one, and it is on the Calendar. As it is to correct a mistake, the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] would like to have the bill passed now.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let it be read for information.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read at length for information, if there be no objection.

The bill was read the second time at length.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Reserving the right to object, I ask the chairman of the Committee on Commerce or the honorable Senator from Ohio to explain how this changes the existing law.

Mr. FRYE. It simply provides for the appointment of an officer at a thousand dollars a year, which was left out, probably by mistake, when the act was originally passed.

Mr. EDMUNDS. And that is the whole of it?

Mr. FRYE. That is the whole of it. It is recommended by the Secretary of the Treasury.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maine asks unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill having been read at length, a further reading will be waived, if there is no objection.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. FRYE. I move that the bill (S. 2582) to amend an act entitled "An act to constitute Columbus, Ohio, a port of delivery, and to extend the provisions of the act of June 10, 1880, entitled 'An act to amend the statutes in relation to the immediate transportation of dutiable goods, and for other purposes,' to said port of Columbus, Ohio," approved February 9, 1889, be indefinitely postponed.

The motion was agreed to.

COMMITTEES ON IMMIGRATION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to a concurrent resolution of the Senate. The resolution will first be read as it passed the Senate.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution passed by the Senate January 23, 1890, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Senate Committee on Immigration and the House Committee on Immigration and Naturalization be, and hereby are, authorized jointly to investigate the workings of the various laws of the United States and of the several States relative to immigration from foreign countries to the United States, especially the law of Congress "to regulate immigration," approved August 3, 1882; and also to investigate the workings of the contracts made by the Secretary of the Treasury under said law of August 3 with the various State commissions, boards, and officers, the investigation to be conducted at such times and places as said committees may deem proper. And the committees are hereby authorized jointly, as full committees or through subcommittees thereof, to send for and examine persons, books, and papers, and to administer oaths to witnesses.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment of the House of Representatives will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. Amend by adding, after the word "officers," in line 10:

And also to investigate the effect on immigration, and incidentally on American workmen, which is likely to follow the purchase of American industries by foreign capital, and also to report to Congress the official correspondence in the proposal to make Bedloe's [Liberty] Island, in the harbor of New York, an immigrant depot, what title the Government has to such island, what buildings, if any, are intended to be built on said island, and what officers and employes it is designed to employ thereon in connection with such immigration, and whether in the opinion of the committee, after investigation, such island is the best and most suitable place for such immigrant depot.

Mr. CHANDLER. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment made to the concurrent resolution by the House of Representatives.

Mr. EDMUNDS. May I inquire from what committee the original resolution of the Senate came, if any?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It does not appear upon the file.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It may be that it was not referred; very likely it was not.

I have one observation to make in reference to one particular part of the House amendment, which I think is worthy of the consideration of the Senate before it agrees to it hastily, and that is in regard to Bedloe's Island. As to the inquiry part in respect to foreign capital, etc., I have no objection, and perhaps I shall not have to the Bedloe's Island matter when the thing shall be perfectly understood. But we all understand from public prints that owing to a difference between the executive department of the Government and the authorities of the State of New York the immigrant station, it is said, is to be removed to Bedloe's Island, and that arrangements accordingly are being made, upon the supposition, as I take it, and the assumption, that examination would show that the present laws of the United States can have sway and dominion over that island as a part of the property of the United States, or by some arrangement with its owner; and that without any action by Congress this change of the place for landing immigrants can be attained.

Now, the effect of agreeing to this House amendment is likely to be, according to our experience, and perhaps with a certain propriety, a temporary and perhaps indefinite stay on the part of the executive department in carrying out the change that has been arranged and agreed upon. I think the Senate ought to consider somewhat seriously the effect of agreeing to this amendment in respect of Bedloe's Island, so as to understand that it is likely to prevent the removal of the immigrant landing station from the foot of the island of New York, where I believe it is now, to this island in the bay, during the period of the investigation of this committee, which as we all know is likely to last, and may last, until the 4th of March, 1891.

I hope, therefore, that the matter may go over for to-day until we can ascertain from the executive department their views in regard to this very important affair about Bedloe's Island; and I suggest to the Senator from New Hampshire that he allow it to go over until to-morrow.

Mr. CHANDLER. There is no objection to the resolution going over. An investigation of the steps taken by the Secretary of the Treasury to transfer the immigrant station to Bedloe's Island would have been competent under the resolution as it originally passed the Senate. The House of Representatives have affixed an amendment specifically specifying the proposed transfer as one of the subjects of inquiry. It did not occur to me that there would be any objection to giving that authority to the committees, nor did I anticipate that giving that authority would operate to delay or hinder the Secretary of the Treasury in the performance of his duty under existing statutes. So I saw no reason to oppose the enlargement of the inquiry, and moved that the Senate concur in the House amendment. I have no objection to allowing the resolution to go over until to-morrow.

Mr. McPHERSON. I hope it will go over until to-morrow.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment of the House of Representatives will lie over until to-morrow.

INTRODUCTION OF CONTAGIOUS DISEASES.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 140) to prevent the introduction of contagious diseases from one State to another, and for the punishment of certain offenses; which were read.

Mr. EDMUNDS. How will the bill read consecutively?

Mr. HALE. In the absence of the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS], who is chairman of the committee having the matter in charge, I ask that the amendments may lie on the table for the present.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendments will lie on the table.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let them be printed, for the changes proposed may be very important.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendments will be printed.

ANACOSTIA AND POTOMAC RIVER RAILROAD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1083) to amend the act giving the approval and sanction of Congress to the route and termini of the Anacostia and Potomac River Railroad in the District of Columbia; which was read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no other disposition proposed—

Mr. EDMUNDS. If the amendment is a repeal, I am in favor of it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no other disposition proposed, the bill with the amendment will be referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That, I think, is the best way.

CHRIST CHURCH LAND IN WASHINGTON.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 296) vesting in the vestry of Christ Church, Washington Parish, District of Columbia, all of the right, title, and interest of the United States of America in and to square south of square 1092, in the city of Washington, in the District aforesaid; which were read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no motion, the bill, with the amendments of the House of Representatives, will be referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

ECKINGTON AND SOLDIERS' HOME RAILWAY COMPANY.

Mr. HARRIS. I ask the Senate to consider at this time the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 157) to amend the charter of the Eckington and Soldiers' Home Railway Company.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill and amendment have been sent to the Printing Office under the order of the Senate to print, and have not yet been returned to the files of the Senate.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It can be taken up later.

Mr. HARRIS. Very well.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. 505) for the construction of a railroad and wagon bridge across the Mississippi River at South St. Paul, Minn.;

A bill (H. R. 507) granting the counties of Hennepin and Dakota, Minnesota, the right to build two bridges across the Minnesota River;

A bill (H. R. 3876) authorizing the construction of a bridge across the Red River of the North;

A bill (H. R. 4130) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at the city of Pierre, in South Dakota;

A bill (H. R. 5825) prescribing the times for sales and for notices of sales of property in the District of Columbia for overdue taxes;

A bill (H. R. 7617) to authorize the Oregon and Washington Bridge Company to construct and maintain a bridge across the Columbia River between the State of Oregon and the State of Washington, and to establish it as a post-road; and

A bill (H. R. 7618) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Columbia River in Oregon and Washington by the Columbia Bridge Company.

The message also requested the Senate to return to the House the bill (S. 140) to prevent the introduction of contagious diseases from one State to another, and for the punishment of certain offenses.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills, received from the House of Representatives, were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Commerce:

A bill (H. R. 505) for the construction of a railroad and wagon bridge across the Mississippi River at South St. Paul, Minn.;

A bill (H. R. 507) granting the counties of Hennepin and Dakota, Minnesota, the right to build two bridges across the Minnesota River;

A bill (H. R. 3876) authorizing the construction of a bridge across the Red River of the North;

A bill (H. R. 7617) to authorize the Oregon and Washington Bridge Company to construct and maintain a bridge across the Columbia River between the State of Oregon and the State of Washington, and to establish it as a post-road;

A bill (H. R. 7618) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Columbia River in Oregon and Washington by the Columbia Bridge Company; and

A bill (H. R. 4130) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at the city of Pierre, in South Dakota.

The bill (H. R. 5825) prescribing the times for sales and for notices of sales of property in the District of Columbia for overdue taxes was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented sundry petitions, numerous signed by citizens of Wellington, Belle Plaine, Geuda Springs, Caldwell, South Haven, Coffeyville, and Dalton, in the State of Kansas, and sundry petitions of citizens of Montgomery County, Kansas, praying for the passage of the service-pension bill; which were referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. HARRIS. I present a memorial of the Cotton Exchange of Memphis, Tenn., and a memorial of the Merchants' Exchange of Memphis, Tenn., remonstrating against the levying of a tax upon cotton-seed oil or any compound of which cotton-seed oil is a component part. I believe similar memorials have hitherto gone to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, and I move that these two be referred to that committee.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. FAULKNER presented a petition of the Sugar Grove Farmers' Alliance of Ruckman, W. Va., favoring what is known as "the sub-treasury plan;" which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. STEWART presented thirty-seven petitions, signed by 1,383 members of the Farmers' Alliance and citizens of Nebraska, praying for the free coinage of silver; which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. HALE presented a petition of certain fire-insurance companies of Philadelphia; a petition of the editors of the Electric World and others, citizens of New York City; a petition of the Merchants' Arc Light and Power Company, and other firms and citizens of Chicago, and the petition of Frank E. Warren and others, praying that the Superintendent of the Census be directed to collect certain data in relation to the electrical industry; which were referred to the Committee on the Census.

Mr. SHERMAN presented a memorial of the Monthly Meeting of Friends, of Wilmington, Ohio, remonstrating against the proposed increased expenditure for the Navy and so-called coast defenses; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

He also presented a petition of 41 ex-Union soldiers of Ohio, praying for the passage of the service-pension bill; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. MOODY presented a petition of 53 citizens of Lenox, S. Dak., praying for the free coinage of silver; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. COKE presented a petition of citizens of Del Rio, Val Verde County, Texas, praying for the establishment of a four-company post at Camp Del Rio for the protection of that part of the country; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. VOORHEES presented a petition of Pomona Grange, of Kosciusko County, Indiana, praying for the enactment of a law prohibiting the selling of promises to deliver farm products by those who are not owners thereof; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. CALL. I present a petition of a large number of citizens of Florida, representing that the production of oranges in the United States as an industry is yet in its infancy, and is capable of being made valuable to its citizens and of reaching very large proportions; that the best oranges are produced in this country, and that in order to cripple the present growers and check the increase of home production immense importations of foreign oranges are being made just before the domestic fruit is ready for the market. The petitioners pray Congress to place a duty upon the importation of foreign oranges at the rate of $1 per box.

I move that the petition be referred to the Committee on Finance.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SPOONER presented a resolution adopted by the Douglas County Bar Association of Wisconsin, favoring the establishment of a term of the Federal court at Superior, Wis.; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. MITCHELL presented a petition of the Board of Trade of Yaquina, Oregon, praying for further and larger appropriations for the improvement of the mouth of Yaquina Bay, in that State; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented a petition signed by 63 citizens of Oregon, praying for a national Sunday-rest law; which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also presented a memorial of the Chamber of Commerce of Astoria, Oregon, submitting a report and estimate of the cost of improving the various rivers and bays tributary to Astoria, Oregon, and praying that an appropriation be made for that purpose; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. PLUMB presented a petition of the board of county commissioners of Jewell County, Kansas, and a petition of the board of county commissioners of Pawnee County, Kansas, praying for the passage of the bill now on the Senate Calendar appropriating $6,200,000 for the improvement of the harbor at Galveston, State of Texas; which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of old soldiers and citizens of Anderson County, Kansas; a petition of old soldiers and seamen of Geary County, Kansas, and a petition of Emporia Post, No. 55, Grand Army of the Republic, praying for the passage of certain pension legislation; which were referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented a petition of Edgerton Grange, 435, of the State of Kansas, praying for legislation concerning trusts; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. PLUMB. I present a memorial of the Wabaunsee County Farmers' Alliance, of Kansas, on the subject of transportation of agricultural productions, grain, land and various other subjects of interest to the farming class. I move that the memorial be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. PLATT presented a petition of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, praying that the constitution of the State of Kansas be taken as the model for the constitution of the Territory of Oklahoma; which was referred to the Committee on Territories.

Mr. PLATT. I present resolutions adopted by the people of Southwest Oklahoma, remonstrating against annexing the Fort Reno reservation to Oklahoma Territory. As the bill has been reported and passed from the Senate, I move that the memorial be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, it relating to a military reservation.

The motion was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, submitted a report accompanied by a bill (S. 3060) to carry out the provisions of section 15 of an act entitled "An act to provide for the division of Dakota into two States, and to enable the people of North Dakota, South Dakota, Montana, and Washington to form constitutions and State governments and to be admitted into the Union," approved February 22, 1889; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. PADDOCK, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1524) granting a pension to Mena Holmes, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of M. L. Kitchie and 502 others, citizens of Council Grove, Kans., praying for the passage of a bill granting arrears of pension to W. J. Miller, submitted an adverse report thereon, which was agreed to; and the committee were discharged from the further consideration of the petition.

Mr. DAVIS, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the bill (S. 1848) to restore the pension of Mrs. Helen S. Spring, and the bill (S. 2023) to restore the pension of Mrs. Helen S. Spring, reported adversely thereon; and the bills were postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 2132) to restore the pension of Mrs. Helen S. Spring, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. FARWELL, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (S. 706) for the relief of James W. Walsh and others, reported adversely thereon; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, submitted a report accompanied by a bill (S. 3061) referring to the Court of Claims the claims of James W. Walsh and others; which was read twice by its title.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. HOAR introduced a bill (S. 3062) making appropriation for continuing the erection of the public building at Worcester, Mass.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. FRYE introduced a bill (S. 3063) to establish Rockport, in the district of Belfast, Me., as a port of delivery; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also introduced a bill (S. 3064) to establish a fog-signal at or near the Cuckold Island, at the entrance to Boothbay Harbor, otherwise known as Townsend Harbor, Maine; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. HOAR. I introduce a bill at the request of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS], who is obliged to be absent from the Chamber.

The bill (S. 3065) to amend section 691 of the Revised Statutes concerning writs of error in certain cases was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. SAWYER introduced a bill (S. 3066) granting a pension to Alvin J. Gould; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. MOODY introduced a bill (S. 3067) for the relief of James W. Garland, of Whitewood, S. Dak.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Select Committee on Indian Depredations.

Mr. PASCO introduced a bill (S. 3068) for the relief of the legal representatives of Sally Sterrett Tate, late of Wilcox County and State of Alabama, deceased; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. SPOONER introduced a bill (S. 3069) to extend the benefits of section four of "An act making appropriations for the support of the Army for the year ending June 30, 1866," approved March 3, 1865; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. DANIEL introduced a bill (S. 3071) to provide for the security of the national-bank circulation by the deposit of silver bullion at its value when coined in dollars, less estimated cost of coinage; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also introduced a bill (S. 3072) for the erection of a public building in the city of Portsmouth, Va.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

He also introduced a bill (S. 3073) to construct a macadamized road from the city of Petersburg, Va., to the national cemetery in the county of Dinwiddie, in said State; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. CHANDLER introduced a bill (S. 3074) authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to place the name of Charles C. Jones on the roll of the Metacomet; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. PLUMB introduced a bill (S. 3075) granting a pension to John Moog; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 3076) granting a pension to Mary E. Robinson; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. MITCHELL introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 65) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States providing for the election of Senators by the votes of the qualified electors of the States; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. MITCHELL. I ask that the joint resolution lie on the table, and I give notice that at a very early day I shall call it up for the purpose of submitting some reasons why I think it should be passed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution will lie on the table for the present.

Mr. HAMPTON. I ask to have a correction made in an amendment regarding the French spoliation claims which I offered to the urgent deficiency appropriation bill a few days ago. I will send it to the desk. The initial in the name of one of the claimants is incorrect.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That correction will be made.

CROW INDIAN RESERVATION.

Mr. DAWES submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be instructed to communicate to the Senate whatever information is in possession of the Department concerning the occupation of portions of the Crow Indian reservation by white men, and what steps, if any, have been taken by the Department to exclude from such occupation persons not entitled thereto.

PORTRAIT OF JOHN PAUL JONES.

Mr. VOORHEES submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on the Library:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Library be instructed to inquire into the expediency and propriety of purchasing from George B. Matthews his portrait painting of John Paul Jones, now in care of the Navy Department.

LOTTERY COMPANY.

Mr. MORRILL submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be directed to report any information in the possession of the Department in relation to authorizing any lottery company by the Indian Territorial government of the Creek Nation.

APACHE INDIAN CORRESPONDENCE.

Mr. DAWES submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be instructed to communicate to the Senate copies of the correspondence between Lieutenant-General Sheridan and Brig. Gen. George Crook regarding Apache Indians between March 26 and April 5, 1886, inclusive.

REVISION OF REMARKS.

Mr. HOAR. I desire to call up, as a matter of privilege, the resolution reported yesterday from the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Ordered, That in all future editions of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD the following words be stricken from the report of the remarks of Mr. CALL, a Senator from the State of Florida, in the Senate, Thursday, February 20, 1890, as heretofore published in the RECORD, namely:

"And murder of hundreds of women and children in the Southern States."

"Of these horrid crimes."

"The blood of Saunders, if the evidence shall show his death was in any way connected with the prosecutions in the United States courts, will rest on his conscience. The shrieking ghosts of the hundreds of outraged and murdered women and children, the victims of the wild lust and passions of a race who owe all that they know of religion and civilization to the Southern white people, and not to the Senator from New Hampshire, will disturb his sleeping and his waking hours. Like Banquo's ghost, it will not down, and the ocean will not wash his blood-stained hands from the guilt of the rape and murder of these tender white women and children."

Mr. HARRIS. I ask the Senator from Massachusetts if he will consent that I may call up now a House amendment to a Senate bill which I do not think will take half a minute to dispose of.

Mr. HOAR. I had not supposed that this Order of Business would take half a minute to dispose of. I had no reason to suppose that the resolution I have called up would lead to debate.

Mr. HARRIS. I chance to have reason to believe that it will take a good many half-minutes to dispose of it, but I am not certainly advised on that subject.

Mr. HOAR. The resolution which I have called up is the unanimous report of the Committee on Privileges and Elections. However, if it be true that there will be debate upon it, I shall cheerfully yield to the request of the Senator from Tennessee.

ECKINGTON AND SOLDIERS' HOME RAILWAY.

Mr. HARRIS. I understand the Eckington and Soldiers' Home Railroad bill has been returned from the House of Representatives and is in the hands of the Secretary. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House of Representatives to that bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Tennessee moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 157) to amend the charter of the Eckington and Soldiers' Home Railway Company.

Mr. HOAR. The pending resolution being informally laid aside for that purpose.

Mr. VEST. I suggest to the Senator from Tennessee that he had better let that bill lie over. I think it ought to be amended from what I see of it in the RECORD this morning. It only came from the House yesterday.

Mr. HARRIS. Does the Senator think that it requires any amendment?

Mr. VEST. I do, from what I see in the RECORD, but I may be mistaken.

Mr. HARRIS. Certainly, then, I shall let it lie over, if the Senator wishes to look at it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will lie on the table.

CONTAGIOUS DISEASES.

Mr. HARRIS. Here is another bill returned from the House of Representatives with an amendment, which I ask may be referred to the Committee on Epidemic Diseases.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The title of the bill will be reported.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 140) to prevent the introduction of contagious diseases from one State to another, and for the punishment of certain offenses.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. This bill, with the amendment proposed by the House of Representatives, will be referred to the Committee on Epidemic Diseases and printed.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVAL.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. O. L. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had on the 8th instant approved and signed the act (S. 993) to constitute Minneapolis, Minn., a subport of entry and delivery in the collection district of Minnesota, and for other purposes.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. 188) for the erection of a public building at Columbus, Ga.;

A bill (H. R. 401) to provide for the construction of a public building at the city of Alexandria, State of Louisiana;

A bill (H. R. 417) for the erection of a public building at Houlton, Me.;

A bill (H. R. 448) for the erection of a public building at Lynn, Mass.;

A bill (H. R. 516) to extend the limit for the erection of a public building at Springfield, Mo.;

A bill (H. R. 533) for the erection of a public building at Fremont, Nebr.;

A bill (H. R. 605) to increase the appropriation for the erection of a public building at Troy, N. Y.;

A bill (H. R. 848) to authorize the construction of an addition to the public building in Dallas, Tex.;

A bill (H. R. 3331) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the purchase of a site and the erection of a suitable building for a post-office and other Government offices in the city of Scranton, Pa.," approved July 27, 1882; and

A bill (H. R. 7156) to provide for the increase of the limit of cost of site and public building at Newark, N. J.

The message further announced that the House had passed the following bills with amendments in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (S. 606) to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building thereon at La Fayette, in the State of Indiana;

A bill (S. 859) for the erection of a public building at Chester, Pa.;

A bill (S. 903) for the erection of a public building in Cedar Rapids, Iowa; and

A bill (S. 2046) to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building thereon at Atchison, in the State of Kansas.

REVISION OF REMARKS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs on agreeing to the resolution reported from the Committee on Privileges and Elections, which has been read.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, as far as my very limited experience goes in the Senate, this resolution appears to me to be without a precedent. It is the outcome of a resolution introduced by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER] asking the Senate to censure the Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL] for an unauthorized and improper correction of remarks made in open Senate. The resolution, if passed, whilst it does not expressly contain a censure, is certainly capable of that implication.

I speak with some difficulty when I speak of the usages of the Senate, because I am not so familiar with those usages as Senators who are older in the service of the Senate than I am and who have paid more attention to them. At a very early day after taking my seat here I learned that it was within the rules and usages of the Senate for Senators who had made speeches in this body to give them such correction as they deemed proper in accord with the general intent and meaning of the speech.

Since this resolution has been reported by the committee I have looked over the debate about which this controversy has arisen. I find that it was a debate characterized by extreme acrimony, bitter personal allusions contained in more speeches than one. I find that the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY], a very able and very discreet Senator, in the beginning of the debate thought proper to use this language:

I have listened, so far as the confusion in the Chamber would permit, to most of the remarks of the Senator from Florida, and have listened carefully to his proposed amendment, and both seem to me to be a sort of premature apology for murder.

And again, in the same speech, that distinguished Senator used this language:

Now, let the gentleman understand distinctly that I, for one, regard his speech and his resolution as an attempt to make a sort of left-handed apology for murder and to avoid investigation.

I do not read these extracts from the Senator's speech for the purpose of criticism or animadversion of any kind whatever, but simply to bring to the attention of the Senate the character of the debate about which this controversy has arisen.

The Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL] spoke on that occasion with great force and eloquence and under strong feeling. In order to understand exactly the point in the controversy, I will read an extract from his speech, occurring in it before that place to which the resolution before the Senate refers. The Senator from Florida said:

When these men, desperate, and reckless, and lawless, are sent throughout the entire country to stir up in peaceful communities a war of races, and rape and the outrage of women and children, who, in their indiscreet partisan zeal, indelicately prompt these acts and are particeps criminis in the outraging of women and the murder of infant life in a peaceable community, inciting the use of the torch and the dagger, that the public indignation, the profound sense of wrong and oppression, which will pervade the mind of every community, will not communicate itself to the more fiery and bolder spirits and lead to acts of violence and the taking of human life?

At this point of the speech the Senator from Florida distinctly put forth the idea that the acts of these lawless men, these officials in the State of Florida, were calculated to bring about the results which are deprecated in the extract which I have read to the Senate. Further on he said:

I say it is a calamity that in these happy and prosperous communities some wicked and evil-minded men, inspired from the regions below, could, for the sake of personal interest and for the money that they may obtain from the courts of the United States, enter into those communities and incite those easily misguided people to acts of crime and violence which render every man's household a place of danger and insecurity, not only to life, but to the virtue of the wife and the child that he is bound to protect.

Then comes another sentence:

Can you not see that such acts of fiendish malevolence will move any people to the profoundest depths of feeling, and that when this feeling becomes a conviction it will spread like fire to the bold and restless spirits, to whose excited minds and inflamed feeling acts of violence and blood may appear in these seductive forms of temptation to wrong and the corrupt tyrannies of another Jeffreys?

Then comes next the sentence which was complained of in the resolution of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER], and a sentence which I undertake to say, and which I will undertake to prove in a calm way to the Senate, contains every allegation distinctly and unequivocally contained in the clause which the committee in their resolution have recommended shall be expunged from the RECORD.

That is the feeling—

The one which I have just described—which in the hearts of desperate men leads to lawless acts. That is the feeling relative to the outraging of and murder of hundreds of women and children in the Southern States for which the Senator from New Hampshire is personally responsible. The blood of these people rests upon him. The destruction of the happiness of these households is his, and not that of the miserable men who are the emissaries of these horrid crimes.

I understand the resolution of the Committee on Privileges and Elections does not complain of any change made in the sentence which I have just read, but only of the added sentence.

Mr. President, I desire, because this is a matter of some importance to our brother Senator from Florida, to call the attention of the Senate to this part of the speech, which passed without criticism and without amendment the scrutiny of the Committee on Privileges and Elections, and the first allegation in that is this, referring to the feeling produced in Florida by these lawless acts:

That is the feeling which in the hearts of desperate men leads to lawless acts.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, will the Senator from Mississippi allow me to make one statement to him?

Mr. GEORGE. I would be glad to have the Senator make any statement that he thinks proper at this stage of the debate.

Mr. HOAR. The committee conceived, as I understood them, that they had no jurisdiction under the resolution of any change made by the Senator from Florida in his speech or of anything in the original speech except what was recited in the resolution itself directing the inquiry.

Mr. GEORGE. As I only heard the resolution read at the desk of the Senate, will the Senator inform me whether the committee took any exception to or made any recommendation with reference to the sentence which I have just read?

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, the committee, I will repeat, conceived that they had jurisdiction only of the matter which the original resolution of the Senate referred to them as having been inserted in his speech by the Senator from Florida which was not spoken by him orally on the floor. The purpose of the draughtsman of that resolution, according to the view of the committee, was to restore that portion of the speech to the condition in which it was spoken. If anything which is complained of as having been inserted in the speech of the Senator from Florida that was not spoken in debate but inserted afterwards is not adverted to in the resolution as drawn, that is an accidental omission of the draughtsman; but I conceive that there is nothing of that kind.

Mr. GEORGE. The Senator has not given me the exact information for which I asked. I will therefore ask that I be allowed to get the information by a second reading of the resolution presented by the committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be read.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read the resolution reported by Mr. HOAR from the Committee on Privileges and Elections, and having read some time was interrupted by—

Mr. GEORGE. The reading may stop there.

Mr. HOAR. Now, the Senator will observe—

Mr. GEORGE. I discover now what is complained of.

Mr. HOAR. I thought the Senator was asking me a question. I desire to repeat, for the information of the Senator, that the committee conceived that they had jurisdiction under the reference to them solely of the insertion in that particular passage of the speech of certain words not uttered upon the floor, and they report recommending that those words which were not uttered on the floor be stricken from the report and that the passage in which they were inserted be printed as originally reported by the stenographers. Now, when the Senator asks me if the committee took exception to this, that, or the other phrase or approved it or disapproved it, I have to reply that I have no authority from the committee to state anything on that subject in their behalf. All I was authorized by the committee to do was to report this resolution. I suppose each member of the committee had his own view on that.

Mr. GEORGE. I understand from the reading of the resolution that certain words are to be stricken out of the clause which I have read. I would call the attention of the Senate, and I hope (although I may present this case in a somewhat feeble and disjointed manner) that as the rights and interests of a brother Senator are involved in this matter I may have the attention of Senators who propose to vote upon the resolution.

In regard to this clause certain complaints are made and certain recommendations are made by the committee.

That is the feeling which in the hearts of desperate men leads to lawless acts.

That is not complained of.

That is the feeling relative to the outraging of and murder of hundreds of women and children in the Southern States.

The words "and murder of hundreds of women and children in the Southern States" are recommended to be stricken out. In place of these words recited in the resolution of the Senator from New Hampshire, were inserted the words "of these poor women;" so that the sentence, as it is claimed by the committee to have been spoken by the Senator from Florida, is as I shall now read it:

That is the feeling relative to the outraging of these poor women, for which the Senator from New Hampshire is personally responsible.

The change in that part of it occurs, as alleged by the committee, by the striking out of the words "of these poor women" and the inserting of other words, so that the sentence as printed reads as follows:

That is the feeling relative to the outraging of and murder of hundreds of women and children in the Southern States, for which the Senator from New Hampshire is personally responsible.

So that the point made against the speech of the Senator from Florida is that instead of the words "of these poor women," the language reading "that is the feeling relative to the outraging of these poor women," the Senator from Florida in revising his speech inserted "hundreds of women and children in the Southern States." Take what I have read before, and it will be seen at once that whilst there is a verbal change there is no change in the meaning of the language used; certainly it is just as objectionable to charge a Senator with being the author of and responsible for an outraging of these poor women as it is to charge him with being responsible for the outrage and murder of hundreds of women and children in the Southern States, and that is all the difference. And then the next correction made in that sentence is this:

The blood of these people rests upon him.

That is admitted now by the committee and by the Senate to have been spoken.

The destruction of the happiness of these households is his, and not that of these miserable—

That language is admitted by the committee to have been used by the Senator from Florida.

The destruction of the happiness of these households is his, and not that of these miserable men who are emissaries behind him.

Up to that point it is admitted by the committee that the report speaks truly the language of the Senator from Florida, but the change comes in here. "Men who are emissaries," as spoken by the Senator, is followed by the words "behind him," so that the sentence as actually spoken reads as I was now reading it to the Senate.

The destruction of the happiness of these households is his, and not that of these miserable men who are emissaries behind him.

The change made is that the words "behind him" are stricken out and the words "of these horrid crimes" are inserted, so that the language of this particular sentence is changed from an avowal that the destruction of the happiness of these households is the act of the Senator from New Hampshire, and not that of the miserable men who are emissaries behind him, but is the act "of the miserable men who are the emissaries of these horrid crimes." The change, if it changes the meaning at all, relieves the Senator from New Hampshire of a responsibility and does not fix upon him a responsibility not stated by the Senator from Florida. What is the difference, except favorable to the Senator from New Hampshire, whether these acts are said to be the acts of "emissaries behind him" or whether they are said to be the acts of "emissaries of these horrid crimes?"

So, Mr. President, I think, unless the Senator is held to the exact, literal use of language employed by him in debate, there is no complaint on that ground.

I come now to the inserted sentence. The committee claim that this sentence was inserted de novo:

The blood of Saunders, if the evidence shall show his death was in any way connected with the prosecutions in the United States courts, will rest on his conscience.

That is, the conscience of the Senator from New Hampshire. Does that change in substance the charge which the Senator from Florida had already made against the Senator from New Hampshire? Let us see:

The blood of these people rests upon him.

Everybody admits that the Senator from Florida used that language. Therefore is it an aggression or an encroachment upon the rights of the Senator from New Hampshire that there should be a specification of Saunders as one of the parties whose blood rests upon him? The Senator from Florida had already stated, in the broad language which I have read, that "the blood of these people rests upon him."

Has anything been added to the enormity of the charge against the Senator from New Hampshire by the language that the blood of Saunders rests upon his conscience? It would be a degree of hypercriticism which I have not seen heretofore employed with reference to changes in language made by Senators when they come to revise their speeches. It is absolutely the same idea expressed in different words, without as much precision and force as had been expressed before.

Next we come to another alleged insertion:

The shrieking ghosts of the hundreds of outraged and murdered women and children, the victims of the wild lust and passions of a race who owe all that they know of religion and civilization to the Southern white people, and not to the Senator from New Hampshire, will disturb his sleeping and his waking hours.

Mr. President, every one can see that is a mere rhetorical amplification of the statement which he had already made—"The blood of these people rests upon him." Of course, the introduction of the ghosts is an addition, but I do not know that there is anything in the use of that poetical machinery which ought to be offensive to any Senator. Ghosts, in my opinion, are myths. There was a time, I think, when the world believed that the disembodied spirits of men who had left this earth came back and visited us, sometimes on friendly and sometimes on unfriendly missions, but I believe that idea has been exploded.

I am a very old man, and I have been sedulously looking out for ghosts and inquiring for ghosts all my life. I have never had the pleasure of seeing one, and I have never had the pleasure of seeing and conversing with any man who had seen one. So this is nothing more than a rhetorical amplification of what the Senator had previously said, except there is something complimentary in it to the Senator from New Hampshire which was not in the original charge. The original charge as stated is "The blood of these people rests upon him." The amplification is that the Senator from New Hampshire has a conscience, which is not implied in the first charge, and that that conscience has been awakened and disturbed by these shadowy beings from the other world.

Like Banquo's ghost—

That is an addition—

it will not down, and the ocean will not wash his blood-stained hands from the guilt of the rape and murder of these tender white women and children.

Mr. President, if he was responsible, as the Senator said he was, in the language which I will again read, "The blood of these people rests upon him," how is the Senator injured by a charge about Banquo's ghost? I admit that the Senator from Florida was guilty of a breach of taste in bringing out Banquo's ghost. That ghost has been brought out for duty now for some three or four hundred years. It has been brought out on former occasions, I believe, in this body; and for a mythical being that had no existence except in the disordered imagination of the people of the Middle Ages, I had thought that this particular ghost, this particular myth, had served its full time, and ought to have been dismissed from further attendance upon the Senate [laughter], put on the retired-list, as my friend from Louisiana [Mr. EUSTIS] suggests, and, as my friend from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] would suggest if he were not too modest, without a pension.

So, substantially, there is nothing in this added paragraph, which is not fully, substantially, in all respects whatever, stated in the language which the committee and which the Senator from New Hampshire admit was in fact used.

Now, Mr. President, whilst this is allowable, while Senators by the lamp at night are allowed to trim and fix up their speeches so as to make them rhetorically attractive, provided they do not substantially change the meaning of what they said in the Senate, I understand that there is a limitation to that rule, which is that in personal matters, personal controversies, crimination and recrimination in the Senate, Senators are confined to the exact letter of what they have said on this floor.

Mr. President, probably that is a good rule; but when has it been enforced? When did it originate? I want to call the attention of Senators now to a fact which they will all recognize at once, that when the rule was held to be strict about the changing or the not changing of language used in debate of a personal character, there was a custom then existing which does not exist now. I believe I will add, though it is not necessary for me to say so, but I believe I will: I am glad that it does not exist.

In former times personal remarks made by one Senator towards another were supposed to involve somewhat of personal accountability and personal responsibility on the part of the speaker towards the Senator about whom the words were spoken; but that has all passed away. There is no safer place in the world, in all of God's creation there is no safer place for a man who desires to insult another with immunity from personal responsibility than the American Senate. Everybody knows it, and it is no evidence of spirit, no evidence of courage that a Senator gets up here and uses insulting and abusive language towards another Senator, and, I will add, since this custom prevailed it is no evidence of a want of spirit or of a want of courage that the Senator about whom this insulting and personal language is used does not call the other Senator to a personal account. That is the way we stand to-day.

Of all the hard things that I have heard said in times of excitement by Senators towards other Senators in the last nine years—and I have heard some very hard things—I have never heard that any Senator about whom this harsh language has been used has thought it necessary even to inquire whether the Senator using the insulting language considered himself personally responsible. That is the fact. Everybody knows it and everybody understands it. So the sanctity of the rule which formerly existed requiring the exact language used orally in debate to be printed in the RECORD no longer exists, because if language more insulting than the language used in debate is actually inserted in the RECORD, and no notice is taken of it, there is no imputation that the Senator abused and insulted has not taken or will not take the proper steps for personal vindication. Everybody understands that.

Then, why shall the rule as to these personal matters, which formerly existed, I admit, and for which there was a good reason then, though growing out of a bad habit, why should it be extended now to a case in which the charge is no greater, the insult is no greater in the language employed in the printed report than the language used in debate actually? Will Senators say that the other Senator, the Senator who is abused or who has been insulted, ought to have the right to know the language then and there, so that he may do, what? Now, let us see. The duello is clear out of the question; personal conflict on the street is clear out of the question; a hostile meeting between the parties is utterly beyond the contemplation of anybody whatever. Then how is he to answer? He ought to have the opportunity of doing, what? Why, the fish-woman opportunity to blackguard back, and that is all, and that is the way the thing stands.

Mr. President, I aver—and I ask Senators before they take this vote, which is an implied censure upon as amiable, as truthful, and as good a man as ever sat in the American Senate—I speak these words with the understanding that I impute to them their full significance—why attempt now to bring an implied censure upon him for doing, what? For pursuing the custom, the usage which all of us exercise in making our speeches a little more rhetorical in the revision than they were in the delivery. That is all.

I challenge Senators to point out in what respect the Senator from New Hampshire is injured in character, in feeling, or in any way whatever by the supposed changes, or the changes as found by the committee, made in the speech of the Senator from Florida. If you desire to hold Senators strictly and literally to the very words used by them in debate, accomplish that purpose by devising a rule requiring them to do that; but do not allow your rule to mean different from what everybody understands it to mean, that a Senator may in revising his speech change the phraseology, improve the rhetoric, if he does not substantially depart from the general tenor of his speech. That is not the way to do it.

This is an ex post facto proceeding. You, upon the other side, Senators, have a majority of six or eight. We are in the minority. We ask only that in the administration of the rules of the Senate party feeling shall not be aroused so that one kind of justice may be administered on one side of the Chamber and another kind on the other.

I believe I have pointed out in this disjointed way the grounds upon which I ask the Senate, as no good can come from it, as the fault, if it be a fault at all, is a venial one, and as the injury, if there come any injury at all, will be nil—I ask the Senate not to do this (so far as my experience in the Senate is concerned, now of nine years) unprecedented thing.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I expected when this resolution came up, as I said, that it would receive the unanimous support of Senators on both sides of the Chamber, including the Senator whose remarks were under discussion.

I think the observations of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE] have proceeded from an entire misconception on his part of the effect of this resolution, of the opinion of the committee, and of the practice of the Senate; but I suppose after he has spoken I ought to occupy a few minutes at least in stating what I understand those to be.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. With the permission of the Senator from Massachusetts, as I suppose he intends to occupy the floor for some time, and in connection with what he has just said, I wish to make a statement for myself so far as the report is concerned.

Mr. HOAR. I should rather complete my statement, I think, than have interpolated in it the Senator's speech.

Now, Mr. President, I understand one thing is settled by general parliamentary law and is affirmed by a clear implication by the rules of this body itself, and that is that no Senator is amenable to censure or to a call to order for anything said by him in debate unless that point is made upon him at the time of the utterance and the words are taken down as they came from his lips. That is the statement of Mr. Jefferson in his Manual, originally prepared for the government of the presiding officer of this body, and which is still the accepted authority in all matters of parliamentary law in legislative assemblies in this country. Mr. Jefferson says on page 213 of our edition of Jefferson's Manual:

When any member has spoken or other business intervened after offensive words spoken, they can not be taken notice of for censure. And this is for the common security of all and to prevent mistakes which must happen if words are not taken down immediately. Formerly they might be taken down at any time the same day.

The third clause of Rule XIX of the standing rules of the Senate is this:

3. If a Senator be called to order for words spoken in debate, upon the demand of the Senator or of any other Senator the exceptionable words shall be taken down in writing and read at the table for the information of the Senate.

Mr. President, it is quite clear therefore that the Senate could not have been presumed by the committee to have referred to them the words actually spoken by the Senator from Florida for animadversion by reason of anything disorderly or offensive to anybody they might have contained, if they did contain any such offense.

The committee also conceived that a resolution which selected a certain passage from the speech of the Senator from Florida and complained that certain words uttered had been stricken out from that passage and that certain other words not uttered had been inserted, did not intend to refer to their jurisdiction any other passage in the speech of that Senator, whether correct or not. That was the limitation of the jurisdiction of the committee as they understood it.

The committee, however, conceived that it was within their jurisdiction and was their duty to inquire whether the subtraction of certain words from the report and the addition of certain other words in the report were properly made; and the committee were unanimously of opinion that neither by the law nor by the usage of the Senate is it permitted to make substantial changes in that report, which is the security and the protection of the public characters of all of us, and upon whose substantial photographic picture of what occurs here we must stand or fall in the judgment of our countrymen and contemporaries and in the judgment of the future.

We were not, as I conceived, called upon to enter into the motives of the Senator from Florida, and in speaking of these motives I must be understood to speak only for myself. But I will say for myself that I acquit the Senator from Florida of any design to escape answer or conflict or responsibility on the floor of the Senate by uttering one thing here and writing out another thing there. The character of the language which he used, and which I have no doubt he expected to have heard by all Senators, repels any such harshness of judgment as against him, in my opinion. But at the same time the Senator from Florida did do something quite other than to make the mere change of style, which I think has been somewhat practiced under the usages of the Senate where grammar or taste or clearness of expression has not been accomplished in the Senate; he did something quite different from the suppression by the consent of both parties to an angry and heated conflict of language of severity and reproach which both parties after the heat was over desired to have dropped, and which has been a great many times, I suppose, dropped from the RECORD to the entire approbation of everybody.

But it is not true, in my judgment, as the Senator from Mississippi states, that there is no substantial difference between the words uttered and the words printed. The Senator from Florida, if I conceive it correctly, in that passage of the speech imputed to the Senator from New Hampshire responsibility for certain things as the result of his public conduct or public speech, and that he had a perfect right to do. I have a perfect right to stand up here this afternoon and say to the Senate that every man who votes against the education bill of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BLAIR] will be responsible for the ignorance and poverty of thousands and hundreds of thousands of American citizens and American children in the future. However severe that statement may be, it is within the fair limits of orderly debate. But I have no right to stand up here and say that the Senators who differ with me upon that important measure will be guilty of causing the ignorance. The one is a statement of the logical consequence or the historical consequence of an error of conduct or of judgment; the other imputes to the Senator charged the personal purpose and guilt of doing wrong. That distinction also is laid down in Jefferson's Manual, which is the law of our conduct.

The consequences of a measure—

Says Mr. Jefferson, on the two hundred and twelfth page of the manual—

may be reprobated in strong terms; but to arraign the motives of those who propose to advocate it is a personality, and against order. Qui digreditur a materia ad personam, Mr. Speaker ought to suppress.

Mr. President, the Senator from Florida in strong language said in his oral utterance that "the blood" of certain persons who had perished by these crimes in the South "rested upon the Senator from New Hampshire" [Mr. CHANDLER], and that "the destruction of the happiness of these households is his, and not that of those miserable men who are emissaries behind him," whatever an emissary behind a man means.

That, as I understand the Senator from Florida to have uttered it and intended it, however severe, was within precisely the limits laid down by Mr. Jefferson for the government of the Senate when he took the chair in this body in the year 1797.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Senate resumes the consideration of the unfinished business.

Mr. HOAR. I shall finish what I have to say in three or four minutes. I ask the indulgence of the Senate for that purpose.

Mr. BLAIR. This matter, I suppose, will naturally go on to its conclusion, and I very gladly yield.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The title of the unfinished business will be read.

The CHIEF CLEER. A bill (S. 185) to aid in the establishment and temporary support of common schools.

Mr. BLAIR. I yield informally.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The unfinished business will be laid aside informally. The resolution reported by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] is before the Senate.

Mr. GEORGE. I ask the Senator—

Mr. HOAR. Let me finish this proposition; then I will listen to the Senator.

Mr. President, the Senator from Florida, by words spoken in debate, charged that the deplorable and dreadful facts which had taken place were the consequences of the policy of the Senator from New Hampshire, and that I conceive he had a right to say, and if he amplified it by the rhetorical phrase that "the blood of those people was upon him," that is but a repetition of the same thing. How often have we heard that thing said in debate? I believe our Southern brethren used to think that every slave who was chastised south of Mason and Dixon's line owed the agony he suffered to Charles Sumner and William Lloyd Garrison. They were the arch fiends in those days upon whom all the crimes and blood and suffering and ignorance and poverty of slavery rested, and Mr. Sumner heard enough of that after he came into the Senate. That is one thing. Suppose, by a mistake in the negotiations going on with Great Britain, our distinguished Secretary of State should plunge this country into a war and should come to the Senate—his equally distinguished predecessor has come to the Senate after filling that office—does anybody doubt that it would be perfectly in order for a political opponent to say to him, "Your mistaken policy brought about this war, and the blood of every man who has fallen in it is upon you." That is one thing, severe enough, uncomfortable enough to listen to, harsh enough, I grant, but in order.

The Senator from Florida, when he had said that the responsibility of the public conduct of my friend from New Hampshire, with whose opinions I perfectly agree in regard to all these questions and with whom I am very happy to share any responsibility which belongs to his expression of indignation against what has happened south of Mason and Dixon's line, when he had said that, that was one thing; but he proceeded to add in what he wrote out, "The blood of Saunders will rest on his conscience," and that is an affirmation of personal and guilty responsibility, and not merely of the historical responsibility of a public course of conduct or policy.

Like Banquo's ghost, it will not down, and the ocean will not wash his blood-stained hands from the guilt of the rape and murder of these tender white women and children.

That is what the Senator from Florida wrote. So, independently of the question of the proposition on which this resolution rests, that there shall be no change in the picture of our proceedings which this RECORD is to give, there has been a change most substantial and important and complete, as I have pointed out.

I shall not follow the honorable Senator from Mississippi into the jesting and joking and comic-almanac view about the lamentable public occurrences which have given rise to these differences of opinion here on the floor of the Senate.

There is one thing, however, which the Senator from Mississippi said in regard to which I have an observation to make. He said that the safest place on the face of the earth for a man to speak his honest mind in regard to the opinion or conduct or character of another was the floor of the Senate of the United States, and I hope that always will be true; and in order to make it true and to keep it true, I do not mean that the secrecy of any man's chamber at midnight shall be a safer place than that of the floor of the Senate, from which he may send out his poisoned arrows which are to charge his companions with guilt, with rape, with murder, or with the blood of innocent and unoffending women and children.

Mr. EUSTIS. I do not rise, Mr. President, to discuss the negro question, nor do I feel called upon to express any opinion as to the justice of the accusation which was made the other day by the Senator from Florida against the Senator from New Hampshire. I am disposed rather, without any excitement or any passion, to consider the real question that is submitted by the proposed order as reported from the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

The Senator from Massachusetts quoted Jefferson's Manual to show that the Committee on Privileges and Elections had no right to censure the Senator from Florida, because the unparliamentary language which he used, assuming it to be such, was not noted down at the time that it was uttered. I would remind the Senator from Massachusetts that even if it had been noted down at the time and even if that technical objection had been waived by the action of the Senate, yet, under the resolution introduced by the Senator from New Hampshire, the Committee on Privileges and Elections would have had no jurisdiction to pass upon the question of censuring the Senator from Florida because of the unparliamentary language which he had used.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator will pardon me. The committee have acted and reported upon that fully.

Mr. EUSTIS. I understand, Mr. President, what I am talking about, I think. That is not the proper excuse for not having returned here an order to censure the Senator from Florida, because, under the resolution introduced by the Senator from New Hampshire, that question was never submitted to the Committee on Privileges and Elections. The question whether the language used by the Senator from Florida was parliamentary or unparliamentary was never brought within the cognizance of the Committee on Privileges and Elections, was never submitted to its jurisdiction by the very terms of the resolution which was introduced by the Senator from New Hampshire.

The cause of complaint of the Senator from New Hampshire was not that the Senator from Florida had used unparliamentary language toward him, that he had violated the rules of the Senate, that he had violated the prerogatives of the Senate, the customs of the Senate, because he had indulged in harsh and severe and personally abusive language towards him. That was not the complaint that was made by him to the Senate and to the Committee on Privileges and Elections. The complaint made was that certain language which appeared in the RECORD as having been uttered by the Senator from Florida was never uttered in this Chamber, but was inserted into the RECORD. That was the entire complaint made by the Senator from New Hampshire; that was the only question within the jurisdiction of the Committee on Privileges and Elections; and it is the only question which is submitted to the judgment of the Senate. What did the Senator from New Hampshire ask? He asked, first, that the Committee on Privileges and Elections should discover the fact whether or not his charge was true that the Senator from Florida had inserted language which he had never uttered in the Senate, and, secondly, according to the terms of the resolution, if the committee discovered that fact to be as he alleged, then he asked the committee to report an order censuring the Senator from Florida because "it constituted a breach of privilege for which the Senator is hereby censured." That was the demand made by the Senator from New Hampshire.

Now, Mr. President, this order implies a censure upon the Senator from Florida—

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President—

Mr. EUSTIS. This order can have no other meaning.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I will not interrupt the Senator in the middle of a sentence.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Louisiana yield to the Senator from Vermont?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I only wished to ask the Senator a question if it is agreeable to him.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Louisiana yield?

Mr. EUSTIS. Certainly.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I wish to ask the Senator this question: I was not present, I believe, when this debate occurred as reported, and I should like to find out what the real truth of the transaction is as regards what actually took place. Now, I have been told—

Mr. EUSTIS. I prefer not to be interrupted. If the Senator will allow me to conclude—

Mr. EDMUNDS. Then I will ask my friend a question when he is through, when that unfortunate time shall come.

Mr. EUSTIS. I can very briefly give the Senator the information. If he will read the speech of my friend from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE] he will there find all the information he can possibly seek.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I only wished to ask the Senator whether he would say that a particular paragraph as printed in the RECORD was uttered or was not uttered by the Senator from Florida, and I was about to read the paragraph.

Mr. EUSTIS. That is admitted. Everybody knows that.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It will depend on what the paragraph is, whether it is admitted or not.

Mr. EUSTIS. Probably the Senator was not present during the discussion. That could be the only reason why he does not know what the paragraph is. It has been read in the Senate about six times. It is admitted on all sides that that paragraph was inserted in the RECORD and was not uttered by the Senator from Florida.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Yes. That being the case, then, if the Senator alludes to the paragraph I do—and I assume that he does—I wish to ask the Senator from Louisiana, so that I may understand it, whether he defends the propriety in any sense whatever of the printing of the paragraph just as it stands that he refers to, that was not uttered in the presence of the Senate and of the Senator to whom it alluded.

Mr. EUSTIS. If the Senator from Vermont had not interrupted me he would by this time have discovered exactly the position which I take.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let me discover it now if I can.

Mr. EUSTIS. That is exactly what I was proposing to inform the Senator upon.

I say, Mr. President, that although in terms the Committee on Privileges and Elections do not report an order of censure, yet, inasmuch as they have found that there was a paragraph which appeared in the RECORD that was inserted by the Senator from Florida and was not uttered by him in this Chamber, and inasmuch as they ask an order of the Senate that that paragraph shall be effaced from the RECORD, and whatever words appear in the RECORD which he did not utter in debate shall be expunged from the RECORD, I should like in all seriousness to ask whether they have not found the Senator from Florida guilty of something. What is it they have found him guilty of? A mutilation of the RECORD? A falsification of the RECORD? That he has violated the custom of the Senate of the United States, that he has committed a breach of one of the rules of this body? The committee upon this question indulge in absolute and serene silence. They leave it to inference, and any member of this body or any citizen of the United States is at liberty to draw what inference he chooses with reference to the conduct of the Senator from Florida as passed upon by the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

My own position with reference to this matter is simply this—and I call the attention of the Senator from Vermont to my statement, for he seemed awhile ago, and I hope he still entertains the desire of knowing exactly what my position is—

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is what I have been struggling to find out for a good while.

Mr. EUSTIS. As I understand it, we have no rule of the Senate whatever with regard to the revision of the RECORD by any Senator. I believe I am correct in that statement.

Mr. GEORGE. There is none that I know of.

Mr. EUSTIS. So that we have to fall back upon some vague, undefined, antiquated, shadowy custom of the Senate, and, if we had been in existence long enough, I would probably say, which had been wet with the spray of the Deluge. What that custom is no one in this Chamber that I have ever heard has undertaken the task of defining, of explaining. What the limitations of that custom may be I do not know; what its license may be I do not know. I have heard some Senators say that we are at liberty to correct grammatical errors, but that is hardly a privilege, Mr. President, for I know that no Senator ever commits a grammatical error.

I have heard other Senators state in this Chamber that when any offensive language is exchanged, which sometimes happens in what is called the heat of debate—though I do not know exactly what that meant—then by common consent and common agreement these two minds get together, and they by a mere contract and consensus expunge from the RECORD and probably insert something that has never been said. Where do you get that right?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Sure enough.

Mr. EUSTIS. The Senator from Vermont says "Sure enough."

Mr. President, I am asked by my vote to do what I consider a grievous wrong and a grievous injury to a brother Senator on this floor, one whom I know is as regardful of the feelings of others as any other Senator, and who I know also will be as sensitive under reproach as any other Senator. For what? For having concealed his opinions? No, sir. For having suppressed his convictions? No, Mr. President, for those who heard him the other day repeat the language which he had used before, whatever opinion they may have had as to its parliamentary character, could not but admire the courage and the manhood of the utterances of the Senator from Florida.

Therefore, I ask, why should he be censured? Read, sir, the accusations which he made and the accusations which he inserted in the RECORD. In spirit, in emphasis, in significance, and I say in truth they are identical. Follow the line of his argument, the line of his thought, and you will find that there is not a single exaggeration in what he has inserted in the RECORD compared to what he publicly uttered on this floor. It is true the language is not the same, but the accusation is the same, the idea is the same, the arraignment is the same, only I will confess that the language which he inserted in the RECORD coming from the State of Florida is probably a little more flowery than the language which he uttered in this Chamber.

I am glad that this controversy has produced one result, and that is that the Committee on Privileges and Elections have asked for an order instructing the Committee on Rules to report a rule in order that we shall know what liberties we can take with this sacred RECORD and with our debates. If we are not to dot an "i" or cross a "t" or spell a word correctly which has been misspelled; if we are not to indulge in any figures of speech, in any rhetorical license and rhetorical amplification which my friend from Florida indulged in, let us know it, Mr. President. We shall then observe that rule which has an ascertained and determined and limited significance; but until then, for the Committee on Privileges and Elections to ask me by implication, however remote, to cast a vote which carries with it a serious censure upon a brother Senator whom I know we all respect and to whom we would do no wrong and no injustice, because he himself would treat us as he would have us treat him—I say that the Committee on Privileges and Elections will have to bring in a very different indictment, presenting some very different offense from that which is presented in this order, before I will cast a vote to censure a brother Senator.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, I am yet unable to understand, although probably it can be inferred, what the view of the honorable Senator from Louisiana is in regard to the paragraph that has been referred to, which I take now to be admitted to have been interpolated into the print of the RECORD, and no part of which, as a paragraph, whatever the idea may have been in other parts of the speech, had been spoken in the presence of the Senate or of the Senator from New Hampshire, to whom it alluded. Now, the Senator from Louisiana, in voting on the resolution reported from the Committee on Privileges and Elections, be it good or bad, has either to affirm that he vindicates and justifies the after-insertion of that paragraph or that he condemns it. From what he has stated, I suppose he means to say that he vindicates and upholds the subsequent insertion of the whole of that paragraph, in which the Senator from Florida alludes to one member of this body as being a person with blood-stained hands, a criminal, and guilty of wicked intentions. That is the short of it.

Mr. President, I believe the Senator from Louisiana, as highly as I respect him personally, as he knows, misrepresents the people of the State of Louisiana; that if an honest vote and an honest count had been had in that State when the Legislature was elected that elected him, we should never have had the pleasure and the honor of his presence. Now, there I stop.

Mr. EUSTIS. Why do you make that statement?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I make it because I believe it.

Mr. EUSTIS. Oh, not because it is true.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Because it is true, also, as I believe.

Now, Mr. President, I come to the point. I have said that to illustrate this matter to the honorable Senator from Louisiana, if he will give me the honor to listen to me for a few minutes, if he can stand it. To-morrow there appears in the RECORD this statement purporting to have been made by me here and now, that that result, which I have stated I believe to be true, as I think, was accomplished in some way by the action of the Senator from Louisiana himself, and that with blood-stained hands and wicked intentions he had managed by violence and by fraud to construct a Legislature of that character. My friend from Louisiana would say, "In what you said yesterday you meant, you know, really that;" and therefore it was perfectly proper, behind the back of the Senator from Louisiana, for it to appear in the RECORD to-morrow as if I had said here and now that he was a party guilty, personally, with blood-stained hands and wicked intentions, of constructing a contrivance that should send him to the Senate.

Is there anybody on either side of the Chamber except my friend from Louisiana who would think that that was exactly the right sort of thing for a Senator to do? We are obliged on this resolution to say one way or the other, that we think it was right or we think it was wrong.

Mr. EUSTIS. Mr. President—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Vermont yield?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Oh, certainly; certainly.

Mr. EUSTIS. I thought when the Senator asked me the question that he knew nothing about this case. He wants to convey the idea that the Senator from Florida said nothing of that kind. I read to the Senator what the Senator from Florida did say in the Senate. It is very short:

That is the feeling which in the hearts of desperate men leads to lawless acts. That is the feeling relative to the outraging and murder of hundreds of women and children in the Southern States, for which the Senator from New Hampshire is personally responsible.

Mr. EDMUNDS. May I interrupt the Senator long enough to correct him in his reading? He is reading the interpolated text. The word "murder" was not in as it was spoken here. If the Senator will only confine himself to reading what was said here it will be a great gratification probably to everybody except the people who do not want it that way.

Mr. EUSTIS. Of course the Senator and I are trying to get at the facts in this case.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Well, that is what you have been wanting for a good while, apparently.

Mr. EUSTIS. This is the language of the Senator from Florida used in the Chamber:

That is the feeling relative to the outraging of these poor women for which the Senator from New Hampshire is personally responsible.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Where is your "murder?"

Mr. EUSTIS:

The blood of these people rests upon him.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Where is the "murder?"

Mr. EUSTIS:

The destruction of the happiness of these households is his, and not that of these miserable men who are emissaries behind him.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Why did not the Senator read it as he did in the first place? What has become of his "murder?"

Mr. EUSTIS. Of what?

Mr. EDMUNDS. What has become of the "murder" that the Senator read the first time? Is that a post hoc murder or what sort of a murder is it?

Mr. EUSTIS. The Senator from Florida changed only two or three words.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It is only a Florida flourish, I think, Mr. President. I think murder is a Florida flourish from the conduct there latterly.

Mr. EUSTIS. What does this mean?

The blood of these people rests upon him.

Does not that cover everything?

Mr. EDMUNDS. The Senator may think so. I rather think in Louisiana they suppose that there is no distinction between justifiable homicide and any other; they call it murder possibly.

Mr. EUSTIS. I assure the Senator from Vermont that in my part of the country when it is said the blood of these people rests upon them, the people there understand what it means.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It may be so. I think they do in Florida and perhaps in Louisiana; and if I adopt what the Senator from Louisiana defends to-day and can employ a good newspaper man or a clerk or somebody who can furnish ideas and words for me, I can put into the RECORD to-morrow a splendid picture of the state of things in Louisiana, and a splendid picture of the personal blood-stained hands of that Senator, and have him stand up the next day and say that I did just right; it was only a Florida flourish, of roses and jessamines and of sugar-cane, possibly, and that sort of thing.

Now, does the Senator really mean that? Mr. President, I am sure he does not. His zeal in supposing that he is defending (as we do our country, they say, right or wrong) a particular Senator of his particular way of thinking, has led him beyond what I am sure after a little reflection he will be willing to go.

But how does this happen? If this is only a mere piece of rhetoric—I think the Senator said frills, or furbelows, or flounces, or something of that kind—

Mr. HOAR. Embroidery.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Embroidery. What is the object, Mr. President, of you or me or even anybody in a warm climate to put into a permanent and official record of the Government, which the newspapers tell us, and, I think, very truly, nobody ever sees except the students in musty libraries, this kind of embroidery which describes a fellow Senator in a body that is bound in respect of itself, to say nothing of its respect to each other, to use language which comports not with the Deluge (for I believe that was not a deluge of blood-stained hands, but of water, as far as I have heard), but that comports with the decency of statement relating to public interests, and not in turning the Senate of the United States into a bear-garden, of which each particular member is a particular bear, at one time or another, to fight out with his own claws and on his own lines the best he can?

Mr. DANIEL. Mr. President, I rise to a point of order. I desire that the words of the Senator from Vermont as applied to the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. EUSTIS] shall be taken down.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let them be taken down immediately.

Mr. EUSTIS. I understood that the suggestion as to me was a supposititious case.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It is not open to debate. Let the words be taken down, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The words to which the Senator from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL] refers will be taken down as reported by the Official Reporter as they stand upon his minutes. [A pause.] The Reporter desires that the words may be more specifically indicated in order that the page of the minutes may be referred to.

Mr. DANIEL. I can not repeat the precise words, sir, but I understood the Senator from Vermont to charge the Senator from Louisiana with intending murder, and it was on that line that I wished to have the words taken down.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. As soon as the words can be found they will be read. While the Reporter is searching, the Chair would state that in his comprehension of parliamentary law it is requisite that the particular Senator complaining should state the words to which he takes exception precisely as he conceives them to have been spoken. Then, by referring to the official minutes, the accuracy of the memory of the member can be ascertained, and the Senate can then pass, through the Chair, upon the question whether the words were disorderly and in violation of the rules of debate.

Mr. REAGAN. I wish to say that that would be making the test the accuracy of the Senator's memory instead of the record made by the Reporter.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The subject is not open to debate, but the Chair will willingly listen to suggestions that may be submitted by unanimous consent.

Mr. DANIEL. Mr. President, I understood the Senator from Vermont distinctly to impute to the Senator from Louisiana, designating him as such, the defense of murder upon this floor, and it is to that language that I take exception on the ground that no Senator on this floor has the right to impute to another person—

Mr. EDMUNDS (to Mr. HOAR). He is making a strong point on our side.

Mr. DANIEL. I do not make it, sir, on your side or on my side.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator must address the Chair.

Mr. DANIEL. Mr. President, the Senator from Vermont did not address the Chair. I did not intend any disrespect in not doing so myself. The point I make is this: I say no matter what side it strikes on, for in a judicial case in which I consider that the honor of the Senate is involved I do not speak for any side, but for its dignity alone; I except to that remark as imputing to a Senator a dishonorable thing.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The words to which the Chair supposes the Senator from Virginia to refer will be now read by the Secretary, having been furnished to him by the Reporter.

The Secretary read as follows:

I rather think that in Louisiana there is no distinction between justifiable homicide and any other; they call it murder possibly.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont will now have the opportunity of affirming or denying that the words as read were used by him.

Mr. DANIEL. Those are not the words.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I stand obstinately mute and take my fate.

Mr. DANIEL. Those are not the words that I except to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If the Senator insists upon his desire that the words shall be taken down, the Official Reporter will further search the record.

Mr. DANIEL. If I had the record before me, while it is true according to my ear, I could put my finger upon it; but I can not undertake to repeat whole sentences. I will repeat the exact words which struck my ear, and to which I took exception.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That the Senator has already done. Mr. DANIEL. Yes, sir; but the words just read are not the words.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator desire that the search shall continue further?

Mr. DANIEL. It seems so difficult, sir, to find words just uttered that I have no desire to press the matter. I only wished to call attention to them. I do not wish to interrupt the proceedings now.

Mr. HOAR. I suggest to the Senator from Virginia that it will not take two minutes for the Reporter to read to him from his minutes the passage where the words he complained of occur, and he can then call the attention of the Senate to them.

Mr. DANIEL. With the permission of the Chair I will look at the language.

Mr. DANIEL thereupon withdrew from the Chamber with Mr. Shuey, who had taken the notes of Mr. EDMUNDS's remarks, and after some minutes returned and said:

Mr. President, the stenographer has not fully written out his notes, but having read them to me from his stenographic report, I do not find the words there as I recollect to have heard them and as I am sure I did hear them. I therefore have nothing in the notes to call attention to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Am I at liberty now to proceed for a few moments?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont is entitled to the floor.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Now that I am at liberty to speak (for I wish to observe the rules of the Senate), I wish to say to my honorable friend from Virginia—and after what he supposed he heard he should have done exactly what he did; it was his duty as he understood it—that the only allusion I made to the Senator from Louisiana or any other Senator was merely to put to him a supposed case of what I might say, stating in a general way that I believe in the State of Louisiana, for illustration, and that is not the only one, the Legislature of that State had been composed by unjust methods, to which I did not intimate in the least degree that he was a party, but he had been elected by that Legislature, and what would be thought of me if officially in the RECORD I should be reported to have said here in the presence of the Senate that he was a guilty party with blood-stained hands in the composition of such a Legislature, in order to illustrate to my friend from Louisiana, who knows just as well as anybody can how much personally I respect him, the argument that I understood him to deliver to the Senate in favor of vindicating the Senator from Florida for the interpolation that he made, it appears, of a whole paragraph in the RECORD. I should never say such a thing here or elsewhere; and I am rather confident that not having said it I should not put it in the RECORD to-morrow. I am rather strongly of that opinion.

Now, Mr. President, let us come back to the earnest aspect of the very thing that we have here. It is not party; it is not person; it is the just and orderly administration of the public duties of this body. In justice and parliamentary law, not of the time of the Deluge or of any other time, but inherent in the deliberations of every body, from the board of city or town aldermen up to the councils of the President of the United States or of the two Houses of Congress, whatever may be personal feeling, whatever may be personal passion, personal prejudice, neither this body nor any other public body has anything to do with that; its members are equal before each other; and it is the public business, and not their private passions and opinions or prejudices, that is to be drawn into consideration in the public deliberations of such a body.

The Senator from Florida, as I think in what appears from the report and from the RECORD and the undisputed statement of fact, so far forgot himself—and I use no terms other than mere implication of the reproach of thinking that he did wrong; I make no characterization of it—so far forgot, in a moment of warmth or heat or whatever, his duty to this body and to the public in the feeling he may have had upon the subject as to cause to be printed, as in the permanent official records of the United States and for public information, distinct and apparently carefully drawn out statements imputing to a Senator from another State, and in new language, whatever he meant before, a crime, and, worse than an ordinary and common crime, a concerted and systematized crime, such as, for illustration, I have stated to my good friend from Louisiana I might have the power (I certainly have the power if this sort of thing goes on) to put into the RECORD to-morrow; and I use him for illustration because I know that neither he nor anybody else will misunderstand it.

Now, is that right? If it is right we ought to reject the resolution reported from the Committee on Privileges and Elections. If it is wrong, we ought to say so, in justice to the Senator from Florida, and to every other Senator, and to the public interest. It is one way or the other, and voting one way or the other on this resolution defines our respective positions as to that sort of thing.

Mr. President, I have said and endeavored to say nothing that should wound the sensibilities of any Senator, but the honor and fairness that is required in this body compels me to say in all kindness that I think the Senator from Florida transgressed, far transgressed, the right of correction, and even embroidery, as the Senator from Louisiana has so happily imagined as being possibly the case, and that he ought to stand up like a man and take whatever is implied in this resolution in saying that that sort of thing shall not be done any more.

Mr. DANIEL. Mr. President, this is a question, as I understand it, which addresses itself to the sense of honor of the Senate. I have had some advantage (if that word may be used) as to the understanding of this question, because I heard the discussion in which the words appeared that are now under consideration, and listened to that discussion with close attention. I was also one of the auditors to another discussion not long antedating that, in which the Senator from Florida was engaged.

I do not rise, sir, with a consciousness of any partisan bias, and, in my judgment, any man who would permit himself to be governed by partisan bias or by personal friendship in determining the right and propriety of the procedure to be pursued in this case is utterly incapable of being a judge.

I heard the remarks made by the Senator from Florida, and I did not regard those remarks as coming within the pale of parliamentary privilege. I go further, sir, than even the Senator from Massachusetts in my idea of the range of parliamentary privilege of any Senator who rises to address this body. I conceive, however poorly I may illustrate the idea in myself, that this is the grandest deliberative body the sun has ever shone upon; and in my judgment the rules of order and the decorous procedure which govern the Supreme Court of the United States should not exceed or transcend in any degree the personal politeness and dignity of demeanor of one Senator towards another.

The Senator from Massachusetts takes the ground that a Senator has the right to say to another that he is responsible for any train of evil consequences which may have eventuated from his vote or policy. That I respectfully deny. No Senator upon this floor has a right to point his finger at another and, separating him from the mass of his colleagues or from the mass of his political associates, attribute to him anything which is personal and which would naturally cause a just and honorable spirit to flinch. I would have the right to say with reference to a proposition pronounced by the Senator from Massachusetts that the consequences of that proposition involve any calamities which might fall upon the human race; I would have the right to say that the party to which he belongs was responsible for those consequences; but I have not the right to single that Senator out from amongst his colleagues and associates and to hold his personality up to the contempt or scorn or indignation of any individual. The Senator loses his personality when he stands upon this floor in the character that he represents, and unless you acknowledge it, insult, contumely, reviling, and all manner of things which lead to discord are the inevitable consequence.

Sir, I hesitate not to say that I do not believe the Senator from Florida had the right to designate the Senator from New Hampshire in his personality as a person who was responsible for crime or misdemeanor or anything that he chose to impute, for, if he should do so, the collision of the two men is made immediate, face to face, and invidious; and the great character in which they stand here as representatives of a sovereign nation and of sovereign States is immediately minimized to the personality of the two men.

In what I have to say upon this subject I shall pronounce my opinion, such as it may be and for whatever it may be worth, with as absolute an impartiality between these gentlemen as I am capable of maintaining. While, sir, these are my opinions, I would call the attention of the Senate to my view that the proper way to correct any order of procedure which has deviated from a correct line is not to single out one Senator and to make him the victim. If I know myself, I would vote exactly as I shall vote in this case if the Senator from New Hampshire occupied the shoes of the Senator from Florida and if the Senator from Florida should occupy his.

Mr. President, it was with that view upon my mind that I made the allusion I did to the remarks of the Senator from Vermont. It seems that I must have misunderstood him, though I was quite clear as to what I thought I heard him say. I wish to point out to the Senate the fact that this is not the first case here, nor is it without many associate cases, in which Senators have transgressed this rule, and that in order to correct the evil which must inevitably result if personality is ever to be permitted upon this floor you must strike at the root of that evil and tear it up root and branch. I was the much-pained witness of a discussion between two Senators which occurred upon this floor a few weeks ago. I shall not even designate them by name, as I do not wish to revive any personally unpleasant associations; but I heard one Senator who sat upon this side of the Chamber denounced with exhortation of invective, with personal charge and insinuation such as I had never heard delivered against any individual personally in any deliberative body of which I have ever had the honor to be a member. There was not a single member who noticed it.

I have the highest appreciation of the distinguished gentleman who presides over the deliberations of this Chamber, but, as I conceive, it was the duty of that gentleman the moment he heard those personalities uttered and aimed and directed towards a Senator to call the Senator to order who uttered them and to cause him to cease to speak until he spoke in decorous order towards all of his companions. There is a rule in the rules of the Senate which seems to be regarded almost as obsolete in this body which provides that—

If any Senator, in speaking or otherwise, transgress the rules of the Senate the presiding officer shall or any Senator may call him to order; and when a Senator shall be called to order he shall sit down and not proceed without leave of the Senate, which, if granted, shall be upon motion that he be allowed to proceed in order; which motion shall be determined without debate.

There is also another rule, a companion to this, which provides that—

If a Senator be called to order for words spoken in debate, upon the demand of the Senator or of any other Senator, the exceptionable words shall be taken down in writing.

Mr. President, it is a very disagreeable thing for any Senator here to take exception to any remark made by one of his colleagues. He is putting himself into a position of conspicuous prominence which naturally leads to friction and to unpleasantness before this Chamber. Therefore it is necessary that the Presiding Officer of this body, listening to the debate, should instantly check the first word, and no Senator here ought ever to be called upon to say a single word that might grate with insulting import upon the ears of another.

The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE] has said that the Senate of the United States is a safe place for one man to insult another. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] has rather congratulated the Senate upon the fact that a man may utter here with absolute freedom his opinions in such a manner as that, and that the Senate is safe. Mr. President, there ought not to be any spot of earth on which any man can with safety insult another. I do not mean to say that violence ought to result from the insult. Far from it. I do not look upon it as a matter of courage in any man to visit harsh and opprobrious terms upon a colleague; neither do I regard that the colleague is acting unmanly if he chooses to pass it by with the contemptuous scorn that a gentleman has the privilege of showing when he has been rudely and unmanly treated.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Virginia if he understood either me or the Senator from Mississippi to express any sentiment other than that which he is now expressing for himself, because, if he did, so far as I am concerned and so far as the Senator from Mississippi is concerned in what I said I concurred with him, I had no other meaning than that which he now states himself.

Mr. DANIEL. I think I understand the Senator perfectly correctly, but I beg leave respectfully to take issue with him. I do not think it ought to be safe for one Senator to point the finger of scorn at another in this body or to utter a contemptuous term towards him.

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator—

Mr. DANIEL. Will the Senator permit me to finish my sentence?

Mr. HOAR. Certainly.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FRYE in the chair). Does the Senator from Virginia yield?

Mr. DANIEL. Yes, sir.

Mr. HOAR. I paused because I understood the Senator to ask me to let him finish the sentence. When I said, and I suppose when the Senator from Mississippi said, that this place ought to be absolutely safe, I was referring and he was referring to safety from personal violence or quarrel in consequence of the utterance of opinions.

Mr. GEORGE. That is what I meant.

Mr. HOAR. I did not mean to intimate for a moment that a Senator who utters opprobrious language against another here should be safe from the very much severer punishment and greater danger of public condemnation of loss of the respect of gentlemen.

Mr. DANIEL. Mr. President, I am not quite as dull as the honorable Senator would seem by his language to think that I am. I think I understand him perfectly, and I think if he would be just a little patient in order that I might express myself one sentence after another and collect the whole idea I am endeavoring to give utterance to, he would find that he and myself are not very far apart, if at all, in the judgment which I venture to submit to the Senate.

I think the word "safe" is a misapplied term to any indecorum in the Senate of the United States. I think it is an ill-chosen adjective, if the Senator will permit me to criticise with becoming respect one who is generally so choice in his terms. It ought not to be safe in any sense beyond that of personal violence, which I of course except, for a Senator to use opprobrious epithets upon this floor towards another; and the only way in which it can be made unsafe is for the presiding officer to check the first intimation of such an utterance and for the universal common law and self-respect of this body to visit such a breach of its etiquette and privilege with its own emphatic disclaimer and disapprobation.

Mr. President, I wish to say this about the Senator from Florida: He has been made upon this floor the subject of much grosser animadversion than the Senator from New Hampshire. No one checked the utterance; no one chided the speaker; no one called him to order. This breach of privilege, which I call a departure from decorum, has gone on in various debates from time to time until now we have this case brought to our attention.

No objection is made in this place and now to the language of the Senator from Florida on account of its personal character. The time has passed, as I understand, when it could be made a matter of exception on the ground of being out of order. The exception which is taken to it is not that it was out of order, but simply that it was not uttered upon this floor. It is true that the words which were published in the speech of the Senator from Florida in the order in which they are used and in their amplification and ornamentation, as some might style it, were not used by him in debate. But this is a point which I think the Senator from Vermont has not entirely attended to; words of like import were uttered, and words much severer in the imputation which they carried, than the mere adjectivorous and rhetorical flourishes which were attached to them.

Mr. EDMUNDS. May I ask the Senator a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Virginia yield to the Senator from Vermont?

Mr. DANIEL. Certainly.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I wish in all sincerity to ask my honorable friend from Virginia, whose propositions upon this subject I entirely agree with, as I did with his calling me to order when he misunderstood me as stating an allegation of fact when I was using an illustration, why it should be proper for the Senator from Florida or for any other Senator, if it was rhetoric, to rub it in the next day and behind the back of the patient by a distinct and entirely separate sentence—not a mere correction of the rhetoric of a phrase, but a whole bodily thing?

If my friend will pardon me for a moment, I may allude to a similar instance, although not of personal imputation, which more strongly illustrates this proposition, that occurred here about a dozen years ago when one of the best of my personal friends (and I am glad to say still living, I believe, as a judge in North Carolina), Senator Merrimon, in a little discussion with another Senator in this body, taking the liberty that was supposed to belong to everybody of revising his remarks (I believe that is the phrase) made his adversary to appear, without intending it at all, as having made an entirely untenable and an almost ridiculous proposition. The attention of the Senate was called to it the next day as soon as it was printed, and my good friend from North Carolina and the whole Senate agreed that that was a mistake and a wrong and an injustice, and the very same order I think was made in substance that is proposed here, that the RECORD should stand as the thing actually took place, and that even in a case where it was not a personal imputation, but only an arrangement of argument which might, as my honorable friend perfectly understands, by a very slight change in language be made to put one person in the wrong and the other in the right.

I thank my friend for allowing me to make the suggestion.

Mr. DANIEL. I am happy to have heard the very entertaining argument of the Senator from Vermont. Its conclusion was so far away from the question he asked me that I must recur now to that.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It is 500 miles nearer, for North Carolina is only that far away from Washington.

Mr. DANIEL. When the Senator gets through (though I am so much entertained by his remarks that I regret he should so soon stop), I shall try to answer his question. The Senator puts to me the question, why should I say that the Senator from Florida did right and properly in adding these rhetorical flourishes and remarks to his speech? Has the Senator understood me to say that he did properly?

Mr. EDMUNDS. No; I am trying to find out what my friend thinks.

Mr. DANIEL. If my distinguished friend will only be a little patient (I am not quite so ready as he is upon a floor to which he has been so long accustomed) perhaps I shall state my own opinion upon that subject.

I do not think that any Senator ought ever either to utter or to put in the RECORD anything personally reflecting upon one of his colleagues. That is a sound principle, and I think that as to that proposition I shall have the assent of the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Decidedly.

Mr. DANIEL. In the manner in which this question comes up and with this little naked record of it in the form of a resolution and a report, my objection to the proceeding is that it involves an implied censure for something more serious than it on its face imports.

I will state that proposition again, in order that the Senators who do me the honor to listen to my statement may understand the clear, distinct ground upon which I put my line of action. It is that to make simply this record of this transaction, although the purpose to censure may be disclaimed by the committee which makes the report and although the jurisdiction to censure was not reposed in it by the Senate, this naked record speaking by itself, imports a much more serious matter than that which it deals with. That is to say, Mr. President, if any one who had not heard this discussion, if any one not familiar with the res gestæ of the transaction, were to take that separate fact and endeavor to deduce from it what had been the conduct of the parties, he would arrive at a conclusion which is opposite from the truth, although in terms no misstatement might have been made.

In order to produce the effect of truth upon a mind which you are addressing you must present the main facts and the surrounding facts in their proper colors and in their true proportions; and you may produce upon the mind of another whom you are addressing, by the selection of a part of a truth or a disjointed truth, an impression which is absolutely false. That being the case, if I, unfamiliar with this transaction, were to take this report and were to peruse it, I would reach the conclusion that the Senator from Florida had made a personal assault of words upon the Senator from New Hampshire, had done it behind his back, a term which the honorable Senator from Vermont uses, with all the implication which would attach to a cowardly and to an improper deed.

Mr. EDMUNDS. No, Mr. President, I did not mean that at all, because I know perfectly well that the Senator from Florida is not a coward or anything of the kind, and I do not wish to be so understood. But when I say behind one's back in this connection I mean that, after there has been a stand-up discussion and the body has separated, for one of the debaters to put into his speech a distinct and separate and new paragraph, whether it means the same thing that another did or not, is a thing done behind the back of that person, not in his presence, where he could then and there have defended himself from the imputation, whether it was a repetition or not.

Mr. DANIEL. I understand the Senator perfectly, and I have no doubt that every Senator does. But he illustrates, in the explanation that he makes of his own words, which I correctly apprehended, the very thing which I object to in this resolution. It places a Senator, in my judgment, in a false position.

While it is unpleasant to me to repeat the words of a painful debate (no Senator can have pleasure either in lingering upon it or in quoting language of this character uttered in this body), I state from my clear recollection as an attentive auditor of that discussion that there is not in the published remarks of the Senator from Florida any form of incultation or charge against the Senator from New Hampshire that he did not make here; in fact, I have before me now what the Senator from Florida did utter, and, in my humble judgment of the weight of words, the distinct charge is stronger even than the rhetoric with which it has been furnished up in the RECORD.

A little partisanship has crept into this discussion, and my honorable friend from Massachusetts, who is here delivering his judgment upon the propriety of conduct as involved between two of his colleagues, did not preserve his judicial pose and his judicial character long enough to forget the old battles of twenty-five and thirty years ago in which he was militant; and to listen to his address about the old-time abolitionist and the lash of the slave-master, it would seem to be the conclusion of his judgment that the Senate is incapable of deciding a naked question upon the rules without permitting its imagination to range the old battle-fields of a by-gone generation and to be illustrated from those sensitive points which are always calculated to disturb rather than to promote cool and deliberate judgment.

He speaks about the humor of the Senator from Mississippi. Banquo's ghost when it originally started upon its errand through the world, both upon the stage and in rhetorical illustration, was doubtless a very serious affair. But I am sure that even the grave Senator from Massachusetts is not incapable of detecting a little humor in the reiterated appearance, after the last appearance had been so often announced, and in my judgment a little humor about this matter is at least as much in order as a fiery invective based upon the memories of Charles Sumner and old-time issues which have long since died away, and which every good citizen, as it seems to me, would wish to see buried in oblivion.

Recurring to this matter I address you, Senators, as far as I am conscious, with a clear intent to endeavor to do what is just and right between man and man in this proceeding. I do not think that under all the circumstances of this case it would be the proper thing to place upon your record a conclusion which would be inevitably construed as a censure of the Senator from Florida upon an objection raised at a time when the matter to be censured in its personal character has passed by. Neither do I consider that it would be right and proper in the Senate in returning to and contemplating the enforcement of a rule, which has been neglected, to make any one of its members the illustration of its restored sense of order and propriety.

The order of the Senate must be located in its Chair and must pervade the whole body, and it is not the right and fair thing to do to select one man who has but done what is done daily in the Senate, who has amplified an idea which he has stated and illustrated it by terms of rhetoric. The personality and everything in that language which could have been objected to at any time, the gravamen of that utterance, was in his utterance here as I heard it fall from his lips once, twice, thrice, often repeated. And yet if you take up that speech and cut off the hem of the garment and ignore the garment, you put yourselves in the attitude of judging a thing which was not the substance of the matter complained of, and of misdirecting your judgment to an annex of rhetoric rather than to the main question which might at one time have been brought before you.

I have heard speeches made upon the floor of the Senate time and again, and I have seen them appear in the RECORD with diversified illustrations. I acknowledge that they furnish no clear or positive precedent for this, because this relates to personality, whereas some of them or indeed all of them may not have done so; and yet the very personality which is the subject of exception by the committee did appear and was the subject of discourse by the Senator from Florida in repeated utterances.

I can not, therefore, vote for this resolution, because in my judgment the effect of such a sentence would be a reflection, and not the accurate aim of justice. It would misguide the mind to a side light, and not to the main light of this controversy, and it would put the Senator from Florida, in my judgment, in the false light, before those who did not know the fact, of saying at night, in darkness and behind the back of a Senator, things which he had not uttered and reiterated in his presence. In reaching this conclusion, sir, I again repeat that if the Senator from New Hampshire was in his place and the Senator from Florida in his I would reach the same conclusion, and that the conclusion is utterly devoid of the control of bias on account of those engaged in it.

Mr. GRAY. Mr. President, as a member of the committee from which this resolution was reported by its chairman, I feel that I ought to say a word in explanation of the vote that I shall give upon it, in justice to myself and in justice to my distinguished friend from Florida.

I was not in the Senate Chamber this morning when the resolution was brought up for consideration, nor did I hear much of what has preceded the remarks of the Senator from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL]. I was surprised, however, upon entering the Chamber, to find that the resolution was before the Senate and had given rise to a debate the character of which surprised me still more. I had supposed that when this resolution was ordered to be reported to the Senate it would have been passed without a word of objection on any side of this Chamber, and would have been accepted as the orderly and best considered dealing that we could make with the subject-matter which had been referred to the committee by the resolution of the Senator from New Hampshire.

As I understood the meaning of the committee in ordering this resolution to be reported, it was that no attempt was to be made by the committee or on its recommendation by the Senate to pass upon the language used by the Senator from Florida or the language used by the Senator from New Hampshire; that the language of which the Senator from New Hampshire complains, not having been objected to at the time it was uttered (and which he explains by saying that he did not hear it), had passed out of the jurisdiction of the Senate, and that therefore it would be something outside of the jurisdiction of the Committee on Privileges and Elections to suggest to this body that they should revamp the issue and undertake to pass upon the question as to whether the language of the Senator from Florida was deserving of censure or not.

Therefore when I voted—as I am privileged, I suppose, to say that I did vote—for this resolution in the committee, I did not understand nor do I now know that any of my colleagues on that committee understood that the resolution was intended to imply a scintilla of censure upon the honorable Senator from Florida. All that I understood the resolution to mean is this: That it is the right of any Senator in this body, apart from the rules, and not by reason of privilege conferred by rules, but as inherent in those rules of decorum which should govern every assemblage of gentlemen, whenever a Senator calls attention to the fact that language personal to himself has been uttered by another Senator and that that language is opprobrious, to have that utterance remain upon the record, if he so wishes, precisely as it was uttered.

The question of the changes that were made by the Senator from Florida, in conformity to a habit that has grown up somewhat loosely in this body, how far he changed the purport of the language originally uttered, how far he modified it, as I certainly think he did modify it, was not a question considered by the committee nor submitted by it to this body; we simply and alone assert what I have characterized as the absolute right of every Senator to require language which he objects to as personal to remain upon the record precisely as it was uttered, verbatim et literatim et punctuatim.

Therefore, Mr. President, I must vote for this resolution, and my vote imports not only no disrespect to the Senator from Florida, but it imports not the slightest censure. The language that he uttered, and which I do not understand he denies that he uttered, will, if this resolution is adopted, simply remain upon the record, and the modification which he made in the stenographic report will be in future editions of the RECORD obliterated.

The Senator from Florida did say, according to the stenographic report:

That is the feeling which in the hearts of desperate men leads to lawless acts. That is the feeling relative to the outraging of these poor women, for which the Senator from New Hampshire is personally responsible. The blood of these people rests upon him. The destruction of the happiness of these households is his, and not that of these miserable men who are emissaries behind him.

Whether it is more objectionable to use language like that than to say, as the Senator from Florida saw fit to amend and modify that language in his corrected report—

The blood of Saunders, if the evidence shall show his death was in any way connected with the prosecutions in the United States courts, will rest on his conscience. The shrieking ghosts of the hundreds of outraged and murdered women and children, the victims of the wild lust and passions of a race who owe all that they know of religion and civilization to the Southern white people, and not to the Senator from New Hampshire, will disturb his sleeping and his waking hours—

we do not undertake as a committee to pass upon. In adopting this resolution we do not undertake as a Senate to pass upon the question whether one form of words is more objectionable than the other, whether it is more opprobrious to charge one with responsibility for outraging poor women than to charge him with the responsibility for the killing of men. That is a question which is left open to the decision of every man in the Senate and every man in the country who shall read this record.

Therefore, Mr. President, with that understanding and because I believe the Senator from New Hampshire had a right, which I would not see impaired, to have the language which was uttered by the Senator from Florida remain upon the record exactly as it was uttered, I shall vote for the pending resolution.

Mr. PUGH. Mr. President, I do not rise for the purpose of prolonging this debate, but, being a member of the committee by which this resolution was reported, I simply desire to concur fully in what has been so well said by the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY].

I am much surprised at this debate and much surprised at the opposition to the passage of the resolution. Senators who oppose the resolution, in my humble judgment, totally misconceive its plain meaning and purpose. So far as the committee who considered this matter are concerned, I can say that there was no difference of opinion, and no purpose whatever in the language of the resolution or in its effect to cast any censure whatever upon the Senator from Florida. There was no suggestion by any member of the committee that the resolution was capable of any such construction; and in my judgment that construction is distorted and is a misconception and a total mistake as to how the resolution will be construed by the Senate or by the public.

My opinion is that the defeat of this resolution would put the Senate in a false position, and every Senator who votes against it, in my judgment, places himself in a much worse position before the country than the Senator from Florida would be placed in by the adoption of the resolution. The resolution upon the face of it recites the language that it orders stricken from the RECORD, and it gives one single reason, and no other, for striking the language from the RECORD, and that is that the words that the committee ask to be stricken out were not actually spoken by the Senator from Florida. They may have been spoken in substance so far as the language of the resolution is concerned, but the recital is that they are asked to be stricken from the RECORD for the sole reason that they were not actually spoken. There is not a Senator who hears me who will say that that recital is not true.

Mr. President, having vindicated myself from a possibility of doing anything that would be a reflection upon my friend from Florida, with whom my associations are of the kindest nature and our friendship of the warmest character, I am utterly surprised that any friend of that Senator or any Senator can distort this language into the meaning that it amounts to a censure. It simply asks to have that language of a personal character, which can be construed to imply a personal offense, stricken from the RECORD because the words were not actually spoken.

We ought to take care of the verity of this RECORD, and especially in reference to language that can be construed into a charge of a personal character or implying a personal insult in words personally offensive. The RECORD ought to be guarded against it. And I am surprised that my friend from Florida desires that language which he admits was not actually spoken shall be added to the RECORD in the place of what the reporter put there, which he did say, and which, in my judgment, in substance, was contained in the words he added to the RECORD. But the language he added there might be differently construed by different persons, and because it might be so construed and was admitted not to have been actually spoken the committee thought it best to put itself in the position of correcting the RECORD and making it speak the truth.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. President, I do not rise, of course, to make any lengthy remarks in this matter, but an observation by the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. EUSTIS] leads me to call his attention to some remarks made by Thomas H. Benton in 1850 as reported in the Congressional Globe of Tuesday, April 2, 1850. They are confirmatory of what the Senator from Alabama [Mr. PUGH] said, and he came very near using the same language. In a case somewhat similar to this, Mr. Benton said:

Now, Mr. President, I have to say, what every Senator well knows, that it is not only the right, but the duty, of a Senator to revise his speeches, improve the style, and improve the argument, if it relates to argument; but where there is something of a different character—something personal—there can be no alteration of the words. This is parliamentary law, and it is the law, I will not say of honor, but of civilized man.

Further, he said:

Sir, in what is personal in this Chamber there can be no alteration of words—there can be no substitution of equivocal or convertible phrases. The words spoken, so far as character or feeling is concerned, are to stand. They are to stand, sir, and he is to abide what is to result from them in public opinion, or in any other way. There is to be no made-up case—there is to be no alteration in a single phrase.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. Mr. President, the reason given by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. PUGH] a few minutes ago why he thought every member of the Senate ought to vote for the resolution is exactly the reason why I shall vote against it.

I believe the reporters of the Senate are as accurate as any reporters could be expected to be, but that they are infallible nobody will claim. I was present at the time of the discussion and I heard it, and I do not believe that I remember more distinctly that this body was in session yesterday than I remember that these words were spoken by the Senator from Florida:

And the murder of hundreds of women and children in the Southern States.

I remember to have turned in my seat and looked at that Senator, and in my astonishment at the force of the words he was using I turned and looked at the Senator from New Hampshire, who was in his seat. The expression made such an impression on me at the time that I do not believe it is possible to be mistaken about it, and because I believe as firmly as I believe I am standing in my place to-day in the Senate that those words were spoken by the Senator from Florida I shall vote against this resolution.

The Senator from New Hampshire, the Senator from Massachusetts, the Senator from Delaware, the Senator from Alabama, have each insisted that it was right that the RECORD should record exactly what was said. I believe that to be true. So far as the remainder of this reported matter is concerned, I heard nothing of the expression, and I take it for granted that it was interpolated in the RECORD; but this expression, the one which embraces the gravamen of the charge, was, I as firmly believe, spoken by the Senator from Florida as I believe I am alive and standing here to-day; and for that reason I can not vote to so change the RECORD as to have it speak an untruth when it says the Senator from Florida did not use those words.

Mr. EVARTS obtained the floor.

Mr. HAWLEY. Will the Senator from New York permit me to make a single remark further?

Mr. EVARTS. Certainly.

Mr. HAWLEY. The line upon which the Senator from Arkansas has just now commented is in the notes submitted to the printer in the handwriting of the Senator from Florida as if it had been inserted. You may say it was omitted by the Reporter, but in the manuscript sent to the Printing Office those words are in the handwriting of the Senator from Florida.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. I do not know anything about that, but when I heard the words spoken in this debate, whether they were not heard by the Reporter does not change the fact that they were spoken. I have no more doubt that those words were spoken than I have of my existence. They made an impression upon me that it would be difficult for me to forget. I could not forget such an impression made at such a time and under such circumstances, and I remember distinctly to have looked at the Senator from New Hampshire sitting in his seat and to have wondered that such an expression could be used by one Senator to another, and that it could be passed by with as little comment as it seemed to provoke at the time.

Mr. GRAY. Will the Senator from Arkansas allow me?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New York [Mr. EVARTS] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. HAWLEY. It was by the indulgence of the Senator from New York that I spoke.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Connecticut interrupted the Senator from New York with his consent.

Mr. EVARTS. Mr. President, I hope within a very short compass to bring the attention of the Senate to the real matter that has been committed to the Committee on Privileges and Elections, and that has been followed in their report, and that whatever may follow in debate here and in the vote must proceed upon the record as thus presented.

The matter was introduced to the Senate upon the complaint of one Senator that in the speech of another Senator the RECORD had presented not merely the words that were spoken by the Senator, but additional matter that was not expressed in the Senate, that neither in form nor in words was presented to the Senate; but that there was interpolated in the RECORD a separate composition made after the Senate adjourned, and in phrase and in rhetoric that it was not pretended had been expressed in the Senate.

The committee were desired to look into that, not in vindication of anything but the RECORD, for it was that the Senate was interested and that the country is interested in. The persons, therefore, who had submitted to the action of the Senate and the supervision of the committee this RECORD pass out of observation and no longer are important. It is the verity of the RECORD that we are concerned with.

Now, let me show within what narrow limits the question of the verity of the RECORD was laid before the committee and is now before the Senate. Each of the gentlemen who have brought to the attention of the Senate the matter in dispute appeared before our committee and submitted in writing whatever he had to say on the subject. The only topic and the only interest felt by the committee was what might be regarded as almost a mere clerical duty, examining the RECORD as printed and the portions of it that were impugned, for it was definitely ascertained before us that there was a birth to this secondary invective, if that is a proper description of it, quite independent of it, quite separated from it, quite unconnected with it in any physical fact of voice or speech.

Then what remains to be considered but whether this RECORD should be made correct or whether the difference was so immaterial, the relation of the two sentences or paragraphs so clearly indistinguishable in purport as that the RECORD might be suffered to speak falsely, but yet not so as to injure? Well, Mr. President, who has a right to change the RECORD when the RECORD comes to be a matter of definite and responsible attention as to the verity or the falsification of the RECORD? Is this a record that we can make up afterwards and which we can hold forth as what we say after our attention is drawn to it that it is the record of what occurred here? Senators overlook the fact that that is not a matter of style nor a matter of taste nor a matter of interest or feeling.

The Constitution of the United States has attached importance to words spoken in debate in either of the Houses of Congress. It has declared, in protection and for the integrity of our debates, that a Senator for words spoken in debate shall not be called in question elsewhere. But is there any such provision as that over a composition prepared in one's chamber and never spoken in the Senate by which it is protected before the courts of justice or wherever else by this constitutional provision?

It seems to me, therefore, that we can not afford to be indifferent. We can not yield to questions when we reduce the RECORD to what was said in debate and omit what was confessedly written afterwards and in another place, because the correction may carry an implication of this or that degree of severity, that greater care, greater prudence, or a larger trespass had been observed or neglected. When we are asked to stand up and say that the Senator from Florida is not to be called in question for words spoken in debate, we can not afford to add "and for words not spoken in debate;" and yet that is the result, practically, if we shall assign as the cause of our reversal of the report of this committee that as the RECORD is printed there is, in substance and effect, in rhetoric and in taste, no difference between what was said in debate and what was not said in debate. The question is not how little there is, but how much there is that shows that one was said and the other was not, and for this great constitutional proposition it is necessary that the thing should itself be as it was said.

This committee, without turning to the right or to the left in any censure or in any approval, have announced that their united and undoubted opinion is that the produced record from the Reporter should remain and that the additional and separate appended portion of the speech shall be omitted; and yet Senators are here to vote and to pass upon that question; not impugning the facts, not doubting the integrity and the intelligence of the committee, they are going to vote against all of this for fear that they may do injustice in some implication that may be made from it.

Mr. President, I have nothing to say on the habit of enlarging or improving the RECORD from what literally appeared in debate, but when it comes to a question that might be and is a matter of importance, not only between Senators in regard to language used and language not used that may be charged to it, we are to look to the Senate itself as to whether it likes to have put under the constitutional protection language that never was uttered in its hearing. It is not a RECORD for the Senator from Florida, nor a RECORD for the Senator from New Hampshire, but it is a RECORD of this Senate that these things were said in its hearing and it took no note of them. It might take no note of them if they were said in its presence, but the Senate, without stultification, can never expose itself to the imputation that it allows words to pass unnoticed when they were not said in its presence.

Mr. VANCE. Mr. President, as I was a member, and am yet, of the Committee on Privileges and Elections which reported this resolution and as I favored the resolution in committee, I want to say a brief word in justification of the vote which I shall give.

Nothing was further from my intention than the idea that by this resolution any reflection was intended upon the distinguished Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL]. He has said nothing and done nothing that required censure, for, although he had used very severe language toward the Senator from New Hampshire, it will be admitted by all who remember that debate that he had exceeding great provocation.

There is a habit here, sir, prevailing in Senatorial courtesy that is thought to be very chivalrous and polite and courteous of making all remarks of a Senator impersonal towards the Senator who represents any people on this floor. It has come to be a habit, an excusable habit, a parliamentary habit, for a Senator to get up and say all kinds of hard and harsh and mean and unkind and false and slanderous things upon the whole people of a Senator's State, but so long as he makes these allusions impersonal to that Senator they are not considered unparliamentary, and the Senator himself is not considered justifiable in resenting them in the usual way.

Senators should remember that there are those whose names and good reputations are dearer to a Senator than his own. Senators should remember that we each and every one of us are sent here not only to transact the business of this country and to promote its welfare by every means within our conception, but that we are also sent here to take care of the good reputation and the fair name of the people whom we represent; and I say, therefore, when the Senator from Florida was attacked, as he was, through the people of his State, through the people who love and honor him, that he was fully justified in the very severe language with which he retorted upon the Senator from New Hampshire.

But there were certain things appearing in the RECORD which the Senator from Florida admitted were words that he had not said in the order of arrangement and in the language that he had not used, though he claimed that he had used a similar idea in the language attributed to him by the Reporter. That being so, this committee—and I presume I violate no confidence in what I shall say about it—after much deliberation and many castings up of precedents of what had been said in the Senate and what had been condoned, etc., and I believe an almost, if not entirely, universal disclaimer of any intention of reflecting upon the Senator from Florida, the proposition was submitted that, for the sake of the integrity of the RECORD, we would have omitted from it those words which it was admitted had not been spoken and let it speak the exact truth as our Reporter gave it to him, and for the sake of the verity of this RECORD of this great body I supported that resolution and shall now.

But I have already called attention and I desire still further to call the attention of Senators upon the other side of the Chamber to this habit of impersonal abuse, so to speak, of the people of our respective States. When the people whom we represent are assailed, you may expect, Senators, recrimination, and you must not always expect it in the most refined and elegant terms that can be selected from the lexicon of our language. You can not always expect us to keep our temper. You can not always expect us to imitate the wisdom of that great American philosopher, Mr. Josh Billings, who said that the little things of this life had given him more trouble than the great things, and he illustrated it by saying that fleas had given him a great deal more trouble and uneasiness than elephants. [Laughter.]

We can not always remember that, but naturally, as a great Georgia character, when he afterwards joined the church and was apologizing for being engaged in a fight, said that "in an unthoughtful moment he gave way to his human feelings" [laughter], you may expect such things. These little jabs and thrusts and gad-fly bites that come in an impersonal way are sufficiently irritating to upset the philosophy of the average American citizen, and language not conformable to the tenets of Sunday-schools and Young Men's Christian Associations may always be expected when such assaults are made upon our people. But I want the RECORD to speak the truth; that is, I want it to speak the truth so far as there is truth in what we give to go in the RECORD. [Laughter.] I do not vouch for it any further. Therefore I say I supported in committee and shall support here this resolution restoring the original language of the Senator from Florida, as reported by our Official Reporter, to the RECORD, and not denied by him. This will be satisfactory to the Senate, it will be satisfactory to all who read the RECORD, if anybody should unfortunately be compelled to read it after we are dead and gone, and the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER] says it will be satisfactory to him. If that is the very jacket that fits him and that he was measured for when he was present and the other does not, and if he is satisfied with being charged with the outraging of women rather than the murder of men, why, God knows, he may have what satisfaction he can from it. [Laughter.]

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, I think it is due to myself before this resolution shall be voted upon that I should submit a few observations to the Senate. I have nothing to say as to whether the Senate shall or shall not adopt the resolution. I shall only speak in my own vindication.

There are two aspects in which this resolution can be regarded: First, as a rule, custom, and usage of the Senate and, secondly, in its relation to the personal charges or statements, if there be any, contained in it.

I have been in this body for eleven years. I have heard during that time a great many passages-at-arms between different members of this body, and I have here in the RECORD the controversy between Mr. Conkling and Mr. Lamar. I will allude only to those controversies which relate to members of the Senate who are not now members, in order that I may not have any personal allusions or call up any of the circumstances which occurred at the time. There are many Senators here who have had such controversies and between whom severe personal remarks have passed; I will not refer to them. I find that Mr. Conkling, on the 18th day of June, 1879, used the following language:

Let me be more specific, Mr. President. Should the member from Mississippi, except in the presence of the Senate, charge me, by intimation or otherwise, with falsehood, I would denounce him as a blackguard, as a coward, and a liar; and understanding what he said as I have, the rules and the proprieties of the Senate are the only restraint upon me.

To which Mr. Lamar replied:

Mr. President, I have only to say that the Senator from New York understood me correctly. I did mean to say just precisely the words and all that they imported. I beg pardon of the Senate for the unparliamentary language. It was very harsh; it was very severe; it was such as no good man would deserve and no brave man would wear.

That passed away. There was no resolution to strike that from the records of this body; it was not said to be unparliamentary, and nobody rose here to say that any substitution of words was made which made it more severe or less severe. If it had not been said in substance, it would have been open to a serious charge, but, if said in substance, what does it import to the verity of the RECORD whether the words "liar," "blackguard," or "coward" was used or not? What difference did it make to the insult from either of these distinguished Senators to the other or to the verity of the RECORD that the specific language should be used?

But I aver upon the authority of the RECORD here that it has been the uniform practice of the Senate that there shall be a revival of the remarks, not by the insertion of any new matter which conveyed more severe charges than were uttered, but by any language which was not more severe.

In a celebrated debate between two very distinguished men, Mr. Thomas H. Benton, of Missouri, and Mr. Henry S. Foote, then Senator from Mississippi, on the 2d of April, 1850, the following observation occurs:

Now, Mr. President—

Said Mr. Benton—

I have to say, what every Senator well knows, that it is not only the right but the duty of a Senator to revise his speeches, improve the style, and improve the argument, if it relates to argument.

So much for the rule of this Senate for a hundred years. Now, I venture to say that Thomas H. Benton, with his thirty years in the Senate, with his compeers, Clay and Webster and Calhoun and Cass, and men of that stamp, will not suffer in comparison with the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts or from New York or from Vermont or from the whole body of the Senate. I venture to say that with that distinguished circle of men, whose genius and whose learning were quite equal to anybody here, this rule of revival and correction under the authority of Thomas H. Benton is a sufficient authority for any man now to revise.

In reference to the personality of this matter, Mr. Benton goes on to say—and in order that I may not misrepresent him I will quote what he said, because the verity of the RECORD, if it be impeached, is as much concerned in the revival of one as the other, and they are both subject to reasonable interpretation. What does he say in regard to the personality? He was then engaged, I will observe, in an excited controversy with Governor Foote, an able and eloquent man, and Mr. Foote had charged Mr. Benton with inserting in the debates language which he had not used, and Mr. Benton was charging Mr. Foote with precisely the same, inserting in the debates language which he had not used. Mr. Benton under those circumstances, and a very aggravated case, made this observation:

But where there is something of a different character—something personal—there can be no alteration of the words. This is parliamentary law, and it is the law, I will not say of honor, but of civilized man.

I accept that. There can be no alteration of the words, not in the critical and carping and unreasonable argument that the words can not be changed, but that the meaning of them can not be changed, for Mr. Benton says, immediately after:

I filled up these two or three words in the opening sentence. That was all.

Now, here is this case of a paragraph inserted, and here is Mr. Benton announcing the rule and announcing that he had made a change of a few words, not altering the meaning, and here is the language of Mr. Foote to which he refers:

So there are two falsehoods there together. I am remarking on an article in a newspaper, and I can not be called to order.

The official reports of the Senate were then published in a newspaper and making this evasion of what he supposed was parliamentary decorum in order to speak in the presence of the Senate—

Mr. FOOTE (in his seat). I hope he will not be called to order by any one.

Mr. BENTON—

Quoting from Mr. Foote—

"At present he is shielded by his age, his open disavowal of the obligatory force of the laws of honor, and his Senatorial privileges." Shielded by his age! by his age! Sir, let any person insult me where an appropriate chastisement can be employed and inflicted upon blackguardism and he will find out whether I am not young enough to resist; he will find out my age without consulting any calendar at all.

"His open disavowal of the obligatory force of the laws of honor." Take that in any sense and it is false. Take it in the sense in which it is perhaps intended, and it is false.

That discussion goes on. Mr. Foote replies and charges upon Mr. Benton that he had altered the record and alleges that he, Foote, had used nothing but language which imported the full sense and meaning of these corrected and revised remarks in the Globe. Where is the precedent obtained from this that these remarks should be struck from the RECORD? Are they not there? Do they not show what occurred?

Of what avail is it to the verity of the record when the speech comes here showing the substance and the facts of the controversy between them and left to the judgment of Mr. Clay? Mr. Calhoun was not then here, but Mr. Clay was, and I think Mr. Webster, though possibly Mr. Webster may have been Secretary of State at that time. It was, however, left to the judgment of the great men who were his contemporaries here, and what was the action taken upon it? Why, we heard nothing of striking it out of the record.

So I might go on and follow it up through numberless cases, and I say there is not a precedent nor can there be a reason why remarks should be stricken from the RECORD.

Mr. President, if I am guilty of what is charged by the Senator from Massachusetts or the Senator from New York or the Senator from Vermont, of having inserted in this RECORD one single word that had not its full equivalent in direct allusion and reference to the Senator from New Hampshire, I pronounce myself a coward and a dishonorable man if there be one word in it that had not its equivalent in the original remarks; and, if that be the case, there is nothing to impeach the verity of the RECORD.

Now, Mr. President, let us look a little into this and see. It is admitted that I stated:

That is the feeling which in the hearts of desperate men leads to lawless acts. That is the feeling relative to the outraging of poor women in the Southern States for which the Senator from New Hampshire is personally responsible. The blood of these people rests upon him.

The Senator from Massachusetts undertakes to say that to this paragraph these words are added:

The blood of Saunders, if the evidence shall show his death was in any way connected with the prosecutions in the United States courts, will rest on his conscience, etc.

I will not take time to read the whole of it. The Senator undertakes to say that that contains a distinct and a new allegation. I will ask the Senator from Massachusetts or the Senator from New York if either of them will arise in his seat and say that that paragraph does not refer to the text of this speech everywhere, if there is any allegation in it from me that the Senator from New Hampshire was personally present and that his hands were stained with the blood of actual participation.

Why, no one will say it. They know that the responsibility charged upon the Senator from New Hampshire was the consequence of his official acts. No one will venture to say that that language imports a personal participation in the guilt of these crimes.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator asks me to rise. I will rise, with his leave, and say that that is not the point. The first utterance of the Senator, as I understand it, charges, what the Senator now says the second does, the Senator from New Hampshire with a certain course of public conduct which these things came in consequence of; and in what the Senator from Florida wrote out and put in the RECORD he charged the Senator from New Hampshire with conscious guilt on those subjects. He says the Senator from New Hampshire is guilty. It would not be at all applicable to a person who had advocated some public measure which had resulted in these things, but that the Senator added that the Senator from New Hampshire is guilty in his own conscience. That is the question.

Mr. CALL. Now, I will ask the Senator from Massachusetts to see if there is anything of that kind that bears such an interpretation. If such an interpretation can be placed upon that language, it is entirely beyond my knowledge or my intention. The language everywhere shows clearly that the Senator from New Hampshire was not charged with being personally present and that he could not have had his hands stained with the guilt of these people actually, unless he had been there participating in person in it. That is plain and manifest.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator will pardon me. That is not my point. It is not a question of personal presence; it is a question of conscious guilt; and in the one case the Senator did not charge it and in the other he did. That is the difference.

Mr. CALL. That is a very nicely drawn distinction which I do not think anybody in the world will see but the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. HOAR. Read the language.

Mr. CALL. I certainly did not perceive it, nor do I now. Let us see where the conscious guilt alleged is. Here is the paragraph which has caused all this contention, and as to which I aver now that if there is a single word in it, with the exception of the three phrases in reference to ghosts which have interested my friend from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE] so much, and his old friend Banquo, I do not know and can not find it out, and I think I will prove that every word of it is contained and by direct reference to the Senator from New Hampshire, not as his own personal guilt, but as the result of his public conduct. Now, let us see where the conscious guilt is:

The victims of the wild lust and passions of a race who owe all that they know of religion and civilization to the Southern white people, and not to the Senator from New Hampshire.

The blood of Saunders, if the evidence shall show his death was in any way connected with the prosecutions in the United States courts, will rest on his conscience.

Now, Mr. President, what is it affirmed there that will rest on the conscience of the Senator from New Hampshire? That he personally slew this man? that he personally advised his killing? or is it affirmed that there will rest upon his conscience the knowledge that his official actions have led to this? Which is the inference? What would be the interpretation by any man, no matter whom? And yet I am arraigned here for imputing to the Senator a consciousness of guilt. What kind of guilt? If there be any guilt, it was of course the guilt referred to which follows every public man, the consequences of his acts, when they bring death and they bring outrage upon women and children, and when they bring in a highly inflamed and excitable community to the minds of those people who are subject to be excited and misguided the torch and the dagger and arson and rape and murder, the impression that his actions, however well intended they may have been, have led to these results. There is no other imputation in that allegation, nor is there anywhere throughout that whole speech any imputation of anything but the moral responsibility for his public conduct in these directions. Now, let us see what the language is:

That is the feeling which in the hearts of desperate men leads to lawless acts. That is the feeling relative to the outraging of and murder of hundreds of women and children in the Southern States.

That is the stenographic report. What is that? Will the learned Senators tell me or tell the people of the United States or anybody in this inquiry here to ascertain whether I have inserted something new that impaired the verity of this RECORD by simply altering the arrangement of certain words—will they tell me that that word does not refer to what precedes it. For that is the very first proposition of the interpretation of language.

That—

What? Let us see—

That such acts of fiendish malevolence—

Preceding. What else?

When these men, desperate, and reckless, and lawless are sent throughout the entire country to stir up in peaceful communities a war of races, and rape and the outrage of women and children, who, in their indiscreet partisan zeal, indecently prompt these acts, and are particeps criminis in the outraging of women and the murder of infant life in a peaceable community, inciting the use of the torch and the dagger, that the public indignation, etc.

Here we have the whole, the torch and the dagger, the murder of infant life, the rape of women, the burning of houses, the murder of men, every one of these allegations substantially and in terms which are contained in the paragraph which is referred to, and therefore contrary to the declaration of Mr. Benton, contrary to everything that has preceded in the history of this body, I am arraigned here for what? For making a new arrangement in five sentences of the words used a dozen times in the course of that speech.

Mr. President, I have said that I shall not say anything to the Senate in regard to the passage of this resolution. I do, however, wish to say a few words in reference to the circumstances under which this speech was delivered. I had no idea of offending the rules of the Senate. I think I may call upon Senators who have been here in the eleven years I have served in this body to say that no one has been more carefully observant of the rules and decorum of this body than I have been, that no one has shown a disposition to be more amiable and to avoid everything offensive than I have. But let us see a little as to what were the actual facts of that day.

The Senator from New Hampshire has conceived it to be his duty on repeated occasions to bring to the notice of the Senate what he conceived to be violations of law and outrages of every description in the Southern States. In that very debate the Senator from New Hampshire used these words:

I do not know whether he—

was or was not a friend of the Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL].

And then the Senator added:

And I hope the Senator from Florida will remember it, for I say that that is what the Democrats of Florida are about to-day, individually and collectively, and through their representatives on this floor. From the time this judge, and this district attorney, and this marshal were appointed they have been hunting them down and assailing them and defaming them in every possible way and under all possible circumstances and in every possible place.

The Democrats of Florida have rallied to assail these men, the witnesses are killed, the United States deputy marshal is killed, and if there are not more of them killed before this business is over it will not be the fault of the Democrats of these half a dozen counties where, by frauds innumerable, crimes beyond measure, a Republican candidate for Congress was counted out and a Democratic candidate for Congress was counted in.

The Senator from New Hampshire further went on to say:

If I were able to give the name of my informant I would not do it to the Senator, for fear that he, too, would be added to "the silent voters" of Florida within a short time.

What is this language? A charge that the representatives upon this floor, the Senators from Florida, would communicate the name of the Senator's informant to those who had assassinated John Bird, and so he was afraid to communicate it!

In 1888 the Senator from New Hampshire used this language:

I denounce it—

The election in Louisiana—

as the result of a deliberate conspiracy of wrong and crime on the part of Governor Samuel D. McEnery and Governor Francis T. Nicholls, two stupendous criminals against free suffrage; two instigators of the intimidation and murder of voters; two guilty leaders of thousands of reckless, law-breaking election officers and desperate, cruel, brutal torturers and murderers of black citizens of their own State. I denounce this return of 126,746 votes as a crime against the Republicans of Louisiana, not only against those who are living, but against those who are dead, butchered by bloody ruffians, agents of the State governments of McEnery and Nicholls, in order to make a Democratic victory.

I denounce it as a crime against republican government, which it tends to destroy; as a subversion of the Senate of the United States, which is to be invaded as one of its results; as an outrage upon humanity, which is being degraded and dishonored by the frauds, forgeries, whippings, and killings of innocent citizens of our country of boasted freedom and liberty in order that Grover Cleveland may be again President of the United States.

But that was not all. The Senator from New Hampshire in the same debate, on the 22d of August, 1888, read to the Senate a letter, and before reading it said:

I find in the Sunday Herald, published in this city on August 19—last Sunday—the two following telegrams. There seems to be an epidemic of negro-killing going on at the South about this time, and it prevails there to a much greater extent than does either cholera or yellow fever:

"SHOT HIM TO DEATH.

"APALACHICOLA, FLA., August 18.

"A lynching took place at Ocheekhee, Calhoun County, Wednesday. Nash Griffin, a negro, wrote an insulting letter to a young white lady, Miss Kimmie Griffin. She showed the note to white men, who caught Griffin, gave him one hundred lashes, and ordered him to leave the county. He did not go, when forty masked men caught and shot him to death. No arrests have been made." Undoubtedly Griffin ought not to have written the note—

Then said the Senator from New Hampshire—if he did write such, but that is not the way to measure out justice.

Here is a case of a respectable, refined woman, with proposals of the most brutal character made to her in a community where outrages by violence are not uncommon, and the indignation which led to a violation of law at the occurrence of these events brought here without knowledge of the facts or the circumstances which attended it, as a reproach of an outrage committed wantonly by people who had been stirred up to violent indignation by acts of this description. I was justified, therefore, when the Senator from New Hampshire said here in that debate:

Mr. President, murder is an old weapon of the Democrats of Florida. The Senator from Florida wishes to go back into olden times. I am willing to go back with him into the history of the State of Florida ever since the war. In 1875 the State senate of Florida stood 12 and 12, and one of the Republican senators, E. G. Johnson, by name—I give the name and the date, so that the Senator shall know what the case is—on the 21st day of July, 1875, was shot dead at Hart's Road, Nassau County, and the senate of Florida was changed by that dastardly murder from a Republican to a Democratic senate; and although the murderer was well known, as I have been informed, certain it is that no arrest was made and no punishment inflicted, because the murderer was protected by the community in which he had performed his political crime.

Mr. President, here upon the floor of this body is a charge that murder is an old weapon of the Democrats of Florida. Here is a charge of outrages committed because the indignation of a community has visited upon a culprit, wantonly assailing the virtue of a white woman and inviting her to acts of impropriety, which exhibit the danger in a community where there are a great number of these people of leaving them unprotected, and the imputation upon the Senators of the State, upon the Representatives from the State, and the entire Democratic party of the State of Florida, of being parties to murder as a political weapon!

Mr. President, I felt myself justified in saying that the result of the action of the Senator from New Hampshire was the commission of these crimes. I said that he was the mouthpiece and the representative here of the lawless, the anarchists, the law-breaking population of the Southern States, the enemies of property and social order, and without imputing to him any intention whatever or looking into his motives, I characterized the result of these efforts of his, the line of political conduct he was pursuing, as the destruction of the happiness of the households of the Southern people, as the cause of the murder and the arson and the rape which were committed there.

Mr. President, that was legitimate, that was in the line of debate, and that imputed no personal imputation to the Senator from New Hampshire to which any of us are not subject for the consequences of our political action; and I therefore say in my justification here to-night, let the Senate take such action as it may see fit, I appeal to the just and impartial judgment of good men throughout the country whether in the addition that I have made to these observations of mine, and which were printed in the RECORD, there is a single word that conveys a new imputation or a different offense than that charged by me upon the floor of the Senate.

Mr. PADDOCK. I ask leave to make a report.

Mr. HOAR. Let us have a vote on the pending resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is the Senate ready for the question? The Chair understands the Senator from Massachusetts to object to other business.

Mr. HOAR. I call for the yeas and nays on the passage of the resolution.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BUTLER (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMERON]. If he were present I should vote "yea."

Mr. CULLOM (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY], but, as I understood his remarks this afternoon, he is in favor of this resolution. I am also in favor of it, and therefore I vote "yea."

Mr. DANIEL (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS]. If he were here he would "yea" and I should vote "yea."

Mr. DOLPH (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. BROWN]. I think this is a case in which I should withhold my vote.

Mr. EVARTS (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN], and withhold my vote.

Mr. FAULKNER (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY].

Mr. FRYE (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN].

Mr. MITCHELL (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. KENNA], and withhold my vote.

Mr. PADDOCK (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. EUSTIS]. If he were here he would vote "nay" and I should vote "yea."

Mr. PASCO (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Illinois [Mr. FARWELL]. If he were present I should vote "nay."

Mr. PLATT (when his name was called). I am paired generally with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. BARBOUR], but I understand that that pair has by arrangement been transferred to the junior Senator from Colorado [Mr. WOLCOTT], and I will therefore vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. SPOONER (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WALTHALL], who is detained from the Chamber by illness. If he were present I should vote "yea."

Mr. VEST (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB]. I should vote "nay" if he were present.

Mr. DAVIS (when Mr. WASHBURN's name was called). My colleague [Mr. WASHBURN] is paired with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. GIBSON]. If present, my colleague would vote "yea."

Mr. TELLER (when Mr. WOLCOTT's name was called). My colleague [Mr. WOLCOTT] is paired with the junior Senator from Virginia [Mr. BARBOUR]. My colleague would vote "yea" if present.

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. HARRIS. I desire to know if the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] is recorded as voting.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. He is not recorded.

Mr. HARRIS. I withhold my vote. I have a standing pair with that Senator; otherwise I should vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 27, nays 11; as follows:

YEAS—27.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The state of the vote disclosing the want of a quorum, the Secretary will call the roll of the Senate.

Mr. HOAR. Is it in order now to move to adjourn?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is.

Mr. PLATT. Let the roll be called.

Mr. SHERMAN. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Ohio moves that the Senate do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and, at 5 o'clock and 8 minutes p. m., the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, March 12, 1890, at 12 o'clock m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, March 11, 1890.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the Journal will be regarded as approved.

CORRECTION OF A BILL.

Mr. BAKER. I desire to make a correction in one respect concerning the bill (S. 140) to prevent the introduction of contagious diseases from one State to another and for the punishment of certain offenses. There is an error in one of the amendments which was adopted in that bill. The amendment, as it appears on page 2147 of the RECORD, provides:

The said rules and regulations shall be prepared by the Supervising General of the Marine-Hospital Service, under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury.

The word "Surgeon," which should have been inserted before the word "General," appears to have been omitted. It is a mere clerical error, and I ask unanimous consent that the correction be made.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent, as the Chair understands, that the bill be amended by inserting the word "Surgeon" before the word "General" in the clause which he has recited.

Mr. BAKER. Yes, sir; I think the correction had better be made in that shape.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The amendment will accordingly be made.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Speaker, I filed yesterday a protest by citizens of Red Lodge, Mont., against extending the boundaries of the Yellowstone National Park. I observe that this protest has been referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds. I desire to have the reference changed to the Committee on Public Lands, before which committee the bill to which the protest relates is now pending.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the correction of reference will be made. The Chair hears no objection.

BOOK-KEEPER IN CLERK'S OFFICE.

Mr. KERR, of Pennsylvania. I desire to report a resolution from the Committee on Accounts.

The Clerk read as follows:

"Resolved, That the Clerk of the House of Representatives be authorized to employ an assistant book-keeper for the Clerk's office during the sessions of the Fifty-first Congress, to be paid out of the contingent fund of the House until otherwise provided for, at a salary of $100 per month."

Your committee, to whom was referred the resolution authorizing the employment of an assistant book-keeper in the Clerk's office of the House of Representatives during the Fifty-first Congress, to be paid out of the contingent fund of the House until otherwise provided for, respectfully report said resolution favorably, and recommend its passage.

Mr. KERR, of Pennsylvania. I desire, Mr. Speaker, to have present consideration of the report.

Mr. MILLIKEN. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the consideration of the bills reported from the Committee of the Whole on a previous day authorizing the construction of public buildings, which come over under the operation of the previous question.

Mr. ENLOE. I rise to a privileged motion.

The SPEAKER. The motion of the gentleman will be in order after the execution of the previous question. As the matter now stands there are certain bills upon which the previous question is operating, after which the Chair will recognize the gentleman, unless his motion refers to the pending business.

RETURN OF BILL FROM THE SENATE.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is informed that the bill which has just been corrected on motion of the gentleman from New York [Mr. BAKER], has been sent to the Senate. It is therefore necessary to submit to the House the following resolution, directing its recall for the purpose of making the necessary correction, which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Clerk be directed to request the Senate to return to the House of Representatives the bill (S. 140) to prevent the introduction of contagious diseases from one State to another, and for the punishment of certain offenses.

The resolution was adopted.

PUBLIC BUILDING, NEWARK, N. J.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the first bill coming over under the operation of the previous question.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 7156) to provide for the increase of the limit of cost of site and public building at Newark, N. J.

The amendment recommended by the Committee of the Whole was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

The question recurred upon the passage of the bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I believe, under the order, these bills are subject to twenty minutes' debate?

The SPEAKER. Not after being ordered to engrossment.

Mr. HOLMAN. Before that?

The SPEAKER. Before that they were.

Mr. HOLMAN. Would any motion to amend have been in order?

The SPEAKER. The Chair is informed that the right of debate alone was retained, not the right of amendment.

The question was taken on the passage of the bill.

Mr. HOLMAN demanded a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 115, noes 7.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, inasmuch as the vote is so decisive in favor of the passage of the bill, I will not call for a quorum.

So, no further count being demanded, the bill was passed.

Mr. MILLIKEN moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PUBLIC BUILDING, CEDAR RAPIDS, IOWA.

The next business reported from the Committee of the Whole with amendments was the bill (S. 903) for the erection of a public building in Cedar Rapids, Iowa.

The bill was read at length.

The amendments reported from the Committee of the Whole were read and agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. MILLIKEN moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PUBLIC BUILDING, SCRANTON, PA.

The next business reported from the Committee of the Whole with amendments was the bill (H. R. 3331) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the purchase of a site and the erection of a suitable building for a post-office and other Government offices in the city of Scranton, Pa.," approved July 27, 1882.

The bill was read at length.

The amendments reported from the Committee of the Whole were read and agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. MILLIKEN moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PUBLIC BUILDING, CHESTER, PA.

The next business reported from the Committee of the Whole with amendments was the bill (S. 859) for the erection of a public building at Chester, Pa.

The Clerk proceeded to read the bill.

Mr. MILLIKEN. I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the formal part of the bill be dispensed with.

Mr. HOLMAN. The bill ought to be read at length, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. MILLIKEN. My only object was to save time in reading the formal part of the bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask for the reading of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk resumed and concluded the reading of the bill.

The amendments reported from the Committee of the Whole were considered and agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. MILLIKEN moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PUBLIC BUILDING, TROY, N. Y.

The next business reported from the Committee of the Whole with amendments was the bill (H. R. 605) to increase the appropriation for the erection of a public building at Troy, N. Y.

The bill was read at length.

The amendments were read, as follows:

Amend by striking out the following words: "And said additional sum, to wit, the sum of $200,000, is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be used and expended for the purposes provided for in this act;" also by striking out section 2, as follows:

"SEC. 2. That the officers of the United States Government having charge of the erection of public buildings are required to be governed by the limitation hereby prescribed in making plans and contracts for said building."

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask that the last amendment may be again reported.

The amendment was again reported.

Mr. MILLIKEN. I will say to the gentleman from Indiana that that is the law now.

Mr. HOLMAN. If I remember correctly, that was stricken out on account of its being substantially the general law. If it is the general law, of course it is not necessary to repeat it here.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. MILLIKEN moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PUBLIC BUILDING, COLUMBUS, GA.

The next business reported from the Committee of the Whole with amendments was the bill (H. R. 188) for the erection of a public building at Columbus, Ga., and appropriating money therefor.

The bill was read at length.

The amendments were read and agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. GRIMES moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. DIBBLE. I move to amend the title by striking out the words "and appropriating money therefor."

The SPEAKER. Without objection, that amendment will be made. There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

PUBLIC BUILDING, DALLAS, TEX.

The next business reported from the Committee of the Whole with amendments was the bill (H. R. 848) to authorize the construction of an addition to the public building at Dallas, Tex.

The bill was read at length.

The amendments were read and agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. MILLIKEN moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT ATCHISON, KANS.

The next business reported from the Committee of the Whole was the bill (S. 2406) to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building thereon at Atchison, in the State of Kansas.

The bill was read at length.

During the reading of the bill,

Mr. MILLIKEN said: I ask by unanimous consent that the reading of the formal part of these Senate bills be dispensed with.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maine?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I object.

The reading of the bill was resumed and concluded.

The amendments were read and agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. MORRILL moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT ALEXANDRIA, LA.

The next business reported from the Committee of the Whole was the bill (H. R. 401) to provide for the construction of a public building at the city of Alexandria, State of Louisiana.

The bill was read at length.

The amendments were read and agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BLANCHARD moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT HOULTON, ME.

The next business reported from the Committee of the Whole was the bill (H. R. 417) for the erection of a public building at Houlton, Me.

The bill was read at length.

The amendments were read, as follows:

Amend by striking out, in line 12 and line 35, the word "seventy-five" and inserting "fifty."

Also strike out the following words:

"And for the purposes herein mentioned the sum of $75,000 is hereby appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury."

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I will ask the gentleman who has charge of this bill what the gross postal receipts are at this place.

Mr. MILLIKEN. I will give five minutes to my colleague from Maine, Mr. BOUTELLE, to explain the provisions of this bill.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I will say in relation to this bill that it is one which has been pending in Congress for seven years. It has been reported favorably in every Congress since and including the Forty-eighth, but, by the misfortune of being low down on the Calendar, it has never passed the House, though it has been passed by the Senate once, and, as I have said, has been reported favorably in the House three times before this report.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. The gentleman misunderstood my question.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I will answer the gentleman's question. When the bill was introduced by me the population of the town was considerably less than it is now, and the application for a public building was based principally upon the needs of the customs service. The town of Houlton is the business center of the county of Aroostook, which county is larger in area than the State of Massachusetts, with a frontier line of 250 miles, which has to be guarded, and the receipts from customs are very considerable. It is on the border line between Maine and New Brunswick. This bill has been recommended by the Treasury Department, and I will state to the gentleman that the net customs receipts there are sufficient to pay for this building inside of two years.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. What was the gentleman's last statement? I did not hear it distinctly.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I say that the net revenues to the Government, after paying all expenses, would pay for this building in about a year and a half.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. What are the net receipts of the custom-house there?

Mr. BOUTELLE. I will give you a comparison that was called for by the Supervising Architect, and which shows the rapid growth of business there. In 1878 the gross receipts were $8,194 and the expenses were $7,421. In 1888 the receipts were $45,286.68 and the expenses were $8,600. The net revenue was about $37,000. This bill provides for an appropriation of only $50,000, which would be paid out of the net receipts inside of two years.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. What are the accommodations there now for the customs business?

Mr. BOUTELLE. The business is done in leased premises, which are very inadequate. I have no wish to take up the time of the House, but I might have read here letters from the Democratic collector and postmaster for the past four years and from the other officials there, as well as from the Treasury Department, showing the need for this building.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Do you know the amount of rent which is now paid?

Mr. BOUTELLE. I have not the figures at hand, but can readily ascertain them. The amount of rent is not very large, but the accommodations are entirely inadequate. As I have said, this is the leading town in the most rapidly growing section of that part of New England. It increased over 40 per cent. in population between 1870 and 1880 and it is increasing much more rapidly now.

Mr. KERR, of Pennsylvania. What is the population of the town?

Mr. BOUTELLE. About 6,000.

Mr. KERR, of Pennsylvania. Is there a Federal court there?

Mr. BOUTELLE. There is no Federal court now, but there must be one established shortly to accommodate a large and growing section.

Mr. KERR, of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I think we must draw the line somewhere on the public-building question, and in the absence of a general law defining the localities where public buildings should be erected, I think we ought to say a little town estimated to contain five or six thousand people, shown by the census of 1880 to have had only 4,100 people and which has not a Federal court, should not come in here and receive our votes for a public building.

I can understand why this public-building bill for a little town in Maine has been reported. The chairman of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds seems to come from that State—

Mr. BOUTELLE. Allow me to say that my colleague [Mr. MILLIKEN] has only been chairman of that committee in this Congress, while this bill has been reported three times before.

Mr. KERR, of Pennsylvania. Well, he has done very well since he has been chairman. [Laughter.] You do not find fault with him, do you?

Mr. BOUTELLE. This bill has been reported before three different times by Democratic committees.

Mr. KERR, of Pennsylvania. Well, I do not think that is any credit to the Democratic committees [laughter], and I say to you now that this "I tickle you and you tickle me" plan is not a very good one for members to act upon in voting away the people's money. That is what I am here to protest against. I say to you, my fellow-members, that we must stop somewhere in this matter. I have seen members of this House who a few days ago were arrayed against each other with partisan feeling come together and embrace on a public-building bill. [Laughter.] We must not give away the people's money through a desire to do personal favors to one another.

I have no doubt that the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BOUTELLE] can come back again without this public building. I have no personal feeling in this matter. I never met the gentleman; I never was in his little town; I never heard of it until this bill was presented. My education may have been neglected, but that is the fact; and I do not think that this little place, situate in Aroostook County, near the New Brunswick line, with only one small railroad and without a Federal court, is entitled to a public building at this time. Better wait a little while and get a little larger and stronger before you come in and ask to have the public money expended in your locality. In all seriousness, Mr. Speaker, I think this bill should not pass, and I hope the members of this House will vote it down. I call a halt in this wanton extravagance and reckless expenditure of the people's money.

Mr. BYNUM. I do not think, Mr. Speaker, that this bill ought to pass, and if the members of this House will vote in accordance with their judgment and their consciences I do not think that it will pass. The gentleman from Maine [Mr. BOUTELLE] insists that this bill ought to pass because there is a custom-house at this point. The customs receipts amount, on an average, for the last eight years, to about $25,000 a year. There is a collector and two clerks at this place. The clerical labor in the collection of customs is very small, less than that of the postal-order business of a fourth-class post-office. There is also a post-office at this town with a postmaster, and a separating clerk at a salary of $300 a year. The only clerk at this office is a clerk who receives a salary of $300 for separating the mail that is sent out from this office to different points.

The population of Houlton in 1880, according to the census of that year, was 3,228. I have not been able to find by any enumeration what the population is at the present time; but taking the vote of 1880 in Aroostook County we may be able to approximate the growth of this town and county during the last eight years. In 1880 the vote polled in Aroostook County was 5,335; in 1888 the vote was 5,541—an increase of 206.

In 1880 the gross receipts of the post-office amounted to $3,795; in 1889, to $4,716—an increase of $1,079 in the eight years.

What are the present allowances to that office? For hire of separating clerk, $300; the rent, in regard to which the gentleman from Maine does not appear to be posted, amounts to the enormous sum of $200. That is the amount which the Government is now paying for rent.

It is said that the building thus occupied is an old wooden structure. This must be a very thriving, growing town that can not furnish anything but an old wooden building for the use of the Government, a building the rent of which amounts to the enormous sum of $200. For fuel and light the amount allowed is $55; salary of postmaster, $1,600—making the total allowances $2,150, leaving the net receipts $2,566.

Now let us stop for a moment and calculate what will be the cost of maintaining the building which it is proposed to construct. On $40,000 the interest at 3 per cent. would amount to $1,200. The provision for heating will unquestionably be by furnace or by steam apparatus, requiring an engineer at a salary of probably $1,000. There will have to be at least two janitors to take care of the building, whose salaries will amount to not less than $1,440. For fuel and light a reasonable estimate is $200. So that the interest on the money expended in the construction of the building, together with the expenses of keeping it up, will amount to nearly $4,000 a year. We are paying now $200 for rent. Would it not be wiser to permit some enterprising citizen in that enterprising town to construct a decent building and rent it to the Government for even $500 or $600 a year, the Government thereby increasing the rent to that amount? and it would certainly be sufficient to secure ample and commodious quarters and would save an enormous outlay.

The SPEAKER. The time allowed for debate in opposition to this bill is exhausted.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Mr. Speaker, I will not take time to reply to the pleasantries of the gentleman who was on the floor a few moments ago. I will simply say that this bill or one similar to it has been reported by four committees of the House during the last seven years. The present bill has been carefully considered by our committee, who have decided that the interests of the public and the safety of the records of the custom-house demand that this building should be constructed. I ask for a vote.

The question being taken on the amendments, they were agreed to. The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

The SPEAKER (having put the question on the passage of the bill) said: The ayes seem to have it.

Mr. BYNUM. I ask for a division.

The question being again taken, there were—ayes 121, noes 32.

Mr. BYNUM. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, there being ayes 36, noes 117—more than one-fifth voting in the affirmative.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 158, nays 60, not voting 111; as follows:

 Mr. FEATHERSTON with Mr. DARGAN.
 Mr. MORROW with Mr. WHEELER, of Alabama.
 Mr. KNAPP with Mr. MUTCHLER, on all political questions until Monday, March 17.

For this day:

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Pennsylvania, with Mr. CRAIN.
 Mr. ANDERSON, of Mississippi, with Mr. STONE, of Missouri.
 Mr. GEAR with Mr. STOCKDALE.
 Mr. PUGSLEY with Mr. MCRAE.
 Mr. HITT with Mr. SPRINGER.
 On this vote:
 Mr. BINGHAM with Mr. MORGAN.
 Mr. TURNER, of Kansas, with Mr. HATCH.
 The vote was then announced as above recorded.
 Mr. MILLIKEN moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.
 The latter motion was agreed to.

PUBLIC BUILDING, LYNN, MASS.

The next bill reported from the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union was the bill (H. R. 448) for the erection of a public building at Lynn, Mass.

The bill was read.

The amendments of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union were read, as follows:

Strike out "two hundred" wherever it occurs and insert in lieu thereof "one hundred and seventy-five."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. LODGE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PUBLIC BUILDING, SPRINGFIELD, MO.

The next bill reported from the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union was the bill (H. R. 516) to extend the limit for a public building at Springfield, Mo.

The bill was read.

The amendments were read, as follows:

Amend by striking out in the sixth line the word "sum" and inserting in lieu thereof the word "of."

Also, insert, after the word "of," "the cost of said building is hereby increased."

Also, strike out in the third line the following words: "Seventy-five."

Also, strike out in the same line, after the word "dollars," the words "is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. MILLIKEN moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PUBLIC BUILDING, LA FAYETTE, IND.

The next bill reported from the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union was the bill (S. 606) for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building thereon in the city of La Fayette, Ind.

Mr. MILLIKEN. I move by unanimous consent that the reading of the formal part of the bill be dispensed with.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

The amendments were read, as follows:

Amend by striking out "one hundred thousand" wherever it occurs and inserting in lieu thereof "eighty thousand."

Also strike out the following words: "which said sum of one hundred thousand dollars is hereby appropriated for such purpose out of any money in the United States Treasury not otherwise appropriated."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I demand a division on the passage of the bill.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 111, noes 4.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I make the point that no quorum is present.

Mr. CHEADLE demanded the yeas and nays, but subsequently withdrew the demand.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I make the point that a quorum ought to be present at the time business is being transacted, and that persons who have come in should not be counted, as they were not present at the time.

The SPEAKER. One hundred and sixty-five members are present.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. That does not make a quorum.

Mr. MILLIKEN. It does with the Speaker.

The SPEAKER. One hundred and sixty-six are present. [Laughter.]

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Among those the Chair has counted are some who were not present at the time business was being transacted.

The SPEAKER. But there is a quorum present now, and the question recurs on the passage of the bill.

The bill was passed.

Mr. CHEADLE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PUBLIC BUILDING, BATON ROUGE, LA.

The next business reported from the Committee of the Whole with amendments was the bill (H. R. 386) to construct a public building at Baton Rouge, La.

The Clerk proceeded to read the bill.

Mr. MILLIKEN. I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the reading of the formal parts of the bill.

There was no objection.

The Clerk resumed and concluded the reading of the remainder of the bill.

The amendments reported from the Committee of the Whole were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. ROBERTSON moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PUBLIC BUILDING, FREMONT, NEBR.

The next business reported from the Committee of the Whole with amendments was the bill (H. R. 533) for the erection of a public building at Fremont, Nebr.

The bill was read at length.

The amendments reported from the Committee of the Whole were considered and agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. DORSEY moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PUBLIC BUILDING BILLS TABLED.

On motion of Mr. MILLIKEN House bills of the following titles were severally laid on the table, namely:

The bill (H. R. 299) for the erection of a public building at Cedar Rapids, Iowa;

The bill (H. R. 766) for the erection of a public building at Chester, Pa.;

The bill (H. R. 316) to provide for the erection of a public building for the use of the post-office and Government offices at the city of Atchison, Kans.; and

The bill (H. R. 234) to provide for the construction of a public building at the city of La Fayette, Ind.

REPORT ON PENSION OFFICE INVESTIGATION.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee will now be recognized for a question of privilege.

Mr. ENLOE. Mr. Speaker, I move to discharge the Committee on Invalid Pensions from the further consideration of the resolution I send to the desk, and ask to have it read and considered at this time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman rose to a question of privilege, as the Chair understood.

Mr. ENLOE. It is a question of privilege under clause 5 of Rule XXII of the House.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution called up by the gentleman.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, requested to furnish to the House of Representatives the evidence taken and the report submitted to him by the committee which he appointed to investigate the management of the Pension Office under the late Commissioner Tanner; that he also be requested to inform the House of Representatives what steps, if any, have been taken to recover the money paid to persons who were illegally and improperly related; that he also be requested to furnish a list of the names of the employees of the Pension Office who were engaged in relating themselves and each other, and to inform the House of Representatives who of those on said list are still in the Government employ, and who have been discharged, if any, on account of their participation in such frauds on the Government.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. ENLOE. Mr. Speaker, I wish to say a few words upon that motion before it is submitted to the House.

The resolution which has just been read by the Clerk was introduced by myself in the early part of this session and was referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions. From that day up to the present time no attention has been paid by the committee to the resolution, and no step taken to furnish to the House and to the country the information which the resolution demands. I think it is a matter of sufficient importance, not only to this House, but to the country, as well as to the gentleman who was investigated and removed from office, to require that the Committee on Invalid Pensions should have considered and reported it back, and if the committee has failed to do its duty in that regard I think it is the duty of the House to adopt the resolution and require the information to be furnished which the resolution calls for, showing why it was that Commissioner Tanner was removed from the office which he held as Commissioner of Pensions and why he was subjected to an investigation. Let us have the light turned on, not only inside of the Pension Office, but upon all those cases that were disposed of at that time.

The Secretary of the Interior in his report to Congress furnishes us a statement which reflects very seriously either upon the judgment or the integrity of the late Commissioner of Pensions. It indirectly charges the employees of that office and Mr. Tanner, for it must come to him and include him, he being at the time at the head of the office, with having conspired together for the purpose of defrauding the Government of the revenues collected from the people.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman allow me?

Mr. ENLOE. I will yield for a question.

Mr. CANNON. I desire to say that I do not see the chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions, Mr. MORRILL, in his seat. I would be glad to have the gentleman present, if the gentleman from Tennessee will defer this subject.

Mr. ENLOE. I do not suppose the gentleman makes that request.

Mr. CANNON. I only desired to call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that the chairman of the committee seemed to be absent.

Mr. ENLOE. I am not responsible for his absence.

Mr. CANNON. Oh, no; not by any means.

Mr. ENLOE. The Committee on Invalid Pensions has had ample time to consider the resolution if they had desired to do so.

Now, sir, if there is any reason why the information should not be furnished to the House, I should like to know what that reason is. I find that the Secretary of the Interior furnishes in his report some sample cases of rating, and in these sample cases which he cites the majority of those rated are persons who are employed in the Pension Office and have been engaged in rating themselves, by which they have illegally taken from the Treasury of the United States the sum of $16,799.16.

I find the first case cited by the Secretary is Frank D. Butts—a principal examiner—

Mr. FARQUHAR. Will the gentleman yield to me for a moment? I merely wish to ask the gentleman to withhold his remarks in the absence of the chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions and inasmuch as I understand that the members of the committee have talked about it amongst themselves in the committee and did not think there was any immediate urgency for its passage.

Mr. ENLOE. Mr. Speaker—

Mr. FARQUHAR. It seems that the gentleman is making a speech here without the House having official knowledge of the matter to which he calls attention, and I understood also that the gentleman rose to a question of privilege.

Mr. LANE. Will the gentleman from Tennessee yield to me for a moment?

Mr. ENLOE. I will yield for a question.

Mr. LANE. I wish to say to the gentleman that I am a member of the Committee on Invalid Pensions and that I have attended every meeting since the organization of the committee. I know that this matter has not been mentioned in the committee. Nobody ever mentioned it to me and it never was called up in the committee.

Mr. ENLOE. There has been enough said in the newspapers of this country to call attention to this matter, and the information ought to be furnished, whether there was a resolution referred to the committee or not.

The information furnished by the Secretary of the Interior is insufficient. It is unjust to the country and unjust to the late Commissioner of Pensions, who was removed from that office. Removed for what? So far as I have been able to learn from the public prints and the best information accessible, he was removed for the reason that he attempted to keep the promises that he made on the stump as a leader of the Republican party in the last campaign.

Now, I say, Mr. Chairman, so far as Mr. Tanner and his administration of the Pension Office are concerned and so far as I have been able to observe, he has simply tried to keep in good faith the promises which the Republican party made to the country, and upon which this Administration came into power. And now, after he has been kicked out of office for keeping those promises, I want to know not only a part of the reasons, but all the reasons. [Cries of "Hear!" "Hear!" on the Republican side.] I will give you something worth listening to if you will keep your ears open and your mouths shut. [Laughter.]

Now, Mr. Chairman, I say that this Frank D. Butts, the first case cited, was drawing a salary of $2,000 a year from the Government when he received his arrearages of $2,196.54. His pension was increased from $17 to $30 per month, and the Secretary of the Interior says that he was rated against the decisions and the practices of the Department.

The next case was that of James E. Smith, another chief of division, who was receiving a salary of $2,000 a year. The arrearages he received were $1,236.20, and his pension was increased from $24 to $30 per month; and the Secretary has questioned whether this man was ever entitled to a pension, but says there is no question about the fact that he was not entitled to the increase of pension and the arrearages.

Next, take the case of Alvah H. Doan, a clerk, receiving a salary of $1,600 a year. The arrearages he received were $3,022, and his pension was increased from $10 to $30 per month; and the Secretary of the Interior says that this was illegally done.

Then, take the case of Joseph C. Squire. I believe he was the personal and confidential friend of the late Commissioner Tanner, and he was drawing a salary at that time of $1,800 a year from the Government. His arrearages amounted to $1,564, and his pension was increased from $4 to $16 per month.

The next case I cite is that of William P. Davis, a chief of division, who was receiving a salary of $2,000 a year. The arrearages paid him were $737.60. He was rated twice, and his pension increased from $18.75 to $25.50 per month.

The next case is that of Joseph Dickinson. He was an outsider and he did not fare so well as the insiders. Joseph Dickinson got arrearages amounting to $713.33, but being an outsider he did not get an increase of pension, so that all he could get was what he laid his hands on at the time.

The next case to which I invite your attention is that of Silas Colgrove, an Indiana man—an outsider. I suppose his case was a fulfillment of some of the promises made on the stump in Indiana. This gentleman received $1,822.50 and his pension was increased from $22 to $30 a month. No medical examination was made in his case to show that he was entitled to anything more than he was receiving.

Mr. CUMMINGS. I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. ENLOE. Certainly.

Mr. CUMMINGS. I would like to ask whether the gentleman has any information that any of these gentlemen were dishonorably discharged from the Army, as I understand that the Commissioner expressed the opinion that men who were dishonorably discharged should receive the same rate of pension or increase of pension as those honorably discharged.

Mr. ENLOE. I have not had time to go into the records of these gentlemen in the War Department to find whether they were dishonorably discharged or not; but I remember a ruling of the Assistant Secretary upon that point, and I will come to it after awhile.

The next case I want to call attention to is that of John L. Paine, another outsider, and another of those sample cases referred to by the Secretary. He received $2,397.53. His pension was increased from $4 to $17 per month, and no medical examination had been made in his case. I see from the history of the case of Mr. Paine that he was examined by several medical boards, and claimed to have heart disease, and he received a pension of $4 per month. In 1889 the Washington board found that he had heart disease and it gave him $2,397.53 arrearages; and at that time there were on the files of an insurance company an application of this man in which he alleged that he had no functional disease of this character which was calculated to shorten his life; so that the Secretary makes the comment that this man either perjured himself in the one instance or the other.

I want to call attention to another matter. These are sample cases cited by the Secretary of the Interior, but I do not find a word, I do not find a line about Hiram Smith, jr., of the State of Missouri, who I believe drew arrearages amounting to $6,000 or a little over. I want, for his benefit and for the benefit of the country, all the facts in the case of Hiram Smith, jr. He was thought good enough when Commissioner Tanner was kicked out of the place to remain in his place and to act as a Deputy Commissioner for several months. I suppose that when he did retire he retired voluntarily and carried with him the honors of the Pension Office.

Mr. RICHARDSON. And the money.

Mr. ENLOE. Yes, there is no doubt about his carrying the money.

Hiram Smith, jr., was honored with the confidence of the Administration, though one of the largest beneficiaries of this charitable organization in the Pension Office, to begin the reduction of the surplus by a distribution among the officers and employes first, which was to be extended to the soldier voters as soon as charity could get away from home. Hiram Smith, jr., could be trusted with the management of that great office after being one of the chief beneficiaries of what looks like a conspiracy to rob the Treasury, while Tanner, who did not get a cent of it, was made the scapegoat to carry these early sins of the Administration into the wilderness of private obscurity. The country needs more light to enable it to understand this moral reformation.

There were other cases not mentioned by the secretary which need further explanation. There was Captain Phillips, of the middle division, whose pension was, it is alleged, rated to six times the original amount. That case is not mentioned in the report of the Commissioner. There was Captain Butts, of the Army and Navy division, whose case is not mentioned, and there are the cases of Doctors Bell, Mason, Carpenter, Darling, and Baxter, all rated and not mentioned in the Secretary's report.

Altogether, I am informed there were some forty-eight or forty-nine of these men in the Pension Bureau who were engaged in the laudable business of rating themselves, and yet we have never been able to find out the names of but five or six of them, except through the public press. Now, Mr. Speaker, what I want is the adoption of this resolution, which will give us the names of these men, which will let us know how many of them are still in the service, how much money they received from the Government illegally, and what part of that money has been recovered, or what steps, if any, have been taken to recover it.

There are other outside cases that I would like to have a little light on. One of them is the case of Senator MANDERSON, who was rated and paid about $5,000, which he found it convenient to return afterwards, and I believe that was the only part of the money that was ever returned. The public press alleges, on the authority of the Senator, that his pension was increased without his even making an application or request for an increase.

There is another gentleman with regard to whose case I should like some light, a gentleman from Maine, Mr. E. L. Dickey, and a friend of the great political reformer Dudley. He received $2,000 as arrearages and had his pension increased from $8 to $37 a month. I would like to hear from the State of Maine on that subject.

I will go a little further. I find published in the papers a list almost as long as my arm, involving hundreds of thousands of dollars, cases of retarding that was done by Commissioner Tanner during the month of August. Following is the list:

Table of cases rerated.

Name of pensioner.	Total amount new certificates.	Amount paid on old certificates.	Balance paid on first payment under new certificates.

Commissioner Tanner said another thing that commended him very much to the country, or to certain portions of it, or to a certain element in it, when he said that $4 a month was little enough for any man to receive, and announced that he would take some 33,000 persons who received pensions of less than $4 a month and put them on the roll at $4 a month.

It is true that Assistant Secretary Bussey said of this order of Commissioner Tanner, "It has neither color of law nor the authority of precedent," and he overruled the decision of the Commissioner. It is true that Tanner made a deficit in the appropriation amounting to from ten to fifteen millions of dollars, and that his action will cost the country one hundred or one hundred and fifty millions more; but that is a matter of very little consequence in these times.

Tanner was keeping the pledges which he had made to the country by the highest authority and which he had a right to expect the Administration to sustain him in keeping. And, Mr. Speaker, if the Administration had kept its faith as Tanner kept his, he would be in that office still and you would have heard the hollow scoop of his shovel on the bottom floor of the Treasury long before this time. [Laughter.] But I will tell you what was the matter with Commissioner Tanner, in my opinion—if I am wrong the report of the facts will show it. I think the trouble with him was that he wanted to talk while he was at work. The Republican party wanted a man who would work and say nothing; and that work is being just as effectually done to-day and, I believe, more rapidly than it ever was before, but the man who is doing it is not saying anything about it. I wish, Mr. Speaker, that the line of this investigation could be carried a little further. I would like to know why it is that Bussey, the Assistant Secretary of the Interior, remains while Tanner goes.

Is it because he decided that a dishonorable discharge was no bar to a pension, that a man who had deserted his colors was as good a man to be pensioned as one who had stood by them to the last? That was the effect of his decision, and I suppose it is the law of the Department to-day.

As a naked question of law I do not assume to question it, but as a rule of the Department it is so severe on the honest and true soldier that Harper's Weekly Journal of Civilization, in commenting on it, uses this language:

If, as the opinion of the Judge-Advocate-General, of Secretary Delano, and of the Supreme Court holds, it is not the character of the soldier or the terms of his discharge, but the disability alone, which is the title to a pension, it is plain that unless the law expressly forbids—as in the case of a deserter—a thief, or a coward, or even a traitor may be placed upon the pension-rolls. If this be so, we should agree with Commissioner Black that an honorable pensioner must feel a little uncomfortable in such company, and the kindly respect which has hitherto attended the "old pensioner" would soon disappear.

He also decided that a man who was trying to steal hospital bread was in the line of duty; that a man who killed himself eating pie was in the line of duty, and in fact that any injury received by a soldier not at the time disobeying orders was received in the line of duty; and in that way he broke down the barriers erected by his predecessors against unworthy claimants and opened another door to great frauds on the Treasury. When he decided, as he did decide, that the testimony of a commissioned officer should not be required to make out a pension claim, he made it possible for Tom, Dick, and Harry to combine and swear for each other, and thus defraud the honest soldier and reward the bounty-jumpers, camp-followers, and deserters at the expense of the country and of the true and deserving soldiers.

Why is it, I would like to know, that Mr. Bussey is a patriot and a statesman, a man to be trusted and admired by the Administration, while plain, blunt, outspoken Mr. Tanner, who thought it no wrong to loot the Treasury to pay for the votes that brought this Administration into power, according to his authorized promise, must be made a Jonah and pitched overboard to the whale of public opinion? The country wants an answer to this question.

Is it because Mr. Tanner boasted of his work? If that is so, it seems a pity that a man's head should be cut off because his tongue is too long. It is a pity that this reflection should be cast upon the late Commissioner Tanner, while at the same time a man who is doing greater injury to the country than he ever did is still in office and still furnishing new legal keys to the back door of the Treasury.

I want to know how those men who rerated themselves and got the money have been treated. I want to know if they are going to be turned out. I want to know if they are going to be honored. I want to know if the Administration is going to undertake to keep the promises of the Republican party that it will divide the surplus to meet the requirements of the Grand Army of the Republic and that it will give every soldier $12 a month as long as he lives.

I think Mr. Speaker, I have demonstrated not only that the investigation which this resolution calls for ought to be made, but that the entire administration of the Pension Office ought to be thoroughly investigated and overhauled by a committee of this House. I admit that I believe that the business of bidding for the soldier vote has been going on here upon both sides of the line. I think it has been done from the very start up to the present hour and it is going on here every day, especially every Friday night, and I think it is time that we should stop that business.

If the Democratic and Republican parties can not live without robbing the Treasury for the benefit of men who demand it as a matter of course, without regard to their disabilities or their necessities, without regard to their rights under the laws enacted and the usages and practices heretofore established and observed, then, I say, it is time that these parties should give way to some party that can live without it and can afford to protect the interests of the laboring people of this country, who ultimately have all these burdens to bear.

Mr. ALLEN, of Michigan. Will the gentleman permit a question at that point?

Mr. ENLOE. I will.

Mr. ALLEN, of Michigan. I want to know if the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. ENLOE] did not, at the last session of Congress, in the interest of "economy" and keeping the money in the Treasury, introduce a bill providing for the erection, at the expense of the United States Government, of a soldiers' home, into which Confederate soldiers should be admitted.

Mr. ENLOE. The gentleman from Tennessee did; and it would have been a good use of the money to erect a soldiers' home, as I proposed, upon the Hermitage, the place where the great and immortal Andrew Jackson lies buried, the man who said "the Federal Union must and shall be preserved." If we have a restored Union, as you say we have, then I say that it would have been the part of right and duty, the part of wisdom and patriotism for you to take money from the public Treasury for that purpose. The State of Tennessee would have donated that site to you and you should have erected upon it a soldiers' home that would admit the disabled Confederate soldier alongside of his brother in blue whom he had met upon the field of battle.

That measure was prompted by the highest motives of patriotism.

It proposed to establish a soldiers' home where the Union soldiers and the Confederate soldiers who were unable to care for themselves might be cared for by a great and beneficent Government, of which they are all equally loyal citizens to-day. It was to commemorate the principles and the example of one of the greatest statesmen and soldiers this country has ever produced. It was to proclaim to the world the restoration of that Union which he so much loved and which he did so much on the field and in the forum to glory. I do not believe that the gentleman himself or that good and patriotic citizens in any part of this Union would have found anything in that measure to reprobate or condemn.

I maintain that the day for "shaking the bloody shirt" as an excuse for plundering the public Treasury ought to pass, if it has not passed. I am not in a condition to-day to go into a discussion of all these matters, but I am asking some questions in this resolution which are very interesting to the laboring people of this country, and the answers to which will be very interesting to everybody if the whole truth can be extracted from that Department.

I wish to say, in conclusion, that it seems to me we have gone almost far enough in the matter of increasing pensions in the reckless fashion which has prevailed heretofore. It has been done most recklessly. I want to see this competition between political parties bidding for the soldiers' vote and paying for it out of the public Treasury—I want to see this stopped. Let every soldier in this country stand upon his merits, upon his services, and not stand, as a Pretorian guard with a bayonet, at the polls to compel political parties to grant pensions to men who are not entitled to receive them.

I believe in the Government keeping its just obligations to its soldiers; but I do not believe in putting a price on patriotism and tarnishing the glory of the volunteer soldier by treating him as a mercenary whose sword in war and whose vote in peace can be bought for the price of a pension. That will do for bounty-jumpers and deserters, but not for the volunteer soldiers who fought for principles in that struggle and who as citizens are to-day striving to make this Government worth the cost of its preservation.

There must come a day when the increase of every person's pension will be impossible. There must be a limit beyond which is slavery for the labor of this country.

There are now in the neighborhood of 500,000 names on the pension-roll, and it is increasing at a rate near 3,000 per month, faster than at any previous time in our history.

We have expended during the past year nearly $100,000,000 for pensions, and, though the estimates submitted at this session of Congress are less than that amount, we all know that Mr. Tanner was right when he said it would take between $110,000,000 and $115,000,000 for the next fiscal year to meet the demands on the Pension Office. The $30,000,000 increase estimated by the late Commissioner will not go into the regular appropriation bills, because that might alarm the country, but it will come in in the deficiency bills next year, as the deficiency came over from the last fiscal year to this Congress.

If the gentlemen on the other side keep the promises made by them on the stump last fall to secure their present lease of power, they will have to devise new means of raising revenue. The pensions alone would absorb the $79,000,000 raised under existing laws, arrearages which you have promised would require $170,000,000, and the service pensions which you have promised would require $146,000,000 annually in addition to the $115,000,000 you are already obligated to pay annually.

The laboring man in this country is a patient man. He feels the burden, but he is slow to cast it off, because he is yet able to carry it and live. If you keep your campaign promises you will make the laboring man of this country forget what kind of a pensioner is on his back, and, in obedience to the great law of self preservation, he will think first of his wife and his children and himself, and he will refuse to bear it longer. Before the French revolution it was said that every citizen carried a soldier on his back; and you tread on dangerous grounds for the meritorious soldier and on dangerous grounds for the well-being of government and society when you so far forget the rights of the citizen who toils and earns the wealth of this country as to continue to increase the privileges and the bonuses of the classes at the expense of the masses.

It is all right to reward the soldier for his valor and patriotism by adhering to the wise policy of this Government heretofore established in dealing with its soldiers, but when you break down all precedents, override all laws, and forget the rights and the obligations of the Government to its laborers, who maintain its prosperity in peace and in war, you are sowing the seeds of communism, anarchy, and death to free institutions.

Mr. Speaker, I am here not to make a plea in anybody's interest except the interest of the people who have to labor and earn the money to pay the taxes out of which these pensions are taken. If the money is rightfully taken, I say all right; but if it has been stolen, if there have been jobbery and corruption, if there have been fraud and conspiracy, let the light of day be turned in on it, and let the men who have been concerned in it be consigned to eternal infamy.

The SPEAKER. The question is upon the adoption of the resolution of the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. MORRILL. Mr. Speaker, before the vote is taken, I think it due to the Committee on Invalid Pensions and to myself that I should make a simple statement.

Coming upon the floor of the House, as I did, after the gentleman from Tennessee had commenced his remarks, a copy of this resolution was placed in my hands. I want to say to you, Mr. Speaker, and to this House, that this is the first intimation I ever had that any such resolution was in existence. No member of the committee, to my knowledge, has ever known of the existence of this resolution. The chief clerk of the committee says it has never been presented to him. It has never been referred by him to the committee, and not a single man of us ever knew that such a resolution was in existence. If we had had knowledge of the resolution, it would have received very prompt attention.

This resolution purports on its face to have been introduced on the 20th of December, nearly three months ago. Almost daily since that time I have met the gentleman from Tennessee, and he never made the slightest reference to it. I have never seen his face inside the room of the Committee on Invalid Pensions. My attention has never been called to the resolution. We have had no opportunity to take up the subject in any shape whatever. It is entirely new to all of us. Not a member of the committee has known of the existence of the resolution or has called the attention of the committee to it.

Mr. ENLOE. Will the gentleman allow me to make a statement?

Mr. MORRILL. I am heartily in favor of the adoption of the resolution, and if the subject be left in our hands we will act upon it immediately.

Mr. ENLOE. Will the gentleman allow me to make a statement in reference to this matter?

Mr. MORRILL. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. ENLOE] has already occupied an hour "making a statement," battling a man of straw that he made and stuck up for his own amusement, and casting reflections upon the Committee on Invalid Pensions in regard to a matter as to which they were not at all to blame, for they had no knowledge of it.

Mr. ENLOE. The gentleman is now making a statement in reference to me in regard to which I might be able to set him right. Of course, if he does not wish to be set right, I do not care to say anything.

Mr. MORRILL. I yield for a moment to my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. YODER].

Mr. YODER. Mr. Speaker, I have attended, I believe, every meeting of the Committee on Invalid Pensions that has been held this session, and I have never before heard of this resolution. If it had been brought to the notice of the committee it would have received, as our chairman has said, prompt attention. I fully corroborate and indorse every word which he has uttered. This is all I desire to say.

Mr. MORRILL. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CHIPMAN].

Mr. CHIPMAN. In regard to this resolution I wish to say that I have no objection to an investigation of the official conduct of the late Commissioner of Pensions, Mr. Tanner, especially in regard to rating. I wish also to say that there were many things in the official career of the late Commissioner of which I most heartily approve. I approve of his opposition to microscopical pensions, the two and four dollar a month pensions, which are two small to relieve any considerable disability. I approve of his proposal that the oath of an enlisted man shall be regarded as entitled to as much dignity in the Pension Office as the oath of a commissioned officer. The discrimination against the private and in favor of the officer is unjust and wicked. I wish to say, too, that I have served on the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and that, so far as my knowledge is concerned, I approve most heartily of their course in the past, and that the legislation they now bring before the House is carefully and conscientiously considered; and I wish to emphasize another thing:

In the section of country from which I come there is no party on this subject. We are all of one mind. We are all determined to do justice to the soldiers who fought in our armies during the rebellion and defended the flag.

There is no difference of opinion on that subject there, and I will say to my friend from Tennessee that there will be no difference of action on the part of the Representatives of that section whenever questions of that character come before the House. We intend to fulfill our pledges to the veterans. We are not half-hearted. We are earnest about that, and I am glad to be able to say that there is no sectional feeling against a provision for the old soldiers on this side of the House. The veterans of the war are the wards of the nation. They must not want. We owe them not only a debt of gratitude, but we are pledged to do them justice, and will redeem the pledge.

Mr. McKINLEY. I hope, Mr. Speaker, that after the statement of the chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions [Mr. MORRILL], the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. ENLOE] will withdraw his motion and permit the committee to give some consideration to this resolution, which seems to be new to the committee. The chairman has already said that the committee will make a report promptly if the jurisdiction over the resolution should remain with them. It does seem to me the gentleman from Tennessee should withdraw his motion, and let the resolution remain with the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Mr. MORRILL. Does the gentleman desire to withdraw his motion?

Mr. SPINOLA. I will take the floor.

Mr. ENLOE. If the gentleman from New York wishes to proceed I will yield to him for that purpose.

Mr. SPINOLA. I ask the discussion shall be opened for a few minutes longer.

Mr. MORRILL. If the gentleman withdraws his motion to discharge the committee there is nothing further to discuss.

Mr. ENLOE. In view of the statement made by the chairman and other members of the committee, I will withdraw the motion and will make this statement: I do not wish to be put in the attitude of reflecting upon the chairman and members of the committee. It is true I did not approach the committee on the subject of the resolution, but I did go to the clerk of the committee and ask him who had the resolution in charge. He said nothing had been done in regard to it. As no notice was taken of it, if I expected a report at all, it was necessary I should do something further.

Mr. MORRILL. I understood you to say the resolution had never been put before the committee.

Mr. ENLOE. You heard my statement.

Mr. MORRILL. That ought to have satisfied you.

Mr. ENLOE. I do not desire to reflect on the committee.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee withdraws his motion.

Mr. SPINOLA. I ask leave to reoffer the resolution.

The SPEAKER. The resolution remains with the committee.

ADMISSION OF THE STATE OF WYOMING.

Mr. BAKER. I am directed by the Committee on Territories to report back House bill 982, providing for the admission of the State of Wyoming into the Union, and for other purposes, and to ask for its present consideration under clause 51, Rule XI. Under that clause the Committee on Territories is granted leave to report at any time bills for the admission of new States.

This bill was reported from the Committee on Territories and was ordered to be printed and recommitted. I now report it back under clause 51 of Rule XI, and ask for its present consideration.

I gave notice several days ago, Mr. Speaker, that I would bring this bill up for consideration, and, pursuant to that notice and under authority of the rule, I desire to ask the House to consider the bill for the admission of the State of Wyoming into the Union.

Mr. SPRINGER. I wish to say to the gentleman from New York that it was the understanding in the Committee on Territories that this matter was not to be called up until the Oklahoma bill was disposed of. I trust the gentleman will not put this side of the House in that position by calling up this bill. It comes in this morning as a complete surprise to me.

Mr. BAKER. I do not wish to antagonize the Oklahoma bill, but I had an understanding that the Oklahoma bill would not come up this morning. In the mean time we could take up and dispose of this bill for the admission of the State of Wyoming. It is not my intention to interfere with the Oklahoma bill.

Mr. SPRINGER. It is by the merest accident I happened to be on the floor. I met a gentleman who advised me five minutes ago, and until then I had heard nothing of this contemplated movement. I hope the gentleman will not insist on considering this bill now. It is unnecessary to read the bill at length unless we propose to enter upon its consideration. I therefore wish, with the permission of the House, to make a statement of a minute or two, so that some time in the future may be fixed for its consideration.

Mr. BAKER. Who has the floor?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks nobody has the floor. [Laughter.]

Mr. BAKER. I have reported this bill from the Committee on Territories, and we are ready to proceed with it in good faith. I had a conference with the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. PERKINS] who is in charge of the Oklahoma bill.

Mr. SPINOLA. If nobody has the floor I will take it.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the bill.

Mr. SPRINGER. I ask, by unanimous consent, to make a statement not to exceed two minutes in length.

Mr. BAKER. I think we should proceed in the regular way.

Mr. SPRINGER. I wish to inform my friend it will facilitate business. It is unfair, and I have not experienced anything like it since I have been a member of this body.

Mr. BAKER. How much time does the gentleman ask in which to make his statement?

Mr. SPRINGER. I have already stated it.

Mr. CUMMINGS. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will proceed with the reading of the bill. The bill was read.

Mr. BAKER. If no gentleman desires to have the report read at length—

Mr. SPRINGER. I raise the question of consideration against this bill.

I make the further point, Mr. Speaker, that this bill must be considered in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can not raise the last point after having raised the first.

Mr. CARLISLE. But, Mr. Speaker, I understand the gentleman from Illinois has raised the question of consideration.

The SPEAKER. That is the question now before the House.

Mr. CARLISLE. Of course he could not make both questions at the same time; but I submit to the Chair that after the House has determined, if it should determine, to enter upon the consideration of the bill, and before it has actually commenced its consideration, the point could be made that it should have its first consideration in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER. That is a point to be determined when it shall arise.

Mr. CARLISLE. Because, if the contrary opinion was held, there would be no time when a member could raise the question of consideration against a bill, unless he waived the right to have it considered in a Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, if it was subject to the point of order. So it has always been in order to raise this question that it shall have its first consideration in a Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union at any time before the House has actually entered upon the consideration of the bill.

The SPEAKER. That is of course a question to be determined after the disposition of the other question.

Mr. CARLISLE. Certainly; but I was only anxious that the Chair might not decide so important a point in this manner.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has not undertaken to do so.

Mr. HOLMAN. If the Chair will permit me, the Chair holds, as I understand it, that the gentleman can not raise two questions at one and the same time. But another member could reserve the right to make the point of order that the bill should be considered in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois having raised the question of consideration, that is first to be determined.

The question was taken; and upon a division there were—ayes 70, noes 79.

Mr. BAKER. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 122, nays 116, not voting 91; as follows:

Wise,

So the House determined to consider the bill.

Mr. MORSE. I desire to state that I am paired with the gentleman from Kentucky, Mr. GOODNIGHT.

The following additional pairs were announced:

Mr. HITT with Mr. HEARD, for the remainder of the day.

Mr. PUGSLEY with Mr. MORGAN, for the rest of the day.

Mr. DARLINGTON with Mr. BLAND, for the rest of the day.

Mr. LODGE with Mr. HERBERT, for the rest of the day.

Mr. WILSON, of Washington, with Mr. CLUNIE, for the rest of the day.

Mr. DE LANO with Mr. BULLOCK, for the rest of the day.

Mr. HARMER with Mr. HATCH, for the rest of the day.

Mr. MCKINLEY with Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas, for the remainder of the day.

Mr. DINGLEY with Mr. MANSUR, on this vote.

Mr. GIFFORD. I am paired with the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. SKINNER]. If present, he would vote "no" and I would vote "ay."

Mr. GEAR. I am paired with Mr. STOCKDALE. I would vote "ay;" he would vote "no."

Mr. MORGAN. I am paired with Mr. PUGSLEY, and would vote "no;" he would vote "ay."

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. SPRINGER. I make the point of order that this bill must have its first consideration in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. BAKER. I move that the House resolve itself—

The SPEAKER. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. BAKER. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the consideration of this bill.

Mr. SPRINGER. Pending that motion I move that the House do now adjourn.

The question was taken.

Before the result of the vote was announced, Mr. SPRINGER demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 116, nays 122, not voting 91; as follows:

So the House refused to adjourn.

The following additional pairs were announced on this vote:

Mr. ROCKWELL with Mr. LAWLER.

Mr. KETCHAM with Mr. CATCHINGS.

The vote was recapitulated.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. The question is upon the motion of the gentleman from New York, that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. SPRINGER. Upon that I rise to a question of order. Under clause 4 of Rule XXIII it is provided that—

In Committees of the Whole House business on their Calendars may be taken up in regular order, or in such order as the committee may determine, unless the bill to be considered was determined by the House at the time of going into committee; but bills for raising revenue, general appropriation bills, and bills for the improvement of rivers and harbors shall have precedence.

What I desire to ask is whether that precedence must be insisted on before going into Committee of the Whole or after? If before, I desire to make the point now.

Mr. HOOKER. I can not hear what the gentleman says.

Mr. SPRINGER. I am not responsible for that.

The SPEAKER. The Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. SPRINGER. I did not make a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman says he did not make a point of order, and the question is on the motion of the gentleman from New York.

Mr. SPRINGER. I rose to a parliamentary inquiry.

The question was put, and the Speaker announced that the "ayes" seemed to have it.

Mr. SPRINGER. Division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 100, noes 91.

Mr. SPRINGER. I demand tellers.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 116, nays 108, not voting 105; as follows:

So the motion to go into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union was agreed to.

Before the vote was announced,

Mr. WHEELER, of Alabama, said: Mr. Speaker, I would like to vote.

The SPEAKER. The chair is not allowed to entertain a motion to record a vote.

The following additional pairs were announced:

Mr. BOOTHMAN with Mr. YODER, on all questions, for the rest of this day.

Mr. BREWER with Mr. LEE, on all political questions, for the rest of the day.

On this vote:

Mr. DALZELL with Mr. MAISH.

Mr. GREENHALGE with Mr. CRISP.

Mr. COMSTOCK with Mr. O'FERRALL.

Mr. BERGEN with Mr. VENABLE.

For the rest of the day:

Mr. KETCHAM with Mr. KEER, of Pennsylvania.

Mr. WILSON, of Washington, with Mr. CLUNIE.

Mr. BAKER. I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the recapitulation of the vote.

Mr. SPRINGER. I object.

The vote was recapitulated.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. McCook, its Secretary, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the bill (H. R. 5682) to amend an act entitled "An act to constitute Columbus, Ohio, a port of delivery, and to extend the provisions of the act of June 10, 1880, entitled 'An act to amend the statutes in relation to immediate transportation of dutiable goods, and for other purposes,' to said port of Columbus, Ohio," approved February 9, 1889.

ADMISSION OF WYOMING.

The House then resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union (Mr. BURROWS in the chair).

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering the bill the title of which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 982) to provide for the admission of the State of Wyoming into the Union and for other purposes.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. Chairman—

Mr. SPRINGER. I demand the reading of the bill before we consider it.

The bill was read.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. Chairman, it is not my purpose to enter into a formal discussion of this bill at any great length to-night; but I think I ought to make one or two observations in regard to the intimation of my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER], that some degree of bad faith has been practiced in forcing this bill to consideration now.

It ought to be understood the Committee on Territories ordered this bill reported favorably without a dissenting voice. Instruction was given to me to move it at the first opportunity. A week or ten days ago it was reported to the House, ordered to be printed, and recommit- ted. Immediately after it was printed I gave notice in the House, as the RECORD will show, that on to-day I should move the bill unless it should interfere with the Oklahoma bill. Advised by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. PERKINS], who had charge of that bill, that it would not be moved, the way was clear for the moving of this bill. Now I regret exceedingly, Mr. Chairman, that my good friend from Illinois should show any feeling about this matter. The bill for the admission of Wyoming has had most careful consideration in the Committee on Territories. It was carefully perfected, the report prepared was adopted without a dissenting voice by our Committee on Territories, and I think it is unfair for my friend from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] to impute to the committee, or any member of it, bad faith. This bill is before the House for consideration. It has been the desire of the Delegate from Wyoming [Mr. DUBOIS] to have it forwarded as rapidly as could be consistent with good management and with the proper conduct of legislative business here.

The duty has been assigned to me to move this bill at the earliest opportunity. Notice was given to every man in the House, and every member upon this floor has at his command a copy of the report and of the bill as recommended here. No; the real truth of the matter is—and we may as well understand it—that the purpose of my friend from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER]—perhaps he can justify himself in it—is to so delay this bill and so delay the Idaho bill that he may attach to them and bring before this House an "omnibus" bill. Omnibus bills are a specialty with my friend from Illinois. He spent the better part of last Congress and the Congress before in building up, or attempting to build up, an omnibus bill that should bring in at one sweep several States besides those that did come in. As a matter of necessity, we yielded to his determination to have an omnibus bill, in order that justice might be done to the two Dakotas, Montana, and Washington; but now I believe the policy of Congress is to let each State stand upon its own merits.

Wyoming has been reported favorably; Idaho has; we shall soon come to the consideration of New Mexico, and I believe there is a disposition in the committee and in this House to give New Mexico the fullest and fairest consideration. I am strongly inclined to the opinion that New Mexico should be admitted as speedily as possible. Arizona is proposing to ask for an enabling act. Arizona should have the fairest consideration. I know there is no disposition on the part of any member of the committee to obstruct or delay the consideration of any of these bills, and there ought to be no disposition on the part of my friend from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] or on the part of any other member of the House to obstruct or delay the prompt consideration of the bill for the admission of Wyoming.

Mr. BUCKALEW. What about Utah? [Laughter.]

Mr. BAKER. Now, Mr. Chairman, the hour of 5 o'clock has passed and I do not care to detain the committee this evening. Therefore, in order that the bill may have consideration by a full House and in order to give everybody an opportunity to be fully heard, without yielding the floor to any other gentleman I will now move that the committee rise.

Mr. SPRINGER. I think the gentleman ought to yield to me to make an explanation.

Mr. BAKER. My good friend from Illinois shall have abundant opportunity later on. I move that the committee rise.

Mr. SPRINGER. I ask this House to do me the justice to give me an opportunity to make an explanation.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is not in order.

Mr. SPRINGER. I ask unanimous consent. [To Mr. BAKER.] You think you are facilitating this bill, but I tell you you are not.

Mr. BAKER. Wait a moment. Mr. Chairman, if my friend from Illinois wants to make any statement in regard to the matter of good faith I hope he will be permitted to do it.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York withdraw his motion?

Mr. BAKER. For the present.

Mr. SPRINGER. I desire to make a statement.

Mr. BAKER. I will give the gentleman five minutes of my time.

Mr. SPRINGER. I can not accept any limitation. I want to make a statement in my own way. It was understood in the Committee on Territories that this bill was not to be called up for consideration until the Oklahoma bill was disposed of. The gentleman [Mr. BAKER] so stated this morning when he called up this bill. I understood that that agreement was still subsisting, and, knowing that it was subsisting, I had arranged a pair and had left the Hall to be engaged on another committee of this House during the rest of the afternoon, when I accidentally met a member of the Committee on Territories in the corridor below, who informed me that this bill was to come up. I was never more surprised at any statement in my life. I did not believe it was true, but I came up into the House and found that it was true. I went to the desk of the gentleman [Mr. BAKER] after this bill had been called up and asked him if he did not remember the agreement we had made. He said he did, but that he had been to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. PERKINS] and had asked him whether he was going to call up the Oklahoma bill and that gentleman had said he was not, whereupon he [Mr. BAKER] had concluded to call up this bill.

I stated to him that the agreement not to take up this bill was made, not with the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. PERKINS], but with me and the minority of the committee, and that the minority was not to be closed out upon this proposition by any agreement made between members of the majority. But, Mr. Chairman, when I called upon the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. PERKINS] he informed me that he was as much surprised as I was when this bill was called up; that he had only stated to the gentleman from New York that the Speaker desired to recognize some other gentleman for other business this afternoon, and that nothing was said to him about the Wyoming bill.

Another reason for my surprise at this action was that this bill was reported to the House by the Committee on Territories and ordered to be printed and recommit- ted, and since that time that committee has never, in my presence, made any order to re-report the bill. If the committee has made any such order I was not present and it was without my knowledge, so that I was not even expecting the bill to be re-reported. Every gentleman here understands, of course, that when a bill is ordered to be printed and recommit- ted to a committee, it can not be re-reported without an order by that committee. It will be seen, therefore, that I was totally taken by surprise.

Now, all that I ask of the House and of this committee is that a reasonable time be given to the minority to prepare some amendments and also to prepare a statement of views with regard to the admission of this Territory, to be printed with the report of the committee. That is all I ask. It was understood that I was to have that, and if I had not been so preoccupied with business upon other committees—I can assure gentlemen that I have not wasted any time during the past month—if I had not been so preoccupied with other business I might be ready now. As it is, however, I am not ready to present the views of the minority or to submit the amendments which I desire to submit.

There is another reason why I was surprised at this action. The chairman of our committee, the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. STRUBLE], has been absent for nearly ten days on important business, and when he left he requested that the committee should not consider the bill for the admission of New Mexico until he returned. In deference to his wishes we have laid aside the bill for the admission of New Mexico, so that it is not on the Calendar. I had desired, in justice to these Territories, to have the bills taken up in consecutive order and considered from day to day until they were disposed of, and that no one of them should be taken up until they were all on the Calendar for consideration.

To that end I proposed to the gentleman from New York [Mr. BAKER] that two weeks from to-day should be set apart for the consideration first of this bill, then of the Idaho bill, then of the New Mexico bill, and then of the bill for Arizona, and that we should proceed to consider each of those four bills separately, as he has suggested, until they were finally disposed of, and I stated that with such an understanding I would not at that time offer any amendment or make any motion that was not made in good faith for the purpose of facilitating a fair and honorable consideration of these great measures. I asked that of the gentleman from New York and he declined to grant it. I submit that it was a fair request, and that when we do reach this bill we ought to reach it with a determination to consider fairly, not only this case, but each one of the cases of the four great Territories that are now asking to be admitted into the Union.

Mr. BAKER. A word in reply, Mr. Chairman, before I renew the motion that the committee rise.

I want to read the notice which was given in this House on the 5th day of March and published in the RECORD of March 6. I then stated:

I desire to give notice that on Tuesday morning next I shall call up the bill for the admission of Wyoming, reporting it from the Committee on the Territories, unless it shall interfere with the Oklahoma bill.

Now, my friend from Illinois makes the point that the bill was not ordered by the committee to be re-reported. When the bill was originally ordered reported it was distinctly understood and stated that it should be reported for the purpose of being printed and recommitted, so as to have it in shape in printed form for introduction under the provisions of clause 51 of Rule XI, in order that it might be placed in the hands of members of this House and that they should understand its provisions. The arrangement to which my friend alludes that this bill should not be moved until the Oklahoma bill was disposed of is all nonsense.

Mr. SPRINGER. Do not say that; I can prove that arrangement by every member of the committee.

Mr. BAKER. Wait a moment—

Mr. McMILLIN. Will the gentleman from New York [Mr. BAKER] allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. BAKER. With pleasure.

Mr. McMILLIN. The gentleman from Illinois has stated that there was no order made to report this bill at any time when he was present after it had been reported to the House the first time; that is, after the recommitment. Now, what I want to know from the gentleman from New York is whether there was in fact any order made by the committee, after the bill was recommitted, to report it to this House. If not, I submit to him that the bill is now improperly here.

Mr. BAKER. I answer my friend with pleasure. When the bill was ordered reported by the committee it was the understanding and instruction that it should be reported for printing and recommitment, in order that we might have it in printed form—

Mr. McMILLIN. I understand that.

Mr. BAKER. And, further than that, the instruction was given that I should move it at the earliest opportunity.

Mr. McMILLIN. But I submit to the gentleman from New York and the Chair that this measure is in an extraordinary position; that when the House recommit a bill to a committee, the committee can not get rid of it by reason of any precedent action.

Mr. BAKER. But the instruction of the committee was—and it was well understood—that the bill should be moved at the earliest opportunity, re-reported.

Mr. McMILLIN. But the point to which I wish to call my friend's attention is that the House had taken action in regard to this bill, had ordered that the bill should go back to the committee; and that in order for the committee to get rid of it there must be subsequent action by the committee upon the bill.

Mr. BAKER. Now, then, it is a nice time for my friends on the other side to raise this point, when for a week the notice has been upon the pages of the RECORD that this bill would be moved. It was understood of all men that the bill was in order for consideration. It was the understanding of the Committee on Territories; it was their direction; and there was not a dissenting voice in the committee in regard to the reporting of this bill and its consideration at this time.

Mr. Chairman, I now renew the motion that the committee rise.

Mr. MANSUR. I would like to ask the gentleman from New York a question before he takes his seat.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from New York that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. BURROWS reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 982) to provide for the admission of the State of Wyoming into the Union, and for other purposes, had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. BAKER. I move that the House adjourn.

Pending the motion to adjourn, the following business was transacted, by unanimous consent:

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. KENNEDY, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (S. 306) for the erection of a public building in the city of Lansing, in the State of Michigan;

A bill (S. 801) granting a pension to Miss Elizabeth A. Tuttle;

A bill (S. 806) granting a pension to Cyrus Tuttle;

A bill (S. 807) granting a pension to Mary E. Noll, widow of Philip Noll;

A bill (S. 810) granting a pension to Eliza A. Talbott;

A bill (S. 813) granting a pension to Stephen Schiedel;

A bill (S. 1272) to increase the limit of cost of the public building authorized by act of Congress approved June 30, 1886, to be erected at El Paso, Tex.; and

A bill (S. 2994) to authorize the construction of a bridge over the Arkansas River, in the Indian Territory.

CHANGES OF REFERENCE.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to submit certain changes of reference suggested by the Committee on Appropriations.

There being no objection, changes of reference were made as follows:

House Executive Document No. 243, letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, recommending an increase of the limit of cost of site and building for post-office, custom-house, etc., at Charleston, S. C., from $300,000 to $350,000—Committee on Appropriations discharged, and document referred to Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Petition of Massachusetts Board of Gas and Electric Light Commissioners, for the collection of certain data relative to the electrical industry—Committee on Appropriations discharged, and petition referred to Select Committee on the Eleventh Census.

Memorial of South Dakota for 5 per cent. of the proceeds of all sales of public lands within the present boundaries of the State from June 30, 1880, to the date of admission of said State—Committee on Appropriations discharged, and memorial referred to the Committee on the Public Lands.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. STIVERS, until Saturday next.

To Mr. FRANK, for fifteen days, on account of pressing business.

Mr. MILLS. I move to adjourn.

The SPEAKER. That motion is pending. Does the gentleman call for the regular order?

Mr. MILLS. I do.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 25 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

EXECUTIVE AND OTHER COMMUNICATIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

COLLECTING REVENUE FROM CUSTOMS.

Letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, recommending that the permanent annual appropriation for expenses of collecting the revenue from customs be increased in the sum of $2,000,000, and the receipts from fines, penalties, etc., be covered into the general Treasury—to the Committee on Appropriations.

WATER WAY FROM LAKE MICHIGAN TO THE ILLINOIS RIVER.

Letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a letter from the Chief of Engineers, with a copy of a report from an officer of the Corps of Engineers upon the survey of a water way from Lake Michigan to the Illinois River, at La Salle, Ill.—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

SALARIES OF OFFICERS IN INDIAN OFFICE.

Letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a communication from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, urging an increase of the salaries of the Commissioner and Assistant Commissioner of Indian Affairs and the financial clerk of the Indian Office, and inclosing a bill to effect these objects—to the Committee on Expenditures in the Interior Department.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, the following reports were filed, and, with accompanying bills, ordered to be printed, and referred as follows:

SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, March 12, 1890.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills, received yesterday from the House of Representatives, were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds:

A bill (H. R. 188) for the erection of a public building at Columbus, Ga.;

A bill (H. R. 417) for the erection of a public building at Houlton, Me.;

A bill (H. R. 401) to provide for the construction of a public building at the city of Alexandria, State of Louisiana;

A bill (H. R. 448) for the erection of a public building at Lynn, Mass.;

A bill (H. R. 516) to extend the limits for the erection of a public building at Springfield, Mo.;

A bill (H. R. 533) for the erection of a public building at Fremont, Nebr.;

A bill (H. R. 605) to increase the appropriation for the erection of a public building at Troy, N. Y.;

A bill (H. R. 848) to authorize the construction of an addition to the public building in Dallas, Tex.; and

A bill (H. R. 3331) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the purchase of a site and the erection of a suitable building for a post-office and other Government offices in the city of Scranton, Pa.," approved July 27, 1882.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The following bills of the Senate having passed the House of Representatives with amendments will be reported by their titles and referred with the amendments of the House of Representatives to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (S. 903) for the erection of a public building in Cedar Rapids, Iowa.

Mr. ALLISON. As the amendments of the House of Representatives to that bill probably will not be disagreed to by the Senate, I ask that the bill and amendments may lie on the table for the present.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, this bill and all the Senate bills on the subject of public buildings amended by the House of Representatives will lie upon the table for the present.

The remaining bills were, with the amendments of the House of Representatives, ordered to lie on the table, as follows:

A bill (S. 859) for the erection of a public building at Chester, Pa.;

A bill (S. 2406) to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building thereon at Atchison, in the State of Kansas; and

A bill (S. 606) to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building thereon at La Fayette, in the State of Indiana.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT NEWARK, N. J.

The bill (H. R. 7156) to provide for the increase of the limit of cost of site and public building at Newark, N. J., was read twice by its title and ordered to lie on the table.

INTRODUCTION OF CONTAGIOUS DISEASES.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a message of the House of Representatives requesting the return to that body of the bill (S. 140) to prevent the introduction of contagious diseases from one State to another and for the punishment of certain offenses. If there be no objection, the bill will be returned to the House of Representatives in accordance with its request.

COMMITTEES ON IMMIGRATION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a concurrent resolution of the Senate amended by the House of Representatives. It was previously laid before the Senate with the amendment of the House of Representatives, and was laid over at the request of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS]. The resolution will first be read as it passed the Senate.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution passed by the Senate January 23, 1890, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Senate Committee on Immigration and the House Committee on Immigration and Naturalization be, and hereby are, authorized jointly to investigate the workings of the various laws of the United States and of the several States relative to immigration from foreign countries to the United States, especially the law of Congress "to regulate immigration," approved August 3, 1882, and also to investigate the workings of the contracts made by the Secretary of the Treasury under said law of August 3 with the various State commissions, boards, and officers, the investigation to be conducted at such times and places as said committees may deem proper. And the committees are hereby authorized jointly, as full committees or through subcommittees thereof, to send for and examine persons, books, and papers, and to administer oaths to witnesses.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment of the House of Representatives will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. Amend by adding, after the word "officers," in line 10:

And also to investigate the effect on immigration, and incidentally on American workmen, which is likely to follow the purchase of American industries by foreign capital, and also to report to Congress the official correspondence in the proposal to make Bedloe's (Liberty) Island, in the harbor of New York, an immigrant depot, what title the Government has to such island, what buildings, if any, are intended to be built on said island, and what officers and employes it is designed to employ thereon in connection with such immigration, and whether in the opinion of the committee, after investigation, such island is the best and most suitable place for such immigrant depot.

Mr. EDMUNDS. After this matter was laid over yesterday, I thought it to be a duty to communicate with the Secretary of the Treasury and ask his views upon the subject, which I did. I received a reply this morning and as a part of the history of the operation I ask that the dispatch from the Secretary of the Treasury may be read, after which I understand the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER] proposes to non-concur and ask for a conference.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The communication will be read. The Secretary read as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, March 12, 1890.

To Hon. GEORGE F. EDMUNDS:

In reply to your telegram regarding the effect of the proposed amendment to the Senate concurrent resolution providing for inquiry into the question of the removal of the immigrant station from Castle Garden, I desire to say that after careful inquiry and personal investigation I am of the opinion that the removal of the immigrant station from its present environment is essential to the good administration of the immigration laws, and that Bedloe's Island is the best obtainable place for such depot. The right to use Castle Garden will expire on the 18th of April, and it is therefore necessary that steps be taken at once to provide for reception of immigrants. I deem it my duty under existing statutes to proceed to make this preparation without delay. I do not construe the proposed amendment as an expression of Congress that there should be any interruption of said preparations. If I am mistaken in this construction, I hope that the amendment may be so amended as to plainly indicate the will of Congress on that point, and thereby relieve the Department from the responsibility now imposed by law. In this connection, I desire to add that there is no objection on the part of the Department to the proposed investigation.

WM. WINDOM.

Mr. CHANDLER. I move that the Senate non-concur in the House amendment to the concurrent resolution of the Senate and insist on its first resolution, and ask for a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses.

Mr. MCPHERSON. Mr. President, I am somewhat surprised at the motion made by the Senator from New Hampshire. From the reading of the dispatch of the Secretary of the Treasury it is plainly evident that the Secretary intends to proceed to take possession of Bedloe's Island, or what is now called Liberty Island, and upon that island to erect all kinds of structures, barracks, or whatever they may be, together with docks and piers along the shore of the island to accommodate the business of the immigration department. Now, it seems to me as though that is an unwarrantable proceeding.

It will be remembered that when the statue of Liberty was given to the people of this country by a distinguished citizen of France, it remained on the other side of the ocean for years before the Government of the United States had even prepared a site or a foundation upon which to erect the monument. To our everlasting disgrace, if I may say it, also, it remained for the efforts of a great metropolitan journal in the city of New York, the New York World, to appeal to the country for private subscriptions with which to erect a foundation for the monument. What was the result? A sufficient amount of money was contributed, the site was selected, the foundation was built, the pedestal was erected, and thereupon the monument was received from the other side of the ocean and erected upon Liberty Island. Every dollar of money as I understand—and believe it to have been assumed by the contributors to this fund—and every dollar of money paid in for the purpose of assisting in the erection of the pedestal and the foundation, was upon the pledge, either expressed or implied, that Bedloe's Island should never be used for any other purpose; that is, for any purpose of a commercial character, at least.

Now it is proposed to make it an immigrant station. It is proposed to destroy the symmetry and the character of the island, one of the most beautiful spots in the harbor of New York, and upon one side of the island to erect barracks for immigration purposes.

Mr. President, there is another view to take of this case which I want to speak of here and now. A bill is now pending before the Committee on Naval Affairs of this body, based upon petitions of the Board of Trade and Chamber of Commerce of New York, the Board of Trade and Chamber of Commerce of Jersey City, and petitions signed by hundreds of citizens of both cities, also by the commissioners of navigation in the city of New York, who have made the waters in and about Ellis Island a place for anchorage. Hundreds of vessels are daily anchored about Bedloe's Island and Ellis Island. The Government has made Ellis Island, distant only a few hundred feet from Bedloe's Island, a naval magazine, where tons of powder are continually stored. The request of the Boards of Trade and Chambers of Commerce is that the Government shall provide a powder magazine other than on Ellis Island, and a bill, as I say, is now pending before the Committee on Naval Affairs, awaiting some action by the Secretary of the Navy, providing that it shall be discontinued as a naval magazine.

Ellis Island will make a most excellent place for an immigrant station. It is much larger in area than the present grounds occupied at Castle Garden, in New York, for immigrant purposes. It can be made just as large as is necessary, because of the fact that the waters are very shallow about the island, and it may be increased to any extent by putting up walls of masonry on the outer side, although there is sufficient space already for the immigrant business.

It seems to me as though the proper course to adopt would be not to occupy Bedloe's Island, or what is now popularly called Liberty Island, with any of these unsightly structures. I hardly think the Senator from New York [Mr. EVARTS], who had so much to do with the obtaining of the site and its preparation and also in the erection of the monument there, would consent to have the island defaced or used for any purpose other than the purpose for which it is now used.

The people of New York and the people of New Jersey, since it became known that it was the intention of the Secretary of the Treasury to prepare Bedloe's Island for this purpose, have sent in a most earnest protest. It is not limited alone to New York and New Jersey. The protests have come from all sections of the country.

Therefore it is that I think the amendment of the House of Representatives should be agreed upon now by the Senate, in order that the Committees on Immigration may take full action in the matter, and immediate action, to enable the Secretary of the Treasury as well to fit out a place, and a suitable place, for the immigrant business for the city. I think that Ellis Island is a proper place to locate it, for certainly the Government must remove its powder magazine from that island, as it is only a few thousand feet from the New Jersey shore and a densely populated district, with, as I said before, hundreds of vessels located in and about those islands lying at anchorage. The vessels of course are required to anchor at some point outside of the main channel, and this is one of the points selected by the Bureau of Navigation where vessels may anchor. There is too much danger in allowing that powder magazine to remain there longer.

If I understand the motion of the Senator from New Hampshire, it is to non-concur in the House amendment and to ask for a committee of conference. Am I correct in the motion?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator is correct.

Mr. MCPHERSON. It seems to me as though that is going to delay this matter unnecessarily and prevent the Secretary of the Treasury from understanding that there may be another and a better site selected than the one he proposes, and one in which the people will feel an interest, first, in getting rid of the powder magazine; and, secondly, it is an island to which no objection will be made for immigrant purposes or for any purpose other than a powder station.

Mr. EVARTS. Mr. President, the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MCPHERSON] is quite right in thinking that I look with no complacency upon the movement of the Government to use Bedloe's Island as a depot for immigrants, after it has been consecrated to the statue of Liberty and the pedestal there erected upon the action of this Government. There was prepared the foundation for the gift, and its reception by a selection at leisure by this Government of the proper portion of New York Bay that would be appropriate to this great object.

Governor's Island was regarded, the other islands were regarded, and this island was selected as one that could be given by this Government without any injury to the public service, to this munificent gift, and the liberality of our citizens at home provided for the structure that was to receive it. It is a great international monument. It is on an island accessible in fair weather for hundreds and thousands of visitors, and if the grounds were put in order, as they ought to have been by this Government long ago, it would have been one of the most attractive resorts for the citizens and visitors of our great capital through the whole summer season and through some portion of the winter.

Now suddenly a movement is made, after such consultations as may have been directed to the mere convenience, irrespective of this suggestion, that has fastened upon Bedloe's Island as the place that should be adopted as an immigrant depot. I need not say that what remonstrance I could make on the subject I have made.

It is a very serious thing to take from the island of Manhattan itself this depot and transfer it 2 miles distant, in the midst of the waters of the bay. Those that are interested in particular forms of communication and transportation of immigrants may be able to accommodate themselves to this new depot, but those that are to be brought up to the city or otherwise are to be distributed in the neighborhood will find that this is a burden and inconvenience, and in storms and disaster it may be more serious than is now in advance imagined.

But I do not rise here to debate this question, which does not seem to be before the body. It is quite true that the date of a new contract or the rejection or refusal to continue it may terminate on the 18th of April, unless by consent some extension of that opportunity may be given.

I rise only to suggest to the Senator from New Hampshire that the shortest and easiest way to have this question disposed of satisfactorily to the Secretary of the Treasury is to leave this resolution as it now stands, to agree to the amendment of the House of Representatives, and have this made the first and principal thing, and prompt attention given to it. Otherwise, if in conference it is finally struck out and the House should agree that this business shall not be retarded by the insertion of this question of Bedloe's Island, immediately in the House, as I imagine, a committee will be raised or a resolution will be offered for a separate examination to look into this question.

Then certainly it will be a pending inquiry that the Secretary of the Treasury, the executive government, may well regard as requiring some attention before this plan so important shall be consummated. I therefore would suggest to the Senator from New Hampshire that the way to have a prompt disposition of this question prior to the 18th of April, and in time for the Secretary to know what the intention of Congress is, will be to leave this resolution as it comes up from the House of Representatives and proceed to agree to the House amendment and have the committee set at work.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, with due respect to the Senator from New York and the Senator from New Jersey, I suggest that the speediest way of disposing of this question will be by non-concurrence and a committee of conference. I was myself willing yesterday to agree to the amendment of the House, but this morning it is suggested by other Senators that there is an objection to the language of the House amendment, that it implies some hindrance or delay or embarrassment to the Secretary of the Treasury; and in deference to their judgment and in order to prevent what is inadvisable, a debate on the merits of the question here in the Senate now, I have concluded to move a non-concurrence and a request for a committee of conference.

I think that there will be speedy action both in the House and in the Senate, and that this investigation may commence within a day or two, and that the object which the Senator from New Jersey seeks to promote, and which the Senator from New York seeks to attain, will be reached easier by the motion which I have made than by a motion to concur.

Mr. McPHERSON. Mr. President—

Mr. HOAR. I hope if this question is to be debated it will go over until some later day. The morning business ought to proceed. I do not think it has ever been the custom of the Senate—though I do not raise any parliamentary objection—to take up important and debatable questions that come from the other House by amendment or otherwise, to the exclusion of the morning business to which this time is specially assigned. I suppose it will meet the views of the Senator from New Jersey to have the matter go over, will it not?

Mr. McPHERSON. I should like to have the resolution passed calling for the investigation. The Secretary of the Treasury has but thirty days' time in which to investigate. The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER] now proposes to ask for a committee of conference. The committee of conference is not an investigating committee. If it be the purpose of the executive department to occupy Bedloe's Island for immigration purposes notwithstanding Congress may be opposed to it and the people opposed to it, then I am content that the responsibility should rest where it belongs. Certainly, if this resolution were passed, the committee could proceed immediately to investigate, and, further than that, could proceed to cast some further light upon the question. If it can be arranged between the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy, through the influence and aid of the committee, to transfer the immigration business to Ellis Island instead of Bedloe's Island, it certainly will be much the quicker way of arriving at it, for a committee of conference can make no investigation. If you want to stop the investigation altogether, the way to do is to call for a committee of conference.

Mr. CHANDLER. A committee of conference will expedite the investigation in this way: There is now a difference of opinion between Senators on the language of this House amendment. That difference may be adjusted in conference between the committees of the two Houses, and the object in moving non-concurrence is not to delay investigation but to enable it to go forward at once.

Mr. McPHERSON. I suggest to the Senator that as I understand the Committee on Immigration have a meeting to-morrow morning, why not refer the resolution with the amendment to the committee and let them investigate it and report something back to the Senate?

That is arriving at it as quickly as can be; and certainly, perhaps to-morrow morning even, the attention of the Secretaries of the Treasury and of the Navy may be called to the fact that another island may be used instead of Bedloe's Island.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment of the House of Representatives having been read, the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER] moves that the amendment be disagreed to by the Senate and a conference be requested. Is the Senate ready for the question?

Mr. McPHERSON. On that question I call for the yeas and nays. The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. GEORGE. I should like to have the proposition upon which we are to vote read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution of the Senate will be again read, and the proposed amendment of the House of Representatives will be also again read.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution of the Senate and the amendment of the House of Representatives.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Hampshire moves that the amendment be disagreed to by the Senate and that a conference be requested with the House of Representatives thereon.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President, this matter was discussed somewhat before the Committee on Naval Affairs this morning, and those of us who have not had an opportunity of investigating it, as have the Senator from New York, the Senator from New Jersey, and the Senator from New Hampshire, are not quite prepared to vote upon the proposition as it comes from the Senator from New Hampshire. I should be very glad if the Senator from New Hampshire would state—for I did not have the opportunity of hearing his statement—the object he has in non-concurring in that resolution, for it seems to me, as the Senator from New Jersey has suggested, that he accomplishes his object very much earlier by agreeing to the House amendment and allowing this investigation to go on at once. I do not see what is to be accomplished by non-concurrence in the amendment of the House. It seems to me it is an urgent matter.

Mr. HOAR. I would suggest to the honorable Senator from South Carolina, if he will permit me, to ask that this subject may go over till to-morrow morning, and the amendment be printed.

Mr. BUTLER. I think that is a good suggestion.

Mr. CHANDLER. I am willing to concur in the amendment as it stands. I made the motion to non-concur in deference to the judgment of others; but, if it will suit the Senator from New Jersey and the Senator from South Carolina, I will withdraw the motion and move to concur.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The yeas and nays having been ordered, is there objection to the motion being withdrawn?

Mr. McPHERSON. I will withdraw the request for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the Senator from New Hampshire withdrawing his motion? The Chair hears none.

Mr. McPHERSON. Then the question recurs on concurring in the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on concurring in the amendment of the House of Representatives.

The amendment was concurred in.

REVISION OF REMARKS.

Mr. HOAR. I now desire to call up as a question of privilege the resolution which comes over from yesterday.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The morning business has not yet been called.

Mr. HOAR. Then I give notice that I shall call it up at the close of the morning business.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, presented resolutions adopted by the Twenty-third General Assembly of Iowa; which were referred to the Committee on Railroads, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Whereas reliable statistics show that thousands of our young men are killed and many thousands more are crippled for life in this nation in coupling and uncoupling cars and from being on top of freight trains to handle brakes; and

Whereas the National Car-Builders' Association (an organization of mechanics in the employ of railroad companies charged with the responsibility of car-building and representing in the said association about 90 per cent. of the railroads of the nation) did, after years of earnest investigation and tests, at their twenty-fifth annual convention, held in Minneapolis, Minn., June, 1887, adopt, by over a two-thirds majority vote, an automatic safety car-coupler of the vertical plane hook type, as the standard automatic coupler for general and uniform use upon cars in the nation; and

Whereas the managers of the railroads represented in that association of National Master Car-Builders did, after ninety days of consideration, approve the action of the Master Car-Builders by over a two-thirds majority vote, thus making what was named by the executive committee of said Master Car-Builders' Association the M. C. B. coupler, meaning the Master Car-Builders' Coupler, the standard car coupler for cars on their own motion; and

Whereas said executive committee, under instructions from the association, did make specification and draught contour lines of said couplers and publish them to the world, stating that any automatic vertical plane coupler that would couple automatically with the M. C. B. coupler and also couple readily by hand to the common draw-bar, with the link and pin coupler, would be considered as a standard coupler and could be so used by all railroads (of which there are now some ten or twelve already accepted and in use by the roads), thus forestalling a monopoly in such coupler; and

Whereas said same Master Car-Builders did in the same convention held in Minneapolis in 1887 adopt the report of their committee on freight-car brakes, which report showed that power or air brakes were as practically applicable to freight as to passenger cars; and

Whereas there being now no longer any doubt as to the practicability of applying such brakes to freight trains, and were such uniform automatic power brakes and couplers universally and uniformly adopted and used in the freight-car transportation service of the nation, it would prevent a very large percent of the fatalities and injuries now daily and hourly suffered by this large class of young men engaged in the indispensable work of the commerce of the nation: Therefore,

Be it resolved by the senate (the house concurring), That our Senators and Representatives in Congress be most earnestly and respectfully requested to take all proper means to have enacted at the earliest possible date efficient laws that shall require that all cars used on railroads in the interstate commerce of the nation shall be equipped with uniform, safe, automatic couplers and power automatic brakes, to the end that the present terrible sacrifice of life and limb be prevented, and this "reproach to our civilization, of subjecting any class of American workmen, while in the pursuit of a necessary and useful avocation, to a peril of life and limb as great as that of a soldier in time of war," be taken away. I hereby certify that the foregoing resolution has been passed by both houses of the General Assembly of Iowa.

W. R. COCHRANE, Secretary Senate.

Mr. SQUIRE presented a petition of the Board of Trade of Vancouver, Wash., praying for the passage of Senate bill No. 1662, to authorize the construction of bridges across the Columbia River and its tributaries by the Oregon Railway Extensions Company; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. SHERMAN presented a memorial of the Monthly Meeting of Friends of Caesar's Creek, Ohio, and a memorial of the American Peace Society, favoring legislation providing for international arbitration; which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. MOODY presented a petition of 34 members of the Farmers' Alliance of Flora, S. Dak., praying for the free coinage of silver; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. STOCKBRIDGE presented a petition of 29 citizens of Lansing, Mich., praying for the free coinage of silver; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. ALLISON presented the petition of J. G. Thomas and other citizens of Iowa and the petition of E. M. Burrhus and other citizens of Iowa, praying for the passage of such laws as will prohibit boards of trade, bucket-shops, and mercantile bodies and individuals from fixing the value on raw or manufactured produce of American farms by sales of promises of future deliveries of anything but the actual produce or manufacture; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also presented resolutions adopted by the National Grange of Patron of Husbandry at its annual session held at Sacramento, Cal., November 13, 1889, favoring legislation to prevent the false branding and adulteration of food products, including liquors and drugs; which were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also presented resolutions adopted by the Iowa Woman's Synodical Missionary Societies at a session convened at Iowa City, Iowa, October 11, 1889, praying the national Congress to use every means to stay the iniquity of the liquor traffic in Africa; which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a petition of 36 citizens of Marshalltown, Iowa; a petition of 37 citizens of Marshalltown, Iowa, and a petition of 14 citizens of Allerton, Wayne County, Iowa, praying for the free coinage of silver; which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a resolution of Sam. Rice Post, No. 6, Department of Iowa, Grand Army of the Republic, praying for the passage of the service-pension bill; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented the petition of S. C. Thornton and other citizens of Hardin County, Iowa, and the petition of H. N. Peckham and other citizens of Hardin County, Iowa, praying for the passage of laws prohibiting gambling in farm products; which were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. BLACKBURN, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, submitted a report to accompany the joint resolution (S. R. 51) authorizing the President to appoint Richard H. Jackson to be an ensign in the Navy of the United States, heretofore reported by him.

Mr. HIGGINS, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 846) for the relief of Nathaniel McKay and the executors of Donald McKay, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. SHERMAN, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, to whom was referred the memorial of the Legislative Assembly of the Territory of Arizona, urging the acquirement of certain territory from Mexico, asked to be discharged from its further consideration; which was agreed to.

Mr. SAWYER, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (S. 1577) granting a pension to Francis E. Smith;

A bill (S. 1109) granting an increase of pension to John Kinney;

A bill (S. 2933) granting a pension to Jane H. Palmer; and

A bill (S. 1064) granting a pension to Margaret E. Adamson.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 510) granting a pension to John W. Reynolds, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. WILSON, of Maryland, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2058) for the relief of Isabella Hance, administratrix of William Hance, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. CASEY, from the Select Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation of Arid Lands, reported an amendment intended to be proposed to the urgent deficiency appropriation bill, and moved that it be printed and referred to the Committee on Appropriations; which was agreed to.

Mr. FAULKNER, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 868) for the relief of J. Henry Rives, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. PADDOCK, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1355) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to survey and mark the boundary line between the States of North and South Dakota, reported adversely thereon, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, reported a bill (S. 3089) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to survey and mark the seventh standard parallel between the States of North Dakota and South Dakota; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. SPOONER, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 193) directing the Secretary of the Treasury to re-examine and resettle the accounts of certain States and the city of Baltimore, growing out of moneys expended by said States and the city of Baltimore for military purposes during the war of 1812, reported it without amendment.

SUGAR-BEET INDUSTRY OF BOHEMIA.

Mr. PADDOCK, from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, reported the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved, That there be printed 5,500 copies of the Sugar-Beet Industry of Bohemia, a report by Commercial Agent Hawes, of Reichenberg, 5,000 for the use of the Senate and 500 for the use of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

PRINTING OF GEOLOGICAL REPORTS.

Mr. MANDERSON. I am directed by the Committee on Printing to report favorably a House concurrent resolution, and I ask for its immediate consideration.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring herein), That there be printed at the Government Printing Office, in addition to the number already ordered by law, 15,500 copies each of the tenth, eleventh, and twelfth annual reports of the Director of the United States Geological Survey, uniform with the preceding volumes of the series, of which 3,500 of each shall be for the use of the Senate, 7,000 for the use of the House of Representatives, and 5,000 for distribution by the Geological Survey.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to ask the Senator if that is the usual number of the previous reports which has been printed?

Mr. MANDERSON. It is exactly in accordance with the number that has been printed for many years.

Mr. COCKRELL. I find very frequently that we sometimes get a larger number of these reports than at others, and it makes the excess of no particular value. There ought to be a regularity in the number of these valuable books that are published, so that we can supply them in sets, and not have an excess of one volume over others.

Mr. MANDERSON. This is in exact accordance with the number printed for many years, at least as long as I have been connected with the Committee on Printing.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and concurred in.

Mr. MANDERSON. I am directed by the Committee on Printing to report back adversely the concurrent resolution submitted by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES], the consideration of which is not now needed on account of the resolution just passed.

The resolution submitted by Mr. JONES, of Arkansas, December 19, 1889, was read, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring herein), That there be printed at the Government Printing Office, in addition to the number already ordered by law, 15,000 copies each of the tenth, eleventh, and twelfth annual reports of the Director of the United States Geological Survey, uniform with the preceding volumes of the series, of which 3,500 of each shall be for the use of the Senate, 7,000 for the use of the House of Representatives, and 5,000 for distribution by the Geological Survey.

Mr. MANDERSON. I move that that resolution be indefinitely postponed.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MANDERSON. I am also instructed by the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred a resolution submitted by myself January 21, 1890, to report it adversely.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring herein), That there be printed at the Government Printing Office, in addition to the number already ordered by law, 15,000 copies each of the tenth, eleventh, and twelfth annual reports of the Director of the United States Geological Survey, uniform with the preceding volumes of the series, of which 3,500 of each shall be for the use of the Senate, 7,000 for the use of the House of Representatives, and 5,000 for distribution by the Geological Survey.

Mr. MANDERSON. I move that that resolution be indefinitely postponed.

The motion was agreed to.

COAST SURVEY REPORT.

Mr. MANDERSON, from the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the following resolution, submitted December 20, 1889, reported it without amendment; and it was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed, and bound in cloth, 5,000 extra copies of the report of the Superintendent of the United States Coast and Geodetic Survey for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1889, together with the usual necessary progress sketches and illustrations, 1,000 copies of which shall be for the use of the Senate, 2,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, and 2,000 copies for the use of the United States Coast and Geodetic Survey.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. PLATT introduced a bill (S. 3077) granting an increase of pension to Charles H. Moore; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. COCKRELL (by request) introduced a bill (S. 3078) to carry out the findings of the Court of Claims in the case of James H. Dennis; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. STOCKBRIDGE introduced a bill (S. 3079) for the erection of a public building at Grand Haven, State of Michigan; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. MANDERSON introduced a bill (S. 3080) providing for the construction of a military store-house and offices for Army purposes at the Omaha military depot, Nebraska, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. TELLER (by request) introduced a bill (S. 3081) granting arrears of pension to Emelia Mumm; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. MOODY introduced a bill (S. 3082) to validate pre-emption filings and pre-emption proofs made within the States of North and South Dakota, Montana, and Washington; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. PLUMB (by request) introduced a bill (S. 3083) making an appropriation for the relief of Lucy J. Pruner, daughter and only heir of Black Beaver, a Delaware Indian; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also introduced a bill (S. 3084) granting an increase of pension to General James W. McMillan; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 3085) for the relief of Mrs. Moivre

Tousey; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. McPHERSON introduced a bill (S. 3086) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to appoint commissioners to investigate certain claims for damages done to planted oysters in Raritan Bay in 1881; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. MITCHELL introduced a bill (S. 3087) for the relief of the legal representatives of Mrs. A. Shirley; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. PADDOCK introduced a bill (S. 3088) granting pay as Indian agent to Charles H. Potter; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. HOAK introduced a bill (S. 3090) for the erection of a public building at Haverhill, Mass.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 386) to construct a public building at Baton Rouge, La.; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (S. 306) for the erection of a public building in the city of Lansing, in the State of Michigan;

A bill (S. 801) granting a pension to Miss Elizabeth A. Tuttle;

A bill (S. 806) granting a pension to Cyrus Tuttle;

A bill (S. 807) granting a pension to Mary E. Noll, widow of Philip Noll;

A bill (S. 810) granting a pension to Eliza A. Talbott;

A bill (S. 813) granting a pension to Stephen Schiedel;

A bill (S. 1272) to increase the limit of cost of the public building authorized by act of Congress, approved June 30, 1886, to be erected at El Paso, Tex.; and

A bill (S. 2994) to authorize the construction of a bridge over the Arkansas River in the Indian Territory.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

On motion of Mr. MORRILL, it was Ordered, That Mary E. Woodward have leave to withdraw her papers from the files of the Senate, subject to the rules of the Senate touching the same.

On motion of Mr. MITCHELL, it was Ordered, That the papers in the case of Sarah A. R. Camp, deceased, be withdrawn from the files of the Senate and delivered to her representative, no report having been made on them.

ADDITIONAL SENATE EMPLOYEES.

Mr. HIGGINS. I submit a resolution which I ask may be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Sergeant-at-Arms be and he is hereby authorized and directed to appoint five additional messengers at an annual salary of $1,440, two skilled laborers at an annual salary of $1,000, and two laborers at an annual salary of $720, to be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate during the remainder of the current fiscal year, upon vouchers approved by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

Mr. HIGGINS. I will say that I introduce the resolution on account of the need caused by having committee-rooms outside of the Capitol.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be referred, under the rules, to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

VOTES IN EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. PLUMB. I offer an amendment to Rule XXXIX, which I ask may be read and referred to the Committee on Rules.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Resolution proposing an amendment to Rule XXXIX.

Add at the close:

"Provided, That all votes cast in executive session, whether upon yeas-and-nays vote or otherwise, shall be made public at the close of the session at which the same are cast."

REVISION OF REMARKS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Are there further resolutions, concurrent or other?

Mr. HOAR. I call up the resolution on which the vote was being taken when we adjourned yesterday.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there further morning business? The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of a resolution which will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution reported by Mr. HOAR, from the Committee on Privileges and Elections, March 10, 1890, as follows:

Ordered, That in all future editions of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD the following words be stricken from the report of the remarks of Mr. CALL, a Senator from the State of Florida, in the Senate, Thursday, February 20, 1890, as heretofore published in the Record, namely:

"And murder of hundreds of women and children in the Southern States."

"Of these horrid crimes."

"The blood of Saunders, if the evidence shall show his death was in any way connected with the prosecutions in the United States courts, will rest on his conscience. The shrieking ghosts of the hundreds of outraged and murdered women and children, the victims of the wild lust and passions of a race who owe all that they know of religion and civilization to the Southern white people, and not to the Senator from New Hampshire, will disturb his sleeping and his waking hours. Like Banquo's ghost, it will not down, and the ocean will not wash his blood-stained hands from the guilt of the rape and murder of these tender white women and children," said words having not actually been spoken by him, and that the passage of his remarks in which said words were inserted be published in such future editions as originally reported by the Official Stenographer.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion to take up the resolution.

Mr. SHERMAN. The yeas and nays were ordered yesterday.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That was on the passage of the resolution. The question now is on proceeding to the consideration of it. The motion was agreed to; and the Senate resumed the consideration of the resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The yeas and nays having been ordered on the passage of the resolution, the Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.
Mr. BUTLER (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMERON].

Mr. DANIEL (when his name was called). I was paired with two gentlemen, one of whom is the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS]. That was for yesterday afternoon, but I would have continued the pair this morning but for his presence. I have a general pair with the Senator from Washington [Mr. SQUIRE]. I do not see him here. If he were present I should vote "nay" and I suppose he would vote "yea."

Mr. DOLPH (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. BROWN], and I withhold my vote on this question.

Mr. FAULKNER (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY].

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from New York [Mr. HISCOCK]. If he were present I should vote "nay" and he would vote "yea."

Mr. MORRILL (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS]. I do not see him present, and therefore I withhold my vote.

Mr. PASCO (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Illinois [Mr. FARWELL]. If he were present I should vote "nay."

Mr. PLATT (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. BARBOUR], and therefore withhold my vote. I should vote "yea" if he were present.

Mr. STOCKBRIDGE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. RANSOM]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. WASHBURN (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. GIBSON]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

The roll-call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 36, nays 14; as follows:

YEAS—36.

DEATH OF REPRESENTATIVE TOWNSHEND.

Mr. CULLOM. I rise to announce that on Friday morning immediately after the morning business I will call up the House resolutions relating to the death of Mr. Townshend, late a member of Congress from my State.

PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE OF THE SENATE.

Mr. EVARTS. Mr. President, I call up in the Senate the privileged question of the resolution reported by the Committee on Privileges and Elections, as to the office of the President pro tempore and the power of the Senate concerning the same.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New York moves that the Senate do now proceed to the consideration of the Order of Business which will be reported by the Chief Clerk.

The Chief Clerk read the following resolution, reported by Mr. EVARTS from the Committee on Privileges and Elections February 10, 1890:

Resolved, That it is competent for the Senate to elect a President pro tempore, who shall hold the office during the pleasure of the Senate and until another is elected, and shall execute the duties thereof when the Vice-President is absent.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from New York to proceed to the consideration of this resolution.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. EVARTS. Mr. President, when I called up this matter in the Senate when it was last considered, I announced that when it was brought up again I should ask that the Senate should proceed to a vote upon it. The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE] who is in his seat has now, I believe, the floor upon that question.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I wish to acknowledge the courtesy extended to me by the Senator from New York [Mr. EVARTS] in having this matter postponed until it should suit my convenience to address the Senate. I feel that in attempting to present the arguments in opposition to this resolution I undertake a hopeless task. The resolution has received the sanction of one of the ablest committees of the Senate, and so far as I know has received the unanimous assent of that committee; yet I feel that my duty as a Senator, my obligation to support the Constitution, requires of me to say something against this innovation in the practice of the Senate.

I am sure that I stand on safe ground. I have on the side which I shall advocate this morning the uniform practice of the Senate commencing with the very first session of Congress under the Constitution and continued from that day without a single break up to the present time. Certainly, a construction of the Constitution which received the sanction of the first Senate, in which there were many members who assisted in framing the Constitution, continued without dissent from that time to the present, a construction of the Constitution thus commenced and thus sanctioned ought not to be departed from for light and trivial causes. The very first act ever performed by the American Senate was the election of a President pro tempore. In the order made by the Senate for that election the term of that officer was fixed in plain and unequivocal language. It was ordered that he be elected "for the sole purpose" of opening the electoral vote. From that time until the year 1861, so far as my researches go, there was unanimous consent on the part of the distinguished men, our predecessors in these chairs, as to the true construction of the clause of the Constitution now involved. At all times and in every conceivable way in which the question could be raised, it was uniformly decided until 1861, without dissent on the part of anyone, that the President pro tempore of the Senate held his office, as the words themselves mean, during that particular absence of the Vice-President for which he was elected.

In 1861 an effort was made to change this uniform practice. That effort was alluded to by the Senator from New York the other day in the speech he made in behalf of this resolution. The Senator from New York misinterpreted the result of that debate, as I understood him to say that the conclusion at the termination of the debate was in favor of that construction of the Constitution which is favored by his resolution.

Mr. EVARTS. Mr. President—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield?

Mr. GEORGE. Certainly.

Mr. EVARTS. The Senator is wrong in the recital of my statement if he supposes that I meant to say that the Senate had then come to a conclusion and a resolution upon the question. My interpretation of the course of the debate, mentioning the principal speakers, on one side Mr. Collamer, of Vermont, and on the other Mr. Bayard, the elder, of Delaware, was that the general result of the argument was that but for the habit which had been followed in the Senate it would be regarded as a new question in the way that I now state. That is all that I said.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I do not understand the position of the Senator from New York as explained now by him different from what I understood it to be before. That debate and the result of it do not show that if the question had then been res nova the decision of the Senate would have been different from what it was. There were two principal speakers, Mr. Collamer, who urged that the clause of the Constitution requiring the President pro tempore to be elected in the absence of the Vice-President merely indicated the occasion of the election, and Mr. Bayard, who insisted that it indicated something further; that it had something to do with the tenure. They were the only two speakers, except Mr. Simmons, of Rhode Island, who concurred with Mr. Collamer, and Mr. Trumbull, of Illinois, who dissented. On objection made by Mr. Trumbull the resolution was laid aside and never taken up again.

So the result of that effort to change the uniform practice of the Senate from 1789 to 1861 was a failure, and thereafter, down to the present time, the practice of the Senate has conformed to the original interpretation placed upon the Constitution as I have stated it to be.

It is hardly worth while, though it would fix in the minds of Senators the practice, for me to go into the various affirmative actions of the Senate in which the construction placed upon the Constitution by the Senator from New York in the resolution which he brings from the committee was explicitly condemned. I have some memoranda here, however, to which I will refer in order to fix in the minds of Senators that this was not a mere silent acquiescence in a wrong interpretation of the Constitution, but was a reiterated construction placed on it by the actual proceedings of the Senate.

From March 4, 1789, to March 4, 1793, being the first term of Washington's administration, three different persons were elected President pro tempore, and in every case the election took place, as it is conceded by the Senator from New York it must take place, during the absence of the Vice-President, and in every single case the tenure of the office was held to be terminated by the subsequent appearance of the Vice-President. For instance, the first President pro tempore who was ever elected was elected on the 6th day of April, 1789, John Adams not having been installed as Vice-President. He held his office until the 26th day of that month, when John Adams appeared and it was held that the office of President pro tempore ceased.

From March 4, 1793, to March 4, 1797, there were five different members—not merely five elections; there were more—but five different members of the Senate were elected to this office.

From 1797 to 1801, during the administration of John Adams, nine different Senators were elected President pro tempore of the Senate. There were more elections than nine, but nine different Senators were upon nine different absences of the Vice-President elected, and in every one of them the term of their office was held to have been determined by the return of the Vice-President.

From 1801 to 1805, during Mr. Jefferson's first term, five different Senators were elected; from 1805 to 1809 there were three; from 1809 to 1813 there were four, and in every single one of these elections it was held by the Senate that there was a vacancy in the office of President pro tempore by reason of the return of the Vice-President to the chair.

That covers all of the early period of our constitutional history. I have some more data furnished me by the report of Mr. Morton, from the Committee on Privileges and Elections, made on January 6, 1876. From that report I learn that on the 19th day of March, 1818, Vice-President Tompkins retired from the chair and the Senate chose Mr. Gaillard President pro tempore. Mr. Gaillard was President pro tempore on the 19th of March. Mr. Tompkins appeared on the 31st day of March, and it was held by the Senate that that vacated Mr. Gaillard's office. Mr. Gaillard, under that election, held the office exactly twelve days, and when Mr. Tompkins retired or became absent there was a new election.

Mr. Gaillard was President pro tempore on the 28th of December, 1821, when the Vice-President resumed the chair.

On the 1st day of February, 1822, the Vice-President informed the Senate by letter that the condition of his health rendered it necessary that he should return to his family, whereupon the Senate again elected John Gaillard, who had been displaced only a few weeks before by the appearance of the Vice-President. Mr. Gaillard was President pro tempore on the 21st of January, 1824, when the Vice-President resumed the chair, and on the 21st of May he retired, and the Senate again elected John Gaillard President pro tempore.

We come down to a little later period. At the first session of the Thirty-fifth Congress, December 7, 1857, the Vice-President being absent, Mr. Rusk, of Texas, who had been chosen President pro tempore at the last session, having died in the recess, the Senate elected Benjamin Fitzpatrick, of Alabama, President pro tempore. This appointment terminated on the appearance of the Vice-President during the session; but on the vacation of the chair by the Vice-President Mr. Fitzpatrick was again elected President pro tempore.

At a special session of the Senate, which met June 15, 1858, the Vice-President, Mr. Breckinridge, being absent, Mr. Fitzpatrick, President pro tempore, resumed the chair.

We come now to the year 1869:

The Vice-President, Mr. Colfax, was present at the assembling of the Senate at each of its regular sessions during the Forty-first and Forty-second Congresses; but uniformly retired from the chair just before the close of each session to enable the Senate to choose a President pro tempore, and this office the Senate as uniformly conferred upon Hon. Henry B. Anthony, who was President pro tempore during the recesses that intervened in those two Congresses, as well as repeatedly during each session, upon the temporary absence of the Vice-President.

XLIX. At the special or called session of the Senate which assembled March 4, 1873, the Vice-President, Hon. Henry Wilson, being absent, the Senate chose Hon. Matt. H. Carpenter, a Senator from the State of Wisconsin, President pro tempore. This appointment ceased upon the appearance of the Vice-President at the first session of the Forty-third Congress and his resuming the chair; but being forced by indisposition to retire from its duties, the Senate again chose Mr. Carpenter its President pro tempore, who is at present in the exercise of that office.

So at the expense of frequent elections, at the expense of changing the occupant of the chair as frequently as ten or twelve days apart, with one uniform consensus of opinion, with a uniformity of practice which is without a single break for a hundred years, the judgment of the Senate has been that the President pro tempore elected in the absence of the Vice-President vacates his office upon the return of that officer.

I read further from this same report made by very able men, and from the same committee which has reported the resolution under consideration. Mr. Morton's committee say:

The office of President pro tempore of the Senate must expire whenever the absence of the Vice-President is at an end and he appears in the Senate to preside.

The report quotes from Mr. Jefferson, certainly an authority than whom none can be higher. He presided over the deliberations of this body for four years, and in his Manual he says:

In the Senate a President pro tempore is proposed and chosen by ballot. His office is understood to be determined on the Vice-President's appearing and taking the chair.

And then the report of Mr. Morton's committee says:

The unbroken and uniform practice of the Senate, from its first session down to the present time, sustains the position that the office of President pro tempore of the Senate is determined on the Vice-President's appearing and taking the chair.

In fact, so far as I have been able to learn (the Senator from New York or the Senator from Massachusetts in their researches may have found out other men), no man except Mr. Collamer and Mr. Simmons down to within the last Congress ever asserted the contrary of the view that the office of President pro tempore expires with the return of the Vice-President from that particular absence.

That is the practice. That has been the uniform practice. That has been the uniform construction of the Constitution, commencing with its birth and running through a period of one hundred years. The Committee on Privileges and Elections ask us to reverse that. They make no report in which an argument is contained upon which we are to rely in ascertaining the grounds upon which they propose to change this uniform practice. The Senator from New York undertook to give some grounds for it. I think I have shown that he was mistaken in the principal ground which he gave, and that is, that the result of the debate in 1861 was unfavorable to the old and settled practice of the Senate.

The Senator from Massachusetts informs the Senate that his opinion at one time had been adverse to the resolution reported from his committee, but he stated that he thought the better argument was in favor of the rule now attempted to be enforced. However, he did not give us the argument. No man, so far as I know, has attempted to give any argument in favor of this reversal of the practice of a hundred years except Mr. Collamer, of Vermont. I propose to answer that argument, as I have no other to answer. His position was that the Constitution merely fixed the occasion of the election of a President pro tempore. I will read the Constitution:

The Senate shall choose their other officers, and also a President pro tempore in the absence of the Vice-President or when he shall exercise the office of President of the United States.

The view of Mr. Collamer was that that merely fixed the occasion in which the power vested by this clause of the Constitution in the Senate was to be exercised. It is true it does fix the occasion, but it does more. We are construing the Constitution according to the view presented in the pending resolution of the committee, which I will now read to the Senate:

Resolved, That it is competent for the Senate to elect a President pro tempore, who shall hold the office during the pleasure of the Senate and until another is elected, and shall execute the duties thereof when the Vice-President is absent.

According to the view of the committee, the officer elected is a continuing officer who holds his office, not only during that particular business of the Vice-President, but during the pleasure of the Senate, and not only during the pleasure of the Senate, but in addition thereto until a successor is elected. Now, I put this question to the honorable Senator from New York and to the honorable Senator from Massachusetts: If the meaning of the Constitution is that we shall elect a regular substitute for the President of the Senate to come in and take the chair as often as that chair shall be vacated by the President of the Senate, why is it that the Constitution restricts the power of the Senate to make that election to the casus in which there will be an absence of the President of the Senate?

The scheme of the Constitution is that the people of the United States shall elect the Presiding Officer of this body, and for very obvious reasons. The power, the influence which a permanent occupant of the chair has, does to some extent destroy the equality of the States in their representation in the Senate, so that when the framers of the Constitution determined that there should be absolute equality between the States in this body they determined also that that equality should not be disturbed by the mere accident of the Presiding Officer belonging to one State rather than to another. The scheme of the Constitution is that he shall preside.

It is not within the mere election of the Vice-President whether he shall preside or not. He has no right to vacate that chair except upon a case of necessity. I call the attention of Senators to a speech made by Elbridge Gerry in 1814, when he was Vice-President (and when he declined to vacate the chair some time before the adjournment of the Senate so that a President pro tempore could be elected), in which he declared that it was his duty to preside, quoting the language of the Constitution, "the Vice-President shall be President of the Senate." That great man, Vice-President of the United States, a member of the convention which framed the Constitution, declared, in view of the importance of the office, that it was his duty to be present and to preside, and he refused to vacate the chair so that a President pro tempore might be elected except a few moments before the final adjournment of this body. That is a very valuable speech. It declared that the office of Vice-President, or permanent President of the Senate, was not an office which the occupant could take up or lay down at his pleasure; that he had an important function to perform: first, to preserve the equality of the States in their representation in this body and, second, his presence prevents the negative States, upon any particular proposition, prevailing over an equal number of affirmative States.

According to parliamentary law, where a body is equally divided (and let it be remembered that the Senate, when full, is always composed of even numbers and therefore may be equally divided on almost any question) and when this body composed of even numbers divided equally votes upon a proposition, the negative votes are stronger than the affirmative votes of equal number, forty-one Senators voting "nay" outweigh forty-one Senators voting "yea." The scheme of the Constitution was that the forty-one negative votes or negative States should not be borne down by an equal number of affirmative votes or affirmative States; and the Constitution therefore provided for an arbiter, and that arbiter was the Vice-President of the United States sitting as President of the Senate.

Mr. President, when a man is elected to the very high office of Vice-President he is not elected to a mere sham, to a mere show, to a mere honorary office, or to a mere contingency to live until some accident may happen to the President of the United States which may call his vicarious powers into active operation.

Again, if it was the scheme of the Constitution that we should have a permanent, regular deputy, prepared at any time and at all times to take the place of the Chair when the Vice-President might be absent, I ask Senators to tell me why we can not create that officer until the Vice-President is absent. If the scheme of the Constitution was that we should have this deputy President (because that is his real name, as I shall show before I get through) selected, set apart to assume the duties of the office of Vice-President whenever it may seem pleasing to the Vice-President to be absent, why was it that the Constitution would not allow us to appoint him when we were regularly organized?

Mr. HOAR. It does.

Mr. GEORGE. Why is it, Mr. President, that when the Constitution refuses us the power when we are fully organized, ready to do business, to appoint another presiding officer of this body, when that occasion happens we can appoint one for all time to come?

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator pardon me for saying that I understand all the advocates of this resolution believe the Constitution confers the power to make the choice at any time, whether the Vice-President is present or absent.

Mr. GEORGE. The Senator believes that?

Mr. HOAR. I understand that is the universal opinion of all the persons who advocate the pending resolution.

Mr. GEORGE. I am very glad to have had that admission from the Senator. It will save me some trouble. Now, let us see whether there is any foundation for that. We are still living under the Constitution, I believe, though some things occur sometimes that make me doubt whether the Constitution of the United States is in force.

The Senate shall choose their other officers, and also a President pro tempore in the absence of the Vice-President.

Mr. Collamer, in 1861, the first man who ever questioned the tenure of the office of the President pro tempore, admitted that the plain language of the Constitution gave the power to be exercised only in the absence of the Vice-President. Why is it that during all these long years just before the adjournment of the Senate at a session of Congress, under the old law, which put the President pro tempore in the line of succession for the Presidency, the Vice-President retired, went out, became absent, so that the Senate might exercise this power? Were all these men, after all this hundred years, mistaken? What new light has broken in upon us now that, in opposition not only to the uniform practice for a hundred years, but in opposition to the plain meaning of the words used, we are to usurp the power of electing a President pro tempore with the Vice-President in the chair?

Why was it that the Committee on Privileges and Elections did not move the election of a President pro tempore before Vice-President MORTON vacated the chair? If the committee believe, as stated by the Senator from Massachusetts, that the power exists in this body to elect a President pro tempore when the Vice-President is present in the chair, why did they wait for the Senate to become disorganized only a few days ago before they called upon the Senate to elect a President pro tempore? I hardly know how to describe it, but can not argue against a sham. The Senator from Massachusetts informed me of the opinion of the learned committee of which he is chairman, but he did not condescend to give a reason why the words "elect a President pro tempore in the absence of the Vice-President" meant to elect a President pro tempore whenever the Senate got ready to do it, whenever it suited their convenience to do it.

Mr. President, of course I can not fight a proposition of that sort unless it is buttressed up by some sort of reasoning. I assume that no valid reason can be given not only for striking out words in the Constitution which are plainly written in it, but also for the insertion of words directly contrary in meaning. If the Senator from New York who has honored me so far by his presence during my remarks will get up and state that that is the basis of the right they claim in this resolution, I think I have discussed the matter long enough, and I will take my seat. The Senator does not respond. The Senator does not dare say that the Senate has a right to strike from the Constitution of the United States the words "in the absence of the Vice-President" and insert in it "whenever it shall please the Senate." He will not do that.

By what kind of reasoning able, ingenious lawyers may reach the conclusion stated by the Senator from Massachusetts to be the conclusion of the whole committee I confess I am unable to anticipate. I was going upon the argument made by the Senator from Vermont, Mr. Collamer, many years ago, who insisted that this language did fix in the Constitution the occasion and only the occasion in which the power to elect a President pro tempore existed. I was going to say that I thought I had driven the advocates of this singular proposition into a corner. I will not say that. I think they have run into a corner without being driven.

There are one or two other reflections which I desire to submit to the Senate upon the question now before us. The first thing I will do will be to put in juxtaposition the Constitution and the resolution and see if they can stand together:

The Senate shall choose their other officers, and also a President pro tempore in the absence of the Vice-President or when he shall exercise the office of President of the United States.

That is the Constitution. Now I will read the pending resolution:

Resolved, That it is competent for the Senate to elect a President pro tempore, who shall hold the office during the pleasure of the Senate and until another is elected, and shall execute the duties thereof when the Vice-President is absent.

I do not think it requires a very astute mind to see that these two propositions can not stand together. But I will hasten on.

I have the authority of the uniform practice of the Senate; I have the authority of all the great men who have ever preceded us in these seats for a hundred years, with two single exceptions—just two, Mr. Collamer and Mr. Simmons. Now, I propose to show that ex vi termini the words "President pro tempore" mean a President for the particular absence of the Vice-President. "Pro tempore" are two Latin words which have a signification. There are other words of that sort in the Constitution; and whenever you read the Constitution and come across one of those words, if you do not in language you must in idea substitute the English meaning of the words for the words themselves.

What are you going to do about "a quorum?" What is a quorum? What is the meaning of the word "quorum?" It is a Latin word meaning "of which." That is the literal meaning of the word, but it acquired a meaning at common law long ago of this sort: "That number of the body competent to do business." What will you do with "habeas corpus," two Latin words used in the Constitution? Whenever you read the Constitution, to understand it you must get in your mind the English words which these two Latin words represent, a writ to bring in the body of the prisoner before the court to examine into the cause of committal. And so with all the others. Those words had their signification at the time the Constitution was adopted, a well known signification at the common law, to which we must refer in ascertaining the meaning of every technical word used in the Constitution. "Bill of attainder." How will you ascertain what that means except by going to the common law? "Jury." How will you ascertain what that means except by going to the common law and finding that it means a body of twelve men above all exception, sworn to try a cause? "Grand jury." All these words are used in the Constitution. How are you going to know what they mean except by going to the common law? When we read the Constitution we read it as a parrot repeats unmeaning words, unless when we come across these technical words we bear in our minds the meaning in the English language which they represent.

AID TO COMMON SCHOOLS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Senate resumes the consideration of its unfinished business, being the bill (S. 185) to aid in the establishment and temporary support of common schools.

Mr. BLAIR rose.

Mr. GEORGE. Is the Senator from New Hampshire ready to go on? I shall be through directly.

Mr. PLUMB. I wish to make a statement at this juncture, with the consent of the Senator from New Hampshire. There are a great many important measures upon the Senate Calendar. Nearly four months of the session have elapsed. Nothing which can be said to be of any national importance has yet passed this body, and I think it can be fairly said that largely these matters of importance have waited upon the progress of the educational bill. While I do not agree with the Senator from New Hampshire as to the importance of that bill, at the same time I have had no objection to its having the opportunity for discussion and final decision in advance of other measures in which I was interested; but I want to say now that unless on to-day some agreement can be made whereby a date can be fixed upon which that bill shall be voted upon I shall to-morrow at 2 o'clock move that the bill be placed on the Calendar, subject to whatever contingency may there await it.

I say this not because of opposition to the bill nor because of any impatience at the delay heretofore occurring, but because I believe that now measures in relation to pensions, measures in relation to the forfeiture of land grants, a measure in regard to the free coinage of silver, and other measures relating to the prosperity of the people of the United States should be considered without the embarrassment which inevitably attaches to the fact that this bill, at 2 o'clock every day, in the middle of the legislative session, comes in to interrupt and break up.

Mr. President, I hope that the Senator from New Hampshire will avoid the necessity of a conflict which will only further harass the business of the Senate by agreeing that at some date to be named, and some reasonable date, and some date this week, the vote shall be taken upon the educational bill.

Mr. GEORGE. Will the Senator from Kansas give way so that I may ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to go on with my remarks? I wish to conclude them.

Mr. PLUMB. I wish to evoke some response from the sphinx of New Hampshire upon this subject.

Mr. BLAIR. Then I must first be dug out of the sand.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Mississippi asks unanimous consent—

Mr. PLUMB. I object until some understanding can be had about this other matter, though I do not wish to oppose the request of the Senator from Mississippi.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understands the Senator from Mississippi to ask unanimous consent that the consideration of the unfinished business may be informally laid aside in order that he may conclude his remarks.

Mr. GEORGE. That is all I ask.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. PLUMB. I withdraw the objection, Mr. President.

Mr. EVARTS. If the Senator will allow me, I will ask that the unfinished business may be postponed so that we may proceed to a vote on the question which has been under consideration. I hope the Senator from New Hampshire will not object to that course being taken.

Mr. BLAIR. I did not hear the Senator's suggestion.

Mr. EVARTS. I ask that we may proceed with the matter which was lately in discussion until we reach a vote.

Mr. PLUMB. When the Senator from Mississippi has concluded, I shall object to any further consideration of this matter, and shall insist on the special order doing one of two things, either going ahead on its own right or giving way indefinitely to other legislation to be brought before the Senate.

PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE OF THE SENATE.

Mr. GEORGE. I believe, Mr. President, I have unanimous consent to proceed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Mississippi is recognized upon the resolution reported by the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, when I was interrupted I was talking about the technical words used in the Constitution of the United States, and saying that we had to resort to the English common law in order to find out what they meant. I desire to call the especial attention of the Senator from New York to the proposition which I make, that in every single instance in which a technical legal term is used in the Constitution of the United States, except one, the courts have put upon these technical terms the exact meaning which they had at common law. There is one exception, and only one, and that is the word "treason." There the Constitution defines the meaning of the term itself, the exception proving the rule. In every instance in which a technical term is used in the Constitution it is used in the sense it had at the common law at the time of the adoption of the Constitution, except the word "treason," and there our forefathers, being unwilling to allow the doctrine of constructive treason to prevail in this country, defined in the Constitution itself what treason was. On that basis I will go on to show what "President pro tempore" and "Speaker pro tempore" meant, at the time of the adoption of the Constitution of the United States, by the common law of England.

There is some similarity between the Speakership of the House of Commons in England and the Presidency of the Senate. In England the Speaker of the House of Commons is elected by the House, but he has to be approved by the sovereign. The President of the Senate is appointed by the sovereign in the United States, the people. We have nothing to do with his election. In England, on account of the fact that the election of the Speaker had to be approved by the sovereign, it was held up to the time of the Protectorate of Cromwell, a little after the middle of the seventeenth century, that the House of Commons had no power to elect a Speaker pro tempore. When he was absent they could do nothing. I will read some instances:

In the year 1656, the Speaker being absent, after prayers were read by the clerk, the journal states:

"They [the members] departed the House. This is an intermission of necessity, no adjournment."

The Speaker being absent.

At an other time the motion was that the house "be discontinued till Friday morning; so they arose and departed, yielding assent by a necessity to the motion."

So by the common law in England, after whose institutions ours were modeled, when the presiding officer had to be merely approved by the sovereign it was held that the House could not proceed in his absence and that they could not elect a temporary Speaker, and it would be the fact to-day, if the Constitution had not provided otherwise by giving us the power to elect a President pro tempore, that in the absence of the Vice-President we could not proceed. But the framers of the Constitution provided for that. The first time a Speaker pro tempore was ever elected was during the Protectorate of Cromwell.

"On January 27, 1656, the Speaker being sick, a Speaker pro tempore was selected."

How was his place defined? I read from the language of the journal—"to supply the Speaker's place during his absence." Thus, at the first time a Speaker pro tempore was selected, it was expressly stated that he was to occupy the Speaker's place during his absence. In 1658 there was another election of a Speaker pro tempore "to supply the Speaker's place during his absence, occasioned by his present indisposition, and no longer."

I quote the language of the journal, and similar entries were made in all the other cases, in every single one. So at the common law it was defined on every single occasion in which a Speaker pro tempore was elected that he was elected for that particular absence of the Speaker. That being the meaning of "pro tempore" as fixed in the common law, there being no doubt or dispute as to that, that being its meaning in 1789, when this Constitution was framed, it must have that meaning now, unless there be something in the context of the Constitution which gives it a different meaning.

"Pro tempore" is defined by the lexicographers to mean "for the time being." Then, adopting the rule which I have shown we must adopt in every single case of the use of Latin words in the Constitution, in reading them we must apply in our minds the English meaning. Then the Constitution would read thus: "And shall elect a President for the time being in the absence of the Vice-President." Is there any way to escape that conclusion?

Mr. MITCHELL. Is there any limit in the Constitution to that absence?

Mr. GEORGE. I could not catch what the Senator from Oregon said. I wish the Senator would approach a little nearer if he desires me to hear him.

Mr. MITCHELL. Is there anything in the Constitution defining the length of that absence or limiting it in any way?

Mr. GEORGE. Except the language which I have read, there is none.

Mr. MITCHELL. May not that absence be one hour or one day or one week or a month, and still be within the provision of the Constitution?

Mr. GEORGE. Oh, yes; and I think (and that has been the practice of the Senate) when it is for a year or more, as in the case of the death of the Vice-President, the election holds because he is absent. If it is for a day, the President pro tempore is elected for that time; if it is for a week, he is elected for that time; but he is not elected for the absence, whatever it may be.

Mr. President, that being the meaning of the phrase, both in the literary sense "for the time being" and also in the legal sense, then the Constitution must be read: "And shall elect a President for the time being in the absence of the Vice-President." If that be so, that closes the argument.

I was not compelled to make this argument to sustain a construction of the Constitution a hundred years old. I might have rested upon showing that practice and waited for the gentlemen who contend that that practice is wrong to assail it; but, Mr. President, I know that this resolution is to pass, and I want to inform my Democratic brethren on this side of the Chamber that I have an intimation—I do not know whether it is so or not, and if I am wrong the Senator from New York will correct me—that this great constitutional question, which has been settled by the practice of a hundred years, has recently undergone revision in the high court of a Republican caucus. The meaning placed upon the Constitution by Jefferson and Madison and Clay and Calhoun and Webster and by all the great men who have preceded us for a hundred years, sanctioned by that long line of precedents, sanctioned by the precedents in the House of Commons in England for five hundred years, is to be set aside because a Republican caucus of this body does not like it.

Now, Mr. President, I have great respect for caucuses, and especially for Republican caucuses. I reckon I have more respect for them than I have for Democratic caucuses for this reason: that I never happened to be in a Republican caucus and I happen to have been in several Democratic caucuses, and therefore I know more about Democratic caucuses than I do about Republican caucuses, and I do not think familiarity with these meetings is likely to increase one's respect for them. I have a high regard for them upon another ground, as party machinery. In a Democratic caucus, when anything is debated and decided upon, everybody considers that he has a right to go out and vote as he pleases. I understand that the decision of a Republican caucus is like the decree of an ecumenical council (I believe that is the name) in the Catholic Church. The decree is infallible, and everybody is bound to obey or be anathematized. So, of course, this resolution will pass. Having received the high sanction of the Republican caucus, of course it must go through.

I do not see upon that side of the Chamber just now a very distinguished and able Senator, especially able as a lawyer, and I have his authority for saying that he agrees to the old rule, the old construction, and is opposed to this new-fangled construction put upon the Constitution by the high court of the Republican caucus. He is not here to speak for himself. I suppose without knowing—this is all guess-work, and I want it understood that this part of my speech is pure guess-work—that, whilst this high council of the Republican party is not sufficient to convince the judgment of this distinguished Senator, the chairman of the Judiciary Committee, it is at least sufficient to keep him out of this fight. So, then, unaided by his genius and his learning, I have been compelled to present the side of the Constitution of our fathers. I mean what I say. I have been compelled to present the side of the Constitution of our fathers and plead for its observance. I know that my words fall on leaden ears.

What is the Constitution, as expounded for a hundred years, when it stands in the way of the convenience or the will of a Republican caucus? Why point, as I have done this morning, to a long line of unbroken precedents, beginning on the first day that this body ever met and continuing down to the present time? Why point to that and to the plain meaning of the Constitution, recognized by all up to this hour, when it suits the convenience of the Republican caucus to annul the Constitution? That is all there is in it. The Constitution says that in the absence of the Vice-President you shall elect a President pro tempore. The Republican caucus, if the Senator from Massachusetts is regarded as an interpreter of Republican opinion, says you may elect this President pro tempore whether the Vice-President is absent or not. The Constitution says, so interpreted for a hundred years, that when you elect in the absence of the Vice-President a President pro tempore his office ceases upon the return of the Vice-President. The Republican caucus, this infallible council of the Republican party, says "No, we will elect one when the President of the Senate is in his seat, and he shall hold his place until the pleasure of the Senate is manifested to the contrary and until a successor is elected."

Sir, did it ever occur to our learned friends of the Republican caucus in construing away the Constitution of our fathers, recognized as such for a hundred years by every great man and every little man but two who ever sat in this Chamber until the last session of Congress, that they are to set aside this Constitution and put their will in the place of it? "Oh, it is a matter of convenience." I understand it is urged that it is inconvenient every time the Vice-President vacates the chair to go through an election. Are we to be told that the Constitution of our fathers, as expounded and acted upon for a century, is to be thrown aside because it is inconvenient for us? I must say we are degenerate sons of these illustrious men if we do it whenever it suits our convenience to set it aside. "We can not afford," is the argument, "to observe the Constitution; we can not afford to preserve the sanctity of our oaths to support the Constitution, because it is inconvenient to do so." Is that the argument that is to prevail in the American Senate? Is that the argument by which that sacred instrument, once so regarded, is to be set aside and trampled under foot? I know that this thing is to be done. It is only a slight invasion, it may be true, of the Constitution. It is only a setting aside of the plain words of the Constitution, so understood for a century, in order that we may be relieved from a little inconvenience. That is all. What new light has poured in upon the minds of Republican Senators? What spirit from this or another world gave to this conclave an insight into the meaning of the Constitution that was denied to all other men for a hundred years?

Mr. President, in my weak and bumble way I have discharged my duty. I have thought that at least the plain words of the Constitution upon mere little matters of form would be observed in the American Congress. I have long since despaired that its spirit and substance, when they stood in the way of the will of a majority, would be any protection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BERRY in the chair). The Senate resumes the consideration of the unfinished business.

Mr. EVARTS. I hope the unfinished business may be set aside and that we may proceed to dispose of this question of privilege, and the vote taken after Senators have spoken, if they desire to speak.

Mr. BLAIR. Can the Senator from New York indicate about what time he will be able to complete the consideration of this question?

Mr. EVARTS. I hope the vote may be taken very speedily. I shall in reply occupy a very few moments of the attention of the Senate.

AID TO COMMON SCHOOLS.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Senate bill 185 is the unfinished business.

Mr. BLAIR. Mr. President, I will say a word in reply to the mad, rushing speech of the father of waters, which inundated the Senate—I suppose I may apply that description to the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB], as he gave me the appellation of "the sphynx." I had proposed myself to call the attention of the Senate to the situation of this bill when my friend from Kansas introduced the subject with such marked emphasis. I was about to state to the Senate that the Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM] had given notice that on Friday he would call our attention to the exercises having relation to the death of a colleague of his in the other House immediately after the morning business, and, of course, the ordinary respect that we pay in the presence of death will result in an immediate adjournment upon the completion of those exercises; so that Friday will be a lost day so far as the consideration of ordinary business is concerned. Yesterday was absorbed in a matter which could not be evaded. To-day a matter which has been pending a long while is before the Senate, and it involves a point which must early be decided, I suppose, touching the choice of the President pro tempore, and the Senator from New York [Mr. EVARTS], who has had this upon his mind for some time, is anxious to dispose of it, and a brief period is necessary to do so. That would leave only the remnant of to-day and to-morrow in which the consideration of the school bill may be proceeded with.

The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE], who has just taken his seat, has the floor upon the bill. Next in order a Senator, who will speak at length upon it, informs me that his absence from the city is compulsory, so that he can not speak until Monday. The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY], who does not desire to speak until the friends of the bill have been heard from further, if they are to speak at all, will take the floor on Tuesday, and he will be followed by the Senator from New York [Mr. EVARTS], who will, in the natural order of events, be entitled to the floor on Wednesday next; and before the vote is taken on this bill I shall desire to reserve a short time, not exceeding an hour, which I shall occupy, and it seems to me that it is necessary to do so, in order to correct some misapprehensions as to the nature of the bill and essential misstatements that may have been made of a statistical character bearing upon its merits.

I have thought, and I wanted to do it without any unusual propulsion from the opponents of the bill, to ask the Senate that we take the vote upon the amendments and upon the passage of the bill on Thursday of next week at 2 o'clock, or during the day on Thursday, at all events. If circumstances should so arise, one or two Senators may desire to speak—the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] and the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR], who will both speak briefly, as I understand; and that they may have that opportunity, it may be necessary to take another day to finish the bill.

Mr. FRYE. Only one speech to be made a day?

Mr. BLAIR. Perhaps so; I do not know; but I do not suppose that there will be much done on Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday, beyond the time to be occupied by the gentlemen who are to speak; but I had thought that probably the time during those first two days would suffice for the short speeches which I refer to as likely to be made, if made at all, and so I have not any doubt myself that we shall dispose of the bill on Thursday of next week, or, at the latest, on Friday, and I shall ask the Senate to dispose of it on Friday certainly, and, if possible, on the day preceding.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator make that request now?

Mr. BLAIR. I do, but I will hear any suggestion of the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. PLUMB. I only want to say that there is no objection, of course, to any debate on this or any other measure. The Senate knows, and the Senator from New Hampshire well knows also, that whenever a Senator gives notice that he wants to speak he can bring up any subject on the Calendar or elsewhere, or make a subject, to which he can address his remarks, and that is all right. But to keep this bill here all the time, week after week and month after month, in such a way as to disarrange all the business of the Senate, is not fair, and I give notice now that on Monday I shall move at 2 o'clock to either put the pension bill or the silver bill in place of the pending measure; not because I want to prevent anybody from speaking, but simply because I want to give the Senate an opportunity to do some other business and something which I consider is of a great deal more importance than this bill in any possible attitude in which it may be viewed, and yet not with the design of in any way impeding the consideration of the bill at all, because it can still go on, like Tennyson's brook, forever, so long as there is any disposition to speak upon it. That is all I have to say, that on Monday I shall move to proceed to the consideration of either the pension bill or the silver bill in place of this.

Mr. BLAIR. The Senator from Kansas is not capable of showing wherein at any moment, from the time the consideration of this bill commenced, it has not been pushed with even as great energy and determination as he is accustomed to manifest in urging measures with which he is intrusted, and there is not the slightest occasion for the Senator to make the suggestions which he does make with reference to the assumed dilatoriness that has been manifested in the conduct or the management of this bill.

Mr. PLUMB. I do not assume that there has been any dilatoriness in urging this bill, but I say it is here obstructing the passage of measures in which the country is interested, but, whether dilatory or not, I know the Senator from New Hampshire is impetuous, and he has been crowding this in. Notwithstanding the fact that he crowds it, it does not get ahead, and I would rather the Senate should address itself to something else. The Senator from New Hampshire holds the floor, and he graciously farms it out. He has been gracious to me and he has been gracious to others, and yet there are a good many of us who would rather in some day of the week, or some day of the month, or some day of the year have rights here rather than to have these concessions made to us because the Senator from New Hampshire regards us with grace.

All I want to say is that on Monday next I am going to test the Senate on the maintenance of the present condition, not to interfere with the opportunity of any Senator to speak on this bill, but as to keeping it in this condition and interfering with everything that comes up after 2 o'clock, so as to take it out of the will of the Senator who has control of this bill.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. BLAIR. Unless it is to be assumed that the bill is to be set aside, of course I yield to the Senator.

Mr. PLATT. Not at all. I only desire to make a suggestion as to what has been said within the last few minutes about this bill.

I am one of those Senators who have felt embarrassed by the fact that this bill has taken so much time, yet I do not complain of it. I do not know how it could well have been otherwise or can be well otherwise under the practice which we have adopted here. I think the practice is all wrong. I do not think any measure, however important, ought to go along day after day and the convenience of Senators as to when they can get ready to speak be consulted. When we reach a measure, as it seems to me, however important, then that ought to go forward without this extreme courtesy which is manifested as to when a Senator can get ready to speak upon it. That is the difficulty, not only with this matter, but with all bills.

Now the Senator from Kansas comes in and says he will try to move some other measure to take precedence of this. I do not like that, either, because I have some measures, and I may name them, at least some of them, bills for the creation of new States, which I think are as important as any bills, and I am anxious to get at them. I do not want to have some other matter come in while this bill is pending. I want this bill to be hurried to a conclusion, and then we may all take our chances of getting our measures before the Senate.

Mr. BLAIR. I do not know, unless there is to be a change in the usages of the Senate for the first time in its history, how Senators who want to speak on this bill can be deprived of the opportunity, and it is customary for them to select their opportunity with reasonable regard for their own convenience in that matter.

I have done the best I could with this bill. It is a bill far more important than any other one that is pending or likely to be pending, including the appropriation bills themselves, in my judgment, and I am not inclined to see a bill of this importance dealt with otherwise than with the ordinary courtesy which is extended to public-building matters or anything else, even of the most trifling importance.

I should not probably get into any violent altercation over this bill and its postponement, but it would probably be a subject of discussion upon every matter that got before the Senate under that license which the Senator alludes to, of the privilege of every Senator to speak upon anything that is before the Senate, and I might take a notion to make a speech on the school bill myself before we get through [laughter], even if some other subject-matter was pending; and if the school bill itself should be liable to be set aside the Senator might discover that in the United States of America, and possibly in the Senate of the United States of America, there would be those who want to consider this bill and are willing to give a little time to the consideration of the interests of the childhood of the country; and sooner or later the bill will be considered and will be voted upon at this Congress, and I hope to get it disposed of by Thursday or Friday of next week, and if it can be done earlier I think it will be done.

Mr. FRYE. I desire to ask the Senator a question. I should like to ask the Senator if he has ever known, during his experience in the United States Senate, of a bill being permitted to drag along for a solid month in order to accommodate Senators who said they desired to make speeches? Why should not a Senator who desires to make a speech be ready to make it? Why should he not recognize the fact that the bill is under consideration and that it should continue under consideration until disposed of? Why should one speech be made here in a day and then go into executive session at 4 o'clock, when two more speeches could be made, an hour being long enough for anybody to make a speech on the educational bill or anything else? Why should this bill be permitted for over a month, and perhaps for a month longer, to take the place of all the pending business before the Senate simply to accommodate some Senator who says he desires to make a speech? The Senator should accommodate himself to the business of the Senate if he desires to make a speech.

Now, there is no particular desire to hear Senators make speeches on this bill. I have sat there in the presiding officer's chair three or four times during the pendency of this bill when Senators were making speeches, and counted less than seven members of the United States Senate present and listening. Under those circumstances—

Mr. BLAIR. The Senator has on a good many other bills, too.

Mr. FRYE. Yes, with many other bills, but I never saw it in the case of a bill pending along like this. If the Senator from New Hampshire would insist that his bill should be considered day after day against executive sessions or anything else until it was disposed of, it would have been disposed of a fortnight ago, but his good nature leads him to accommodate this Senator, that, and the other, when the fact illustrates itself every time the bill is up that there is no living Senator who wants to hear a speech, because the Senators are all in the smoking-rooms or in their committee-rooms while the speeches are going on.

Mr. BLAIR. The Senator has put to me a great many conundrums, but I was never a member of the Committee on Rules, and never officiated with any frequency as presiding officer of this body, and I never had anything to do with the creation of this Senatorial courtesy any more than to exercise it towards others in a very much more marked degree than it has been exercised by others towards myself.

Now, Mr. President, this is not the only bill that has taken a great deal of time, though it be the most important bill, and might well claim time more than any other that has been pending in this Congress since I have known anything of it. I mean by "this Congress" the Congresses I have had the honor to be connected with. I know many another bill which has drifted along week after week, and I never knew any of them that could resist a motion to go into executive session, or a motion to adjourn, or the desire for dinner on the part of members of the Senate, and I do not suppose that the pendency of the question of a declaration of war against christendom, against the world, against the universe, would prevent Senators from being caught eating their salmon occasionally at 2 o'clock in the day, and I think it may be fair to presume that at the time when the Senator from Maine observed the absence of Senators during the discussion of this and other bills the absence has generally been during that important hour when Senators are attending to the inner, middle man rather than the head-work of their Senatorial systems.

This bill has been pressed with unexampled energy, as the Senator must admit, not always, but sometimes, leading the forlorn hope in the effort to get a hearing. The Senator knows that, and the fact that the Senator is not interested in listening to these speeches is probably only by reason of the fact that he is better posted and better remembers what he has heard in former Congresses than many of the others. I found that a great many members of the Senate did not know much about this bill. I have found, even up to almost the present day, many Senators who certainly had not read the bill, or, if they had read it, did not remember much about it, but seemed to have got their information in regard to it more largely from the public prints, which, as I have stated, have misrepresented it, than from an examination of the bill itself.

We are getting on with this debate. It is not any more protracted than it needs to be in order that Senators may understand the subject fully. I would have been glad to have a vote much earlier, but in the exercise of ordinary courtesy, and no more than ordinary courtesy, it has not been possible for me to get any further along than I have done.

Now, I have stated to the Senate just how it seems to me inevitable that the time will be occupied from Monday until Thursday of next week, possibly a little longer and more likely a little shorter, and if this bill continues to be considered, I do not see but that I am helpless in the matter otherwise than to do all I can do, and that I have done; I have done the best I could with this bill. If you could have done any better with it, you should have been allowed to pass it. That is all.

Mr. HAWLEY. Will the Senator allow me a word?

Mr. BLAIR. Certainly.

Mr. HAWLEY. The Senator knows, I think, who the five Senators are who desire to speak on this bill. Speaking as one of them, I put myself in his hands to make up his programme. Why are not the others willing to do it?

Mr. BLAIR. Between now and Monday?

Mr. HAWLEY. Yes.

Mr. BLAIR. I do not know of any speech that is likely to be made except the address of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE].

Mr. GEORGE. I think I shall not speak more than ten or fifteen minutes.

Mr. BLAIR. There might be some business done this week, to-day and to-morrow, undoubtedly, and I should be very glad that that might be the case, though I could well occupy the time myself, if I felt there was any necessity for my doing so.

Mr. HAWLEY. I did not count the Senator in the five. I thought he had been speaking. [Laughter.]

Mr. BLAIR. It appears that there are very important views of this matter not yet presented, but I am so anxious for a vote that I am willing the Senate should vote almost in the dark on some important considerations bearing on the merits of the bill.

Mr. CULLOM. May I ask the Senator if he has any promises out as to time?

Mr. FRYE. The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE] has just promised.

Mr. CULLOM. Has the Senator any promises out that would prevent him giving notice now that he will insist on a vote on this bill on Tuesday next?

Mr. BLAIR. Oh, yes. It will be impossible to get through with the consideration of this bill, as I understand the desire of Senators, earlier than Thursday of next week, and I intimated that I would ask permission to have the final vote on the amendments and the passage of the bill on Thursday of next week.

Mr. HOAR. Let us vote on the pending resolution.

Mr. BLAIR. But the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB] intimates that this bill will disappear.

I ask unanimous consent that on Thursday of next week at 2 o'clock in the afternoon I may have not exceeding an hour to make any such closing remarks upon the bill as I deem it important to make, and that upon the conclusion of what I shall have to say the vote be taken immediately upon the pending amendments and the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Hampshire asks unanimous consent that on Thursday of next week all debate on this bill shall cease at 2 o'clock in the afternoon, except such remarks as he may desire to make, not exceeding one hour, and that at the conclusion of his remarks the vote be taken on the amendments and the bill without further debate. Is there objection?

Mr. ALLISON. The language of the Senator was "upon the pending amendments." Of course this bill ought to be open to amendment until it is finally disposed of.

Mr. BLAIR. In which case I suppose the mover of an amendment would want, perhaps, five minutes.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not object to the arrangement proposed by the Senator from New Hampshire having charge of this bill, except that I think it should be open to amendment until it is finally disposed of.

Mr. BLAIR. That is very proper, of course; but I would not like to assent that an amendment of which the friends of the bill or the enemies of it have had no notice should be moved and action taken without any opportunity for debate upon the amendment. I suggest that the Senate consider and debate such amendments under the Anthony rule.

Mr. ALLISON. I have no objection to any arrangement the Senator may suggest.

Mr. BLAIR. And that what is known as the Anthony rule may be applied to debate on amendments which may be offered to the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will restate the proposition. The Senator from New Hampshire asks unanimous consent that on Thursday of next week, at 2 o'clock in the afternoon, all debate shall cease upon the bill and the amendments pending, except such remarks as the Senator from New Hampshire shall desire to make himself, not to exceed one hour, and that, at the conclusion of his speech, the vote shall be taken upon the pending amendments, and all amendments that may be thereafter offered to be subject to debate under the five-minute rule. Is that the proposition?

Mr. BLAIR. That is the way I mean to be understood.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. BLAIR. It is the understanding that it applies to one week from to-morrow.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Thursday of next week.

Mr. TURPIE. I desire to offer an amendment to the resolution which has been pending in relation to the election of President pro tempore.

Mr. BLAIR. That is the resolution reported by the Senator from New York [Mr. EVARTS].

Mr. TURPIE. Yes, sir.

Mr. BLAIR. I will give way informally for the consideration of that resolution.

Mr. PLUMB. Let me repeat what I said before. I know that it is not usual for any Senator to say he will interpose anything against the desire of any Senator to be heard on any question at any time, but on Monday next, at 2 o'clock, subject to the desire of some Senator then to speak, and if the circumstances be such that it is manifest at the conclusion of that Senator's speech that there is an absence of any desire on the part of any other Senator to immediately proceed, I shall move to take up some other bill, the effect of which will be to displace this bill from its present anomalous condition.

Mr. BLAIR. I do not understand that that—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair has recognized the Senator from Indiana [Mr. TURPIE]. The Chair will receive the amendment proposed by him.

Mr. TURPIE. I move to strike out the words at the conclusion of the resolution, "when the Vice-President is absent," and insert "during the future absences of the Vice-President, until the Senate otherwise order."

I desire to address the Senate on the resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair would state to the Senator from Indiana that the education bill is before the Senate. The Chair understood that that was yielded for the purpose of allowing the Senator to offer his amendment. The education bill is yet pending before the Senate.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The amendment can be received and printed.

Mr. BLAIR. I do not wish in this confusion to lose sight of the education bill, which I consented should be informally laid aside.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The education bill is pending before the Senate at this time. The Chair understood the Senator from New Hampshire to yield for the purpose of allowing the Senator from Indiana to offer his amendment, but the education bill is now pending before the Senate.

Mr. BLAIR. At the request of the Senator from New York [Mr. EVARTS] I assented that the education bill should be laid aside informally for the consideration of his resolution. I hope after that to call up the bill, and then the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE] will speak.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That will require unanimous consent of the Senate. Is there objection to the suggestion of the Senator from New Hampshire that the pending bill be laid aside informally in order to consider the resolution pending at the conclusion of the morning hour? The Chair hears none.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. MCPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 1701) making an appropriation for the removal of a dangerous obstruction to the entrance of the harbor at Milwaukee, Wis.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. 5074) extending the time of payment to purchasers of land of the Omaha tribe of Indians in Nebraska, and for other purposes; and

A bill (H. R. 7025) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for taking the eleventh and subsequent censuses," approved March 1, 1889.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a letter of the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting, in response to Senate resolution of March 10, 1890, the compilation concerning the legal status of the Indians in the Indian Territory; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 386) to construct a public building at Baton Rouge was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

The bill (H. R. 5974) extending the time of payment to purchasers of land of the Omaha tribe of Indians in Nebraska, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The bill (H. R. 7025) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for taking the eleventh and subsequent censuses," approved March 1, 1889, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Census.

PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE OF THE SENATE.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the following resolution, reported by Mr. EVARTS, from the Committee on Privileges and Elections, February 10, 1890:

Resolved, That it is competent for the Senate to elect a President pro tempore, who shall hold the office during the pleasure of the Senate and until another is elected, and shall execute the duties thereof when the Vice-President is absent.

Mr. TURPIE. I now submit my amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BERRY in the chair). The amendment of the Senator from Indiana will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to strike out at the close of the resolution the words "when the Vice-President is absent" and to insert "during the future absences of the Vice-President, until otherwise ordered;" so as to make the resolution read:

Resolved, That it is competent for the Senate to elect a President pro tempore, who shall hold the office during the pleasure of the Senate and until another is elected, and shall execute the duties thereof during the future absences of the Vice-President, until otherwise ordered.

Mr. EVARTS. The Senator from Indiana [Mr. TURPIE], who is a member of the Committee on Privileges and Elections, has proposed this amendment, and, so far as I may speak for the committee and for the supporters of this resolution, there is no objection made to the amendment.

Mr. TURPIE. Mr. President, I have offered the amendment in the terms which I have submitted because I think they are more explicit, and that they are an improvement upon the resolution as it was reported, and put beyond question what the construction should be.

I do not deny what the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE] has said about the former action of the body, but I do not believe the question involved in the practice has ever been settled, and I think the unbroken practice or custom which he speaks of is owing to the fact that the question has not been discussed, and there has been no determinate or affirmative decision on the construction of the national Constitution herein.

It has always been a mooted question, and the practice and the custom have been mooted and disputed also. I heard here twenty-six years ago a brief restatement of the discussion between Senator Bayard, of that era, and Senator Collamer. I heard a colloquy in which Senator Bayard, who took the same ground as the Senator from Mississippi now does, conceded that, laying aside what had been the practice of the Senate, Mr. Collamer had the correct construction. Indeed, the Senate determined nothing then. They left the dispute undetermined. I refer to the debate of 1861 only to show that the question was then mooted; and in 1854 there was a debate, and as far as I know the question has always been mooted, at least in modern times, and in the memory of any living man has never been regarded as settled.

Mr. GEORGE. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. TURPIE. Yes, sir.

Mr. GEORGE. I have looked up the debate of 1854 and of 1856 and the question involved there is not the one here. In the one the question was whether you could get along when the President pro tempore was not present at the meeting of the Senate. The debate was very short, but I am sure the Senator is mistaken in supposing that this question now involved, whether the tenure of the President pro tempore ceases when the absence of the Vice-President ceases, was that involved on that occasion.

Mr. TURPIE. I only spoke of the debate of 1854 and an earlier debate on this question upon the reference to them in the debate of 1861, between Senators Bayard and Collamer, and there the earlier debate was recognized as having a bearing upon the construction of this clause. I speak of the discussion which lasted for half a century, which has shown that the question itself was mooted and is yet open. I cite in the first place the passage of the Constitution in reference to the House of Representatives:

The House of Representatives shall choose their Speaker and other officers,

There is an entirely parallel passage in the Constitution respecting the other branch. The power contained there is not a common-law power. It was the common law that the House of Commons could not choose its Speaker except sub conditione, and the Upper House could not choose its presiding officer at all, but both these powers were granted in the Constitution of the United States, and the power is absolute in its character, not only as to the Speaker, but as to the other officers. "The House of Representatives shall choose their Speaker and other officers." The passage of the Constitution with reference to our own branch is as follows:

The Senate shall choose their other officers, and also a President pro tempore in the absence of the Vice-President.

The provisions are the same except as to the order of "other officers." "The House of Representatives shall choose their Speaker and other officers;" the Senate section is "The Senate shall choose their other officers, and also a President pro tempore."

Neither section alludes in any way to the time when the election is to take place. The time when the election is to take place is fixed by the rules of both bodies. It is not fixed with reference to the President pro tempore or with reference to the Speaker any more than it is with reference to the Sergeant-at-Arms of the Senate or the Doorkeeper of the House, or the Secretary of the Senate or the Clerk of the House, "the other officers" of either body.

The only object of both these sections is to confer upon the two Houses the power to effect a complete organization at the time they may desire to do so, and under the rules which they may have made for that purpose and to change the personnel of such organizations whenever they may wish to change the same. Those, then, who adopt our construction are not at all affected by what the Senator from Mississippi has said about the phrases "in the absence of the Vice-President" and "when he shall discharge the duties of the office of President of the United States;" for, if these two phrases relate to the time when the Senate shall choose a President pro tempore they relate just as plainly to the time when "the other officers" shall be chosen, and such a construction compels the inference that the other officers, and also the President pro tempore of the Senate, could only be chosen in the absence of the Vice-President or when he is serving as President.

Such a proposition can not for a moment be entertained. It is very clear that the two latter clauses in relation to the absence of the Vice-President or his Presidential service do not relate to the time of the election, but to the occasion and time of the service to be rendered by the President pro tempore.

The first phrase is "in the absence of the Vice-President." Now, supposing the Vice-President is absent and a Senator is chosen here to preside in his absence under their construction, and during that absence the President dies and the Vice-President is fulfilling the duties of the President, is another election for President pro tempore necessary? Is it not plain that both the phrases refer, not to the time of election, but to the occasion and the time of service of the officer so chosen?

I am of the opinion that if the House and the Senate have synonymous powers and equal powers as to the choice of their own officers, we can elect a President pro tempore of the Senate when we elect a Secretary or whenever we choose to do so, whenever it becomes necessary, and that phrase "in the absence of the Vice-President or when he shall exercise the office of President of the United States" does not determine the time when we shall choose him, but it does determine the times when that officer shall serve.

Again, the Senator from Mississippi would have us make an actual, literal translation of the words "pro tempore." Let us have it as actual and as literal as you please, and it means "for the time." But what would it mean in this connection? For the time "embraced or included" in the absence of the Vice-President or when he shall exercise the office of President of the United States? "Pro tempore" alludes to the term of service of the President pro tempore. It does not allude to the time in which he is chosen or the time of his election, and the clauses which follow it form the contemporaneous and indeed the textual construction of what is meant by the phrase "pro tempore," "for the time." It means in the absence from here or the service of the Vice-President as President of the United States. Either of these is the time in which the officer who was chosen may serve as President of this body, but neither of these relates in any way to the time at which the Senate may select or choose that officer.

I call the attention of the Senate also to another consideration. The Senator from Mississippi remarked that the power under this section is a power given us to choose in the absence of the Vice-President, and he spoke of the practice the other way. I have always understood it to have been a matter of courtesy merely that the Vice-President should retire—simply a matter of courtesy and not a matter of necessity at all. He might as well be present, but as a matter of courtesy due to the position he does retire while the President pro tempore, his successor, is being chosen, not by any command or requirement of the Constitution, however.

The Senator from Mississippi claimed that we are only given this power to choose a President pro tempore in the absence and during the time of the absence of the Vice-President, because it is so inserted in the Constitution under the Senator's construction. Now, sir, I think it perfectly evident that without any such grant at all this body would have the right to choose a presiding officer. Supposing the Vice-President is absent, supposing the President pro tempore is absent, and a quorum of the Senate meets here, are we powerless? Can we not call a member of the body to the chair? We do call a member of the body to the chair, and in England the House of Commons calls a member of the body to the chair in just such emergencies.

Mr. GEORGE. That is in the case of a resolution being passed.

Mr. TURPIE. I am not speaking of resolutions or enactments; I am speaking of absences for an hour or half an hour or a whole day of a presiding officer or of a substituted presiding officer of the body in either House. I am not saying that from the common-law power, but from the fact that no presiding officer should have the right to destroy legislation and to block it simply by his absence, intentional or unintentional. From the general legislative power granted by the States to this body and by the people to the members of the other body, we have a right to select a person temporarily to preside in the absence of both the President pro tempore and the Vice-President, it being a necessary incident to the exercise of greater power. We exercise that power every day. Many a Senator here is called to the chair simply as a matter of courtesy to the Vice-President, and takes it. Is such a Senator the President pro tempore of this body? He is not. Does it take a constitutional grant of power to authorize that action of the officer presiding? Not at all. On the contrary, I do not think that the makers of the Constitution, eminent and profound statesmen and learned as they were, would have taken the trouble to insert a clause into the Constitution authorizing either the Senate or the House to temporarily organize itself for a day or for an hour in the absence of the regular presiding officer. It would have occurred to them in a moment, as it had a hundred times in their practice in the Confederate Congress and in the Colonial Congress, that such power was exercised without legislation required by constitutional enactment, and that it would have been a frivolous, trivial thing to put it into an instrument embodying provisions of the importance of the Federal Constitution. No; the makers of the Constitution recognized the parliamentary power of making ex necessitate a temporary presiding officer at any time in the absence of the regular presiding officer; and in the absence of a Vice-President they wished to make a permanent substitute for him and to make it a constitutional office, but not to prescribe the time of his election any more than that of any other officers, but only the time or occasion of his service.

Therefore I think that the office of President pro tempore of this body is a very high permanent position, one not provided for by statute. It is higher than any of the judges, any of the executive officers except the President and the Vice-President. It comes in rank next to them because it is named in the Constitution, and is provided for in that instrument, the fundamental law of the Government. And to think that a temporary or casual election should have been provided for in such a fundamental measure or that there should be a perpetual procession of temporary elections, would be beneath the dignity of the body, and I think a fatal misconception and misconstruction of the power under the clause in the Federal Constitution so often referred to.

Mr. GEORGE. I have only a few words to say in reply to the speech made by the Senator from Indiana.

In the first place, I want to correct him, as I have my notes now made by myself from a reading of the Globe about these debates in 1854 and 1856. In 1854 David R. Atchison, of Missouri, was President pro tempore of the Senate. He was absent and J. D. Bright, of Indiana, was elected. It was thought by some—

Mr. TURPIE. I will ask the favor of the Senator to allow me to interrupt him, as he asked the favor to interrupt me. I call his attention to the fact that I said nothing about those debates and know nothing about them.

Mr. GEORGE. It answers the Senator's argument very well, anyway.

David R. Atchison was President pro tempore, and he was absent. The Senate then elected Mr. Bright, and the question arose whether they could elect a temporary substitute for this absent pro tempore President, and the Senate held that, upon the election of Bright, Mr. Atchison's term ended.

In 1856 Mr. Bright was President of the Senate pro tempore and he appointed a substitute on the 9th day of June of that year. He wrote a letter to Mr. Stuart, of Michigan, asking him to take the Chair for the day. Mr. Bright was not in the building and therefore not constructively present, and the Senate held that he could not make any such appointment and they thereupon elected Mr. Stuart as President pro tempore, and it was held that Stuart's election superseded Bright's. They could not have two Presidents pro tempore. As Stuart did not want the office and as he understood very well that the Senate wanted Bright to be the President pro tempore of the Senate, he held the office about four or five days—I have forgotten which—and then, Bright having returned, he resigned and Bright was elected. That is all of the discussion of 1854 and 1856.

Now, in reply to the Senator from Indiana, about the power of the Senate to elect this officer at any time, I want to call attention to this fact: the very first time this question was raised in the Senate, in 1861, by Judge Collamer, of Vermont, he admitted that the President pro tempore must be elected during the absence of the Vice-President. He held that was the occasion on which the President pro tempore was to be elected, but that the absence of the Vice-President was the tenure of his office. The Senator from Indiana reverses all that, and he says that you may elect at any time, and that the absence of the Vice-President is not the tenure of the office.

Another thing: From the beginning of the Government down to the present day, including the election of Mr. INGALLS as President pro tempore of this body, now holding that office, a man never was elected President pro tempore except in the absence of the Vice-President. The Senator from Indiana seems to think that that was not done upon a construction that the power did not exist at any other time.

I call his attention to the speech made by Elbridge Gerry, which I quoted in my previous remarks made to the Senate, in which he replied to the suggestions made by Senators to him, asking him to vacate the chair as Vice-President so that they might elect a President pro tempore, it being conceded on all sides that they could not elect without his absence, giving a reason why he refused to accede to the request which I have just stated. He said that it was his duty to be there, it was his duty to preside, and when he did vacate the chair it was only a few minutes before the adjournment of the Senate, it being admitted on all sides that the election could not take place until that time.

I call the Senator's attention to these facts so that he may look through the debates and the proceedings of Congress from the very beginning down to the present time, and he has the honor of making the first suggestion which ever has been made that a President pro tempore was elected in the absence of the Vice-President simply as a matter of courtesy to him. On the contrary, from the beginning down to the present time, without a single break, it has been held, and was so held by this Senate when we elected the present occupant of the chair, that the power to elect did not exist until the Senate was in a state of disorganization by the absence of the Vice-President.

Mr. EVARTS. If any other Senator desires to speak on this question I will yield the floor.

Mr. TURPIE. I should like to be heard a moment, if the Senator pleases. I do not know that I am entitled to the distinguished position assigned me by the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. GEORGE. Yes, you are.

Mr. TURPIE. I think I am not. I think the position taken by myself is a familiar one in the debates in Congress on the subject heretofore. I have not heard any one here dispute that this question is one of fair discussion which has never been closed. There is no binding custom, there never has been any stare decisis, and we are discussing now what does the Constitution mean? The whole clause reads:

The Senate shall choose their other officers, and also a President pro tempore in the absence of the Vice-President or when he shall exercise the office of President of the United States.

If the Senator's construction is right we must choose our "other officers" in the absence of the Vice-President; that is very plain, just the same as we choose the President pro tempore, and we must "choose our other officers" when he shall exercise the office of President of the United States. The construction which the Senator puts upon the section is entirely ungrammatical, illogical, and it is not supported by a single authority—I speak now of judicial construction—by this body. It is acquiesced in by practice, because every Vice-President has had the courtesy to retire when the consideration of the question of his successor was open, but that retirement is not necessary and is not to be found in a legal construction of our own powers.

Mr. EVARTS. Mr. President, I will briefly state the reasons which have brought the Committee on Privileges and Elections to prefer this form of the exercise of the duty of the Senate, and then will leave it, as I hope, to a vote to be taken.

Sensors will notice that this is a mere declaration of the competency of the Senate to choose a permanent President, who should take the chair in the absence of the Vice-President or whenever he should act as President of the United States. It does not preclude in the least that the Senate should instantly upon any election limit that election to the then present absence of the Vice-President if it should be desired, but the declaration of the power of the Senate to establish an office of President pro tempore is the object of this resolution.

Now for the historical situation. It is a little difficult to say, with all our veneration for the framers of the Constitution, that in putting in operation this new Constitution for a new government those wise and good men at the first meeting under the Government knew more about the Constitution and its workings than their descendants after a hundred years of observation of it. The framers of the Constitution never claimed for themselves one moment or authority for their descendants in the Government that the Constitution, as they had left it in the executed instrument, was to be construed except by reason and experience as their descendants should find occasion. When, therefore, an appeal is made to a sub silentio course of procedure, by which the Senate took up pro re nata, and only pro re nata, the question whether they should choose a pro tempore President or one for the occasion of the then expected absence, they find no decision of this Senate upon a resolution such as is now presented for a definite determination. True, we have had one debate, the same as thus far we have had a debate in this Senate, and that was in 1861, in order to define this competency of the Senate, and the debate ended as has been stated.

The arguments on one side were presented by eminent men in favor of the resolution that this committee has presented and by other Senators to the contrary opinion, and there ended the matter. There was no resolution, there was no determination, but, as I have stated before, the whole burden of the debate shows that all the reason was in favor of the construction of this clause that the committee now gives to it, and the only answer was that up to that time it had not been advocated and had not been determined, but that the custom of the Senate had been satisfied without dealing with every case pro re nata and without harm to the public service. Now we have a situation in which we find, if this competency exists in the Senate, much reason why it should be put in exercise.

Let us understand for a moment a singular difference in the constitution of society and of population at the time of the formation of the Constitution and the present time. Then no man ever came here to the Senate, no man ever came here as Vice-President and presided in the Senate without the expectation, almost the necessity, of remaining permanently at the seat of government without any casual absences, unless under some great stress of circumstances. When it was as much of a task and a burden to leave and return home as it was to come, there was no occasion for casual intercurrent absences to be looked into; there were none such in the contemplation or in the practice of the Senate.

Now, as we know perfectly well, under the system of our intercourse through transportation and by telegraph, there come to be every now and then occasionally short absences that are contemplated either by Senators or by the Vice-President of the United States. It is thought by us unseemly that on casual and unpremeditated occasions we should be called suddenly into the election of a President to take the chair when there may not be twenty Senators in their places or any considerable number that are accessible at the moment. We are to look, then, at the Constitution and see what it means, and finding this power we find a reason for exercising this faculty.

The Senator from Mississippi hangs wholly upon his own interpretation of this clause, not on any ancestral and reverent attitude about the past, and he takes so peremptory an attitude as to ask whether I had a right or the Senate had a right to strike out a part of the Constitution. I made no response to that request. I have never asked and no Senator has ever asked that a clause of the Constitution should be stricken out. But the Senator was not satisfied to put it there on my silence, but he stated again that I did not dare to say it. Well, Mr. President, it was not a question of personal courage.

Mr. GEORGE. Oh, no; I did not mean that.

Mr. EVARTS. I treated the question just as it deserved. Nothing I had ever said, nothing I had ever hinted, nothing that anybody had ever said or had ever hinted, had suggested a right to strike out a clause of the Constitution, and I left the question unanswered. But the Senator followed it up by saying that I did not dare to answer!

Mr. President, what does this clause mean? Those who stickle for the technical construction of this sentence would have it read thus, very differently from what it does read. They would have it read, "And also in the absence of the Vice-President, or in case he shall exercise the duty of President, the Senate may choose a President pro tempore." Does the clause read in that way? Is the substance, is the gist, is the meaning that our power arises in the absence of the Vice-President? No, the natural meaning, the literal meaning, the common-sense meaning, is exactly in the opposite way. It is thus: The previous clause, having furnished us by the Constitution a President within the powers of the Senate, which, if unobserved by the Constitution at all, would have been the general right of a deliberative body to provide for its officers, including its presiding officer when there was not one provided for it, then proceeds to say, "and the Senate shall choose its other officers, and a President pro tempore."

That is the function, that is the power, and if you stop there you have the whole deposited power. But now, in order to guard against the least suspicion of the dominancy of the Vice-President, although not a member of this body, the provision is that this pro tempore condition, this pro tempore action, this necessity of having a presiding officer is because the constitutional President of the Senate, the Vice-President of the United States, is withdrawn. When we choose any of our officers, we elect them to fulfill the functions and satisfy the obligations that are imposed. This function, this obligation is to preside in the absence of the Vice-President or in case of his permanent elevation to the discharge of the duties of President of the United States, temporarily or permanently. We therefore have what the Senator from Mississippi I believe will admit is within the competency of this Senate, the power to read the Constitution and know what it means. Quod necessarie intelligitur non deest—what is understood in the reading is not wanting from the words.

Mr. President, it is said that this is a question only of convenience, of dignity, of orderly proceeding. If we have the power, it is a good ground for our exercising it if we find all these reasons. If we have not the power, all the reasons which we may imagine, powerful, dangerous, injurious, could not give the power, but they might aid us in reading the clause to find what it meant for great occasions, for little occasions, for necessities, and for convenience.

Now, one can imagine very easily that in our habits of casual absences, of a telegram arriving at night, and the Vice-President absenting himself because of a casual misfortune to himself or his family, that we should be in an awkward condition for the moment. But with this habit of occasional absences, which can not be imputed at all as out of the ordinary course and propriety of conduct on the part of either Senators or the President or Vice-President, we should have some disorder in finding out in the signing of bills for half a day who was the President pro tempore and how he came to be chosen.

Mr. President, the question is a plain one, that we have power to choose an officer, and an officer as to which "pro tempore" means the occasion for which the necessity arises and the duty is given.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is the Senate ready for the question upon agreeing to the resolution? The Chair understands the amendment suggested by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. TURPIE] has been accepted by unanimous consent.

Mr. EVARTS. Yes, sir.

Mr. GEORGE. I should like to hear the resolution read as amended.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be read as modified.

The Secretary read as follows:

Resolved, That it is competent for the Senate to elect a President pro tempore, who shall hold the office during the pleasure of the Senate and until another is elected, and shall execute the duties thereof during all future absences of the Vice-President until the Senate shall otherwise order.

The resolution was agreed to.

AID TO COMMON SCHOOLS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The consideration of the unfinished business will be resumed.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 185) to aid in the establishment and temporary support of common schools.

Mr. BLAIR. The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, the Senator from New Hampshire desires me to make some remarks on this bill. I have argued this bill at three sessions of the Senate. My opinions are very well known on the subject. I do not say that I have made an exhaustive argument upon it, but I have made an argument which presents all the views I entertain on this subject.

There is some falling away on this side of the Chamber from a support of the bill. I desire to say that I have heard nothing and seen nothing which lessens my interest in the passage of the bill.

Its constitutionality has been assailed with great vigor by my friends on this side of the Chamber. I think all the arguments they have presented have been answered over and over again, conclusively answered, by speeches made by my colleagues on this side of the Chamber on former sessions; and good arguments on the same side, that is, on my side, have been made at this session by Senators on the other side of the Chamber—the Senator from Delaware [Mr. HIGGINS] and others. I have no desire to go into that argument again. I did think at one time after my friend from Texas [Mr. COKE], who sits before me, and who finds so much vitality in this bill that he has to kill it every session by a long speech—I did think, as that heresy in constitutional law maintained by him had made its appearance on my side of the Chamber once more, that I would say something in reply, but I have been relieved of the necessity of doing so by the speech of the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES], who, I think, has removed all the little straws placed in the way by the able and learned speech of my friend from Texas.

I desire to say simply this, and I will sit down, for I am tired any way—I have spoken too long to-day—that from the beginning—and I want Senators on the other side to understand it—I have regarded this measure of the Senator from New Hampshire as a generous offer made by the Northern States to the Southern States.

The bill, in its distribution of the funds, is drawn on purpose, as was the bill drawn by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] about the proceeds of the sales of public lands, to give the Southern States an advantage in the distribution of the fund. Therefore I regard it as an offering on the part of the North to the South. I am not here to ask alms for the people of Mississippi. I shall not go into the spurning business, as my friend from West Virginia [Mr. FAULKNER] did the other day, when he got on his high-horse and proposed to spurn all bribes and all that sort of thing. I do not think there is any bribe in it, but I do not feel that I have any right, when I look at the condition of a large portion of the black people of Mississippi, to reject an offer like this when it is made.

I do not regard that this offer is made on dishonorable terms to the people of Mississippi. I think—I will confess that much—that possibly there was too much of jealousy and of suspicion in some amendments which have been put to the bill by the Senate heretofore, but I am willing to waive that. I believe that the donor of the fund has a right to prescribe conditions, and I believe that the donor of the fund has a right to make such examination as will determine whether the conditions have been complied with. The Committee of the Whole has amended, or has recommended the amendment, and I believe it has been adopted by the Senate in one respect, that was particularly obnoxious to me and to the people of the South.

I voted for the bill, though with that provision in it requiring the filing of school books with the Commissioner of Education, but men like my friend from Texas [Mr. COKE], who see the devil behind every bush connected with this thing, and who see all sorts of usurpations and wrongs to be perpetrated upon the people of the South—I thought I would ask them in committee to remove that trouble out of the way, so that the Senator from Texas would not find a devil behind that bush; and that is the extent now of the effort, as was charged by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER], to strike out that clause to purchase Southern support. That clause was stricken out, if I have a right to say so, and I think I have, in committee on my motion, and it was acceded to by every member of the committee, Republican and Democrat, with one exception, and as to that I am in doubt. It was a generous action on the part of the Republican members of the committee to meet the wishes of myself and my colleagues on the Democratic side.

Mr. WASHBURN. I should like to interrupt the Senator as to his statement in regard to the unanimous action of the committee with regard to striking out the language to which he refers as to the submission of text-books. I understood the Senator to say that it was the unanimous act of the committee?

Mr. GEORGE. With one exception, and as to that I did not remember. I was referring to the Senator. That is the way I stated it.

Mr. WASHBURN. I did not exactly understand the Senator's allusion to the action of the committee.

Mr. GEORGE. I do not remember how the Senator from Minnesota voted. I am set right now. The Senator from Minnesota, I understand now, was against it.

The Southern people are having a rather hard road to travel, and I am sorry to be obliged to say so. You Senators on the other side make it by your conduct and your declarations here a great deal harder than it otherwise would be. There is a condition of affairs in the South that you gentlemen who live in the North have no conception of—not a particle. You sit serenely in your homes, far away from strife and trouble, far away from the men and women of the South, and starting from one text in the Scripture, and I have only a part of that, "that God made all men of one blood," or something like that—that is the idea—you imagine that there is nothing in the South except devilish bulldozing and force and innocent suffering. There is no danger where you are. I thank God there is not. If my people are to drink the bitter cup, it is no reason why I should wish you an equal calamity. I do not do it.

But, as I was proceeding to say, removed in distance from the scene, you know nothing of the situation. You see an account in the newspapers of some riot or race disturbance, and you read it always that the Southern white people are oppressing the blacks. You have no faith, you have no confidence in the political integrity and disposition of the people of the South to work out this problem with safety to the country and to themselves—not a bit of it. You are ready to believe every idle and infamous rumor that is wafted by the press to your midst which blackens us.

You think, and I hope to God you may be right, though I doubt it, that the solving of this terrible problem, which you do not understand, is to be found in the education of the negro. I hope you are right. I dare not cherish the apprehensions I have on that subject. I dare not give shelter and refuge to the apprehensions which I sometimes have, which I almost always have, as to what will come in the future. No man knows the future. You abuse us, you criticise us, you denounce us, when you do not know, when you will not take the trouble to learn the terrible problem that we have before us.

I am not to be driven from the path of duty I have marked out for myself by a sense or consciousness—and I have that sense and I feel that consciousness—of the wrong which is continually day after day being perpetrated upon our people. I intend to pursue the path which the lights I have before me indicate is right. The people of Mississippi have shared their taxation for education, 90 per cent. or 95 per cent. of which is paid by the whites, in the proportion of three-fifths to the blacks and two-fifths to the whites. So far as in me lies, I intend to do the best I can to elevate, to advance, and to qualify the unfit population who by the chances of war and the terrible passions and animosities created by war have been inflicted upon the people of the South as voters.

So, then, standing here as I do, listening day by day, as I have been compelled to listen, to abuse which has been poured upon the people of the South, when I have seen this Senate, which I have so often heard spoken of here as the highest legislative body in the world, turned into a political cesspool, into which all these charges of guilt and venomous allegations of this character are poured—notwithstanding all that, I intend to pursue the path of duty as I understand it. That path is, if there be power to elevate, to fit for the high purposes of social order and of government the negro, that policy shall be pursued. I intend to do it. I hope I am understood.

If you would keep your intermeddling from outside of the State of Mississippi; if you would allow these diverse races, locally intermingled, and yet in all the attributes which distinguish men from one another as far apart as the poles—if you would allow us to work out our own salvation without your external aid, I might add, your infernal intermeddling, we might at last work out something; but I do not expect that. As long as $450,000,000—and I believe our revenues and expenditures will amount to that much this year—as long as this immense sum is the annual expenditure of the Government and as long as the great honors and the great offices of this country are the prizes to be fought for in national elections, I expect nothing, I hope for nothing from your forbearance. I know that the love of power is the strongest passion of the human heart, and next to that is the love of money. These united will make you, I fear, forever unwilling, and unable if you were willing, to look at our condition as it is.

So, first I want to tell you, placing my sole reliance upon the virtue, the good sense, the nerve, and the patriotism of the people of Mississippi for salvation, that when you come and make an offer which may tend to help us, I will not refuse it. I accept it, so far as my vote is concerned. I told my friend from New Hampshire, the author of this bill, that I should say to the Senate when I spoke that if my vote would pass this bill against the vote of the majority of the Senators from the Northern States, I would move to reconsider it. I will not vote to put a burden upon you. I am satisfied, though, from a canvass on this side of the Senate that the bill can not pass unless it is supported by a majority of the Northern Senators. In that condition of things, I shall vote for it cheerfully, vote for it because I hope it may prove of benefit to the people whom I represent, vote for it because it appears to be a generous and munificent offering on the part of the Northern States to the people of the South. In that view and believing it to be a beneficent measure, I shall cast my vote for it.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I have too much at heart the passage of this most important and beneficent measure to respond to any challenge while it is under discussion to a debate upon the great questions which separate the two parties in this country or which divide in opinion the gentlemen who at present, with, I think, one exception, represent the Southern States in the Senate from those who represent the part of the country to which I belong. Whatever there is in the speech of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE] which contains a taunt—

Mr. GEORGE. Contains what?

Mr. HOAR. A taunt.

Mr. GEORGE. I did not intend any.

Mr. HOAR. Whatever there is in it which is provocative of anger or of a just and righteous indignation, so far as I am concerned, is to pass unanswered now. The picture which he has drawn of the state of mind of the representatives of a large majority of the States of his country must stand or fall in the judgment of the people upon its truth as they see it, without any attempt to efface any of its colors on my part. I have risen, therefore, simply to ask the honorable Senator who thinks we so misjudge him, and that we ought to leave this question which he has spoken to, of the condition of the two races at the South, to him and to those who agree with him to settle, and that their plan is so much better than any other—I ask if he will be good enough to state for the information of the Senate and the country, in connection with what he has said, what that plan is? What is it? Does it embrace the absolute security to every man who, under the Constitution and laws of this country, has a title to vote, of that title, without interference by force or fraud or in any other way? Does it embrace the security to the colored people of the South of the same fair trial by jury when they are charged with offenses which their several constitutions, as well as the Constitution of the United States, prescribe for white citizens and for all citizens in terms? What are the things which he wants done by the proper legal authority, whatever it is, which, as he understands the matter, differ from the things we want done? That I wish he would tell us.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, the Senator asks me several questions. I have proposed no plan. I have thought that the Senator from Massachusetts as well as other Senators in this body could understand the difficulty of having orderly, good, secure government with two diverse races, differing in all things, and especially when the passions of the ignorant race were inflamed by intermeddling from the outside.

Mr. President, the theory of this Government is—and if that theory be false your Government must come down—that the people are capable of self-government, that the people of each State are capable not only of discharging State duties and performing State powers, but also of exercising their share of national powers. There is no such thing in this country under our Constitution as wise States capable of the guardianship of inferior States. There is no such thing under our theory of government of States in wardship to other and better States. But yet, unless I have misread and misunderstood the history of recent years, the claim is that there are some, the New England States and others, wise, great, good, capable of discharging their full duties to their own people and to the Federal Union, and capable also of guardianship over their more unfortunate sisters.

That is your theory; that is your practice; and in your blind zeal—I will not call it by a worse name—to rectify all wrongs wherever they may be, in your assumed wisdom and goodness to correct the misfortunes and the short-comings of others, you transgress the comity of the Constitution; you incite in the Southern section of the Union the dagger and the torch. If we of the South are unfit (as we are not) for self-government, we do not need your tutelage. When under our system of local autonomy in each of the States, you enter with your superior wisdom and your superior morality, as you assume, you destroy all harmony, you make co-operation between diverse races utterly impossible, and then turn you around and abuse the unfortunate people whose condition you have made tenfold worse than it would have been but for your interference, and then this state of affairs is made the occasion for renewed interference.

Does the Senator from Massachusetts remember that in 1883, I believe it was, when the Chinese exclusion bill was before the Senate, learned Senators on that side of the Chamber, notably the Senator from Nevada [Mr. JONES] and the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER], pointed out some of the difficulties in which their people were involved, when their communities were composed not only of heterogeneous races, but of antagonistic races? Does the Senator remember that the great Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] asked him how he would like to have a million of the inhabitants of the Dark Continent settle in Massachusetts, declaring for himself that he wanted no such people in Vermont? That question the Senator from Massachusetts has never answered to this day. Easy it is for him in a State, the richest in the Union, millions and millions of dollars being poured into the private coffers of her people by a fiscal system which enriches them and robs us; easy it is for him with colleges in every county, probably, in his State, with high schools everywhere, with a population of which I believe I heard somebody say the other day, so far as native Americans were concerned, only 3 per cent. were illiterates—I think I heard something of that sort—

Mr. HOAR. Three-tenths of 1 per cent., I think it is.

Mr. GEORGE. Three-tenths of 1 per cent.—enterprising, intelligent, with Anglo-Saxon blood in their veins, with no diverse and inferior race to disturb them—easy it is for him to content himself with that serenity of temper which comes from a consciousness that, however the storm may beat upon distant Alabama and Mississippi and Louisiana, it can not reach him.

Mr. President, the Senator asked me some specific questions, and I will now turn my attention to them. I want everybody to vote, but I want to show that the Senator from Massachusetts denies to my State and other Southern States, claiming it for his own, the power to prescribe for themselves the rules by which electors shall be made.

Does not the Senator remember when, in Massachusetts, with the population to which I have alluded—educated, progressive, with but a small sprinkle of illiteracy—the people found it necessary that there should be an educational test for voters, and that he himself and his party concurred in putting upon the bills to readmit Mississippi and Virginia and Texas and Arkansas and the others to representation in the Union a provision to the effect that ignorance, vice, brutality of characters should never, never exclude a man from the polls in those States?

I see the Senator smiles. I expect that if there be any one thing that gives him supreme satisfaction it is the reflection that whilst he has secured for Massachusetts a good and orderly and a safe government he has denied to the States that I have named all opportunity of doing it. That is true. If it is any satisfaction to you, take it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator must address the Chair.
Mr. GEORGE. I beg pardon; I withdraw what I said. If I be consistent with the rules of the Senate that what I said out of order may be stricken out, I ask that it be done.

I should like to have in Mississippi, if I could get it, at whatever cost of influence and power in national affairs, a chance to so organize government that there would be and could be safe, orderly protection to all. The Senator would deny it to us. He claims that the power of a State to secure itself against improper suffrage is a peculiar prerogative of his own section.

As to his other question in regard to the administration of justice to the blacks in Mississippi, I have never known, and I have had some opportunity to know, any distinction in the administration of justice in Mississippi between blacks and whites, except that I have seen both in the jury-box and on the bench a leniency accorded to the blacks, on account of their inferior and ignorant position, which was not accorded to the whites. In Mississippi I venture to say that not one black man has been tried for a felony since 1876 where there were not black men on the jury. I ask my colleague if I am correct in that statement.

Mr. WALTHALL. Except when the prisoner wished to be tried by a white jury.

Mr. GEORGE. My colleague informs me of something that I had forgotten. There are occasions when the black prisoner expresses to his counsel a wish to be tried by a white jury. Those are the exceptions to the remark which I have made.

What right had the Senator from Massachusetts to impute by the questions which he propounded to me that there was any difference made in the administration of justice in the State of Mississippi between the whites and blacks? I know there are certain crimes committed in Mississippi that when committed by black or white there comes a swift and terrible vengeance in the shape of mob law. I deplore that. I know, too, and I will confess it (it is as well to tell it), when there is a conflict between whites and blacks and blood is shed, the race instincts and the race animosities produce reprisals. Where in the world, where in all of civilized and savage life of which we have any knowledge, has not that same thing occurred and does not occur regularly? Were there no mobs in California and the other Western States where the conflict was incited by the presence of the mild Mongolian?

The Senator expects a millennium in the South with all these troubles, with all this difficulty of harmonizing antagonistic and diverse races. That is what he expects. He will never get it. I pray God that there shall be that much at least of virtue and wisdom in the American people that there shall be allowed time, opportunity, just means, without impertinent interference, to settle the grandest and gravest problem that was ever presented to the human mind. Easy it is for men who know nothing of actual conditions, men who are familiar only with government carried on by the highest type of the Anglo-Saxon race, to criticize and to denounce those who are differently situated.

Sir, I tell the Senator that I am in favor of giving the same justice to the white as to the black and to the black as to the white, with one single exception. I would do as I know the courts and juries of Mississippi do, administer the law more mercifully and more leniently where the ignorant black man is involved.

Mr. President, I have been betrayed by the remarks of the Senator and probably by my own feelings a great deal further than I expected to go. This trouble is ever present in every Southern man's mind. It is in mine. Probably I have said some indiscreet things. If I have said any harsh things or any insulting things, I beg pardon. I did not intend to insult any one; I did not want to harrow anybody's feelings or to hurt them.

But going back to this bill; if the bill can do us good I am willing to accept it. I hope it may. I shall vote for it. I would not vote for it, though, if I did not know that it would require a majority of the Northern Senators upon this floor in order to pass it, and for the simple reason—and I hope I shall not be misunderstood on that point—that I do not care to be here a member of the American Senate voting upon the Northern States of this Union a burden to help the Southern States which the Northern States themselves do not want.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, the Senator from Mississippi may be quite sure that nothing he has said requires any withdrawal or modification on his part for fear he has hurt my feelings. I am not much in the habit of being disturbed by angry or excited speeches from anybody. The only thing I have to complain of in the honorable Senator from Mississippi is that he has not answered my question.

Mr. GEORGE. I have.

Mr. HOAR. While he has talked about, I will not say everything else on the face of the earth or under the earth, the simple question which I put to the Senator remains without an answer. I think it is rather hard for a Senator to get up and tell us that we are very ignorant of a certain subject which we are obliged to deal with in our public function, that he and those who live in his neighborhood know all about it, and that what we say and do tends very much to interfere with them in their schemes for dealing with this subject; and then when he is asked if he will kindly explain to us what his plan or scheme is for dealing with this terrible condition of things which he has depicted in such glowing colors, and how it differs from ours, he answers with such a volcano as that of which we have just witnessed the eruption.

Mr. President, our plan, the Massachusetts plan, the Northern plan, the Republican plan, the American plan of dealing with this American problem which confronts us to-day, is exactly this, as I understand it. Without looking to see what State gets an advantage in the process, without looking too closely to see whether anybody else is doing or failing to do their duty, where we see a mass of illiterate American children growing up to be citizens and voters and sovereigns in this country of ours without getting the necessary education which will enable them to discharge the duties which that sovereignty brings with it, we propose to provide the means as far as we can for curing that evil.

The children, black or white, who are growing up in these Southern States are Americans. They are to be Americans; they are to remain Americans; and if they discharge wrongly or ignorantly or criminally the great function of sharing in the American administration of this Republic every American suffers. You can not touch the nerve in Mississippi with vice or crime or ignorance that the nerve in Massachusetts does not respond and feel as swiftly and as surely as the mandate of the brain of the Senator from Mississippi is conveyed to his finger-tips.

Now, that is our plan. Another part of our plan is this: We propose that the law-making power in this country and the law-executing power in this country shall, so far as we can influence it, protect the right of every American citizen, poor or rich, foreign born or native born, black or white, to cast the ballot which the Constitution confers upon him and to have that ballot counted. So far as that is a matter of State concern, we expect to leave it to the States which it concerns. So far as it is a matter of national concern in the election of national officers, we propose to provide for it as far as we can by the exertion of national forces.

We propose, in addition to these acts of public authority, to do what we can in our private capacity to aid the Senator from Mississippi or any other Senator, to aid the humanity and the intelligence of those States, so far as they desire and will accept it, by private benefaction. The wealth of New England, to which the honorable Senator has referred, has been poured out and shall be poured out like water to aid in removing the ignorance or the poverty or the suffering of American citizenship anywhere whenever that will be accepted and can be done without an affront to its independence and manhood.

That is our plan and that is the whole of it; and I challenge the Senator from Mississippi to discover any other plan proposed, enacted, debated, thought of throughout the length and breadth of the North.

When I ask the honorable Senator to tell me in what his plan differs from that, he answers me as we have heard. He says, in the first place, when Mississippi and Virginia were readmitted we refused to allow Virginia and Mississippi to impose upon themselves the educational test of the right of suffrage, the qualification which he would have been glad to propose and which we impose upon our citizenship.

The Senator, I think, is very much mistaken. There is not a word in the act of readmission of those States, which I hold in my hand, or in the act of readmission of any other State, or in the constitutional limitations to which they are obliged to submit themselves to-day, which prevents any Southern State that chooses, or any Northern State that chooses, from placing in its constitution an educational test of the right of suffrage.

Mr. GEORGE. Will the Senator send me that volume? [The volume was handed.] Will the Senator give me the page?

Mr. HOAR. I have not got the page. I did not look at it. You will have to look in the index.

Mr. GEORGE. I will find it.

Mr. HOAR. What that statute prohibits and what the Constitution of the United States prohibits is that you shall impose any different test or obligation upon one American citizen from that which you impose upon any other, by reason of his race or color. Did the Senator from Mississippi mean to be understood that he desired to have imposed upon the people of Mississippi and the people of the South a reading and writing test like that of Massachusetts which shall apply to every white man as well as to every black man? Does the Senator hear my question?

Mr. GEORGE rose.

Mr. HOAR. Does the Senator mean to be understood that he favors the imposition of an educational test in Mississippi and throughout the South which shall apply to every white man and to every black man?

Mr. GEORGE. Now, I will answer that.

Mr. HOAR. Well.

Mr. GEORGE. I have not expressed any opinion upon that subject at all. I have said to the Senate, and I shall prove it before this debate ends, that the Senator and his party in Congress, he co-operating personally, in the act which readmitted Mississippi and Virginia and Texas into the Union put in as a fundamental condition that we should not do that.

Mr. HOAR. Now, that I deny.

Mr. GEORGE. Well, sir, we shall see. We will try that by the record.

Mr. HOAR. We shall see; but that is not our present proposition.

Mr. GEORGE. That is mine.

Mr. HOAR. I will see whether it is yours. I asked the Senator from Mississippi to state to the Senate how his plan of dealing with this subject differed from ours, and the Senator from Mississippi answered, not by telling me how he differed with us, but by saying that in 1870, twenty years ago, we imposed upon them in the act reorganizing their States a test which we did not apply to ourselves. That is of no sort of importance in the matter of answering the question that I put, though, as I said, I do not so understand it. There is nothing in the original act of readmission of those States, nothing in the general reconstruction acts, nothing in the Constitution of the United States, which prevents the State of Mississippi from doing to-day or of having done within the last twenty years exactly what the State of Massachusetts has done in her constitution.

Mr. GEORGE. I mean before this debate closes —

Mr. HOAR. I will give way for the Senator to read the clause.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair takes this occasion to state that a colloquial debate under circumstances like those prevailing at present is liable to degenerate into disorder.

Mr. GEORGE. I beg pardon, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair therefore begs that Senators will address themselves to the Presiding Officer.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I have addressed no other person or authority.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair was not criticising the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. GEORGE. I beg pardon for what I did.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Neither Senator was being criticised by the Chair. The statement was general.

Mr. HOAR. If the Senator from Mississippi will read what he claims to be a support of the statement which he has made, I will listen to the reading now.

Mr. GEORGE. Will you give me the floor to comment on it as well as to read it?

Mr. HOAR. No, sir; I will not.

Mr. GEORGE. When you get through—I beg pardon, Mr. President—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair again asks Senators to address the Presiding Officer.

Mr. GEORGE. I beg your pardon, Mr. President. When the Senator gets through I will answer him.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will then recognize the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. GEORGE. And I shall answer him in such a way that I think he will not make a statement of that sort again in the Senate.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator will not tell us whether he has got any plan for dealing with this subject which differs from what I have stated as mine. I asked him whether his plan included the security to every person constitutionally entitled to vote in the casting and the counting of his vote, and to that interrogatory the Senator was entirely silent. I asked him another question, and that was whether his plan included the securing to the blacks in the State of Mississippi the same protection of their life and property which the laws and usages of that community secure to their white fellow-citizens, and the Senator answers me by a statement, which I am very glad to hear and am very glad to believe, that in the ordinary administration of criminal justice the people of this race heretofore so unfortunate are treated with a kindness which is not always extended to offenders of our own race; and that I have no doubt is true as the two Senators from Mississippi state it. The Senator's colleague stated it the other day. I should expect from a people of which those two Senators are types and representatives that kind of generosity in the ordinary dealing of justice between man and man.

That is not what I referred to. I was speaking of the case where the black man suffers violence or wrong with intent to prevent the exercise of his political functions. I was the chairman of an investigating committee appointed by this body to take testimony in regard to the transactions in the county of Copiah, where for a week preceding an election men who were admitted to be the foremost white citizens of that county, some of them holding offices of trust and confidence, went around at midnight and visited the cabins of negroes, and some of them were slain, others were badly injured, others were flogged, for the purpose of compelling them to absent themselves from the polls at the coming election. There was no question of the facts on the part of any member of that committee, Democrat or Republican, and yet there never was a finger lifted to bring those offenders to justice.

Can the Senator from Mississippi point out in the entire length and breadth of his State a single instance of a white offender punished for an injury to a black man inflicted for the sake of affecting the black man's conduct in an election? Until he is able to answer that question in the affirmative, when the Senator provoked this debate by a taunt upon this side of the Chamber that they were intermeddling with schemes of their betters, at any rate with men who were wiser than they on this subject, I think I have the right to inquire whether the Senator's plan proposes the legal suppression of things like that.

Mr. President, I think the Senator from Mississippi does a great injustice both to the intelligence and the purpose of his Northern fellow citizens and associates.

Mr. GEORGE. I hope I do.

Mr. HOAR. So far as I understand the sentiment of the people I represent, the one desire of their hearts, a desire greater than that which the Senator thinks is the strongest passion in human nature, that for political power, a desire greater than that which he thinks is the next strongest, greater than the desire for the accumulation of money, is the desire that they may see in this country a peaceful, contented, prosperous, happy, and wealthy South; that that part of the country as well as the rest of the country may reach a state of things where every American, white or black, will live in peace in his dwelling, will be clothed with American citizenship as with a robe of honor, when the urn in which he casts his ballot shall be sacred as a sacramental vessel, and when men shall live together of diverse races and diverse occupations and diverse conditions in peace and in friendship and in glory as befits American citizens.

I do not believe in this doctrine of irreconcilable antagonism between races of men. The Senator from Mississippi in one breath talks about that and in the next breath says that the white men of the South are the truest friends and the best friends of their colored fellow-citizens. The two statements can not stand together. One or the other must fail and fall.

Mr. President, I am sorry that while this bill in which I take so deep an interest is on its passage we have been betrayed on either side into anything like a political discussion. I have not spoken upon this bill or taken part in its discussion this winter or in the last Congress, because it was in better hands, and because, in the assignment of duties among different Senators, a different class of duties has been assigned to me by my associates here, but it is dearer to my heart than anything which is now proposed or discussed before the American people.

I would be glad, if I could secure its passage and if I could be assured, as I am assured, of the great consequences which I think will come from it, to go out of public life to-morrow and never to be heard of again among my countrymen. I had the honor to draught and to conduct through the House of Representatives more than once the original bill from which this bill of the Senator from New Hampshire took its leading ideas and its rise. I had the honor to support it more than once and to secure its passage when it came into the Senate, and I should be very sorry if anything I have said or anything the Senator from Mississippi has said should have a tendency in the least to diminish the probability of its final and successful accomplishment.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I am obliged to the Senator from Massachusetts for any kind words he may say with reference to the people of the State of Mississippi and the South, but there is a little issue between the Senator and myself about the bonds which that Senator has placed upon the arms and the hands and the feet of the people of Mississippi that it is well now to settle.

I asserted, and the Senator denied, that in the acts of Congress readmitting Mississippi, Virginia, and Texas into the Union there were fundamental conditions which prevented Mississippi from enjoying the right which Massachusetts has of prescribing an educational qualification. Now I will read:

That the State of Mississippi is admitted to representation in Congress as one of the States of the Union, upon the following fundamental conditions: First, That the constitution of Mississippi shall never be so amended or changed as to deprive any citizen or class of citizens of the United States of the right to vote who are entitled to vote by the constitution herein recognized, except as a punishment for such crimes as are now felonies at common law, whereof they shall have been duly convicted under laws equally applicable to all the inhabitants of said State.

I believe I have here the constitution of Mississippi which was thus recognized and which is made the eternal and never-ending law by this act. I will read one clause from the constitution of Mississippi for the benefit of the Senator:

No property or educational qualification shall ever be required for any person to become an elector.

How does that stand with the statement made by the Senator? It is not only true, Mr. President, that we are bound, notwithstanding the denial of the Senator from Massachusetts, but it so happens that the Senator himself was an active agent and participant in fixing this fundamental condition upon the people of the State of Mississippi. What did he mean by a fundamental condition? He meant, as all those who voted with him said, that it should never be changed by the people of Mississippi, and yet the Senator comes here to-day, after having been one of the main instruments in inserting this fundamental condition in the act which readmitted Mississippi to representation in Congress, and denies that any such act has been passed.

Now, we will go on a little further, Mr. President, to show you how they bound our hands, how they meant that the barbaric foot of the ignorant African should always be placed upon the neck of the Anglo-Saxon white man.

Mr. GORMAN. What is the date of that act?

Mr. GEORGE. February 23, 1870.

Mr. HARRIS. Is that the act of Congress?

Mr. GEORGE. This is the act of Congress. Further—

Provided, That any alteration of said constitution, prospective in its effects, may be made in regard to the time and place of residence of voters.

Here is the general declaration that every class of citizens recognized in this constitution (and that embraces all over twenty-one years of age, residents of the State—I can find that clause if the Senator desires it—residents in the State one year and in the county, I believe, three months) shall be electors; and that is the exception they give us. No other change shall ever be made except you may change the time of the residence of the voter.

Now, what does the Senator say about that? He was an active agent in passing that law. If I have not misread—I speak doubtfully as to that and subject to correction—if I have not misread or misremembered, the Senator, in the debate on these fundamental conditions inserted in the act admitting Mississippi to representation in the Congress, contended in the House of Representatives for the constitutional validity of these fundamental conditions.

I do not want to press the Senator from Massachusetts any further upon that question, having exposed him on that point. There is another little fundamental condition in this act to which I desire to call the attention of the Senator and his brethren upon the other side of the Chamber. It will be remembered (probably it is forgotten; if it is, I will call the attention of the Senate to it) that when the fifteenth amendment was being passed through the two Houses of Congress there was a proposition—the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] will remember it—to insert, as secured by that amendment, the right to hold office as well as the right to vote.

The Senate put it in and the House put it in, and then this remarkable thing came out: They differed about education and about creed and about some other immaterial things, and referred the matter to a committee of conference, and the committee of conference struck out the right to hold office, so that the fifteenth amendment now reads that "the right to vote shall not be denied on account of race, color," etc., and not "the right to vote and hold office."

But whilst the Senator and his friends were not willing to make by national guaranty the negro an office-holder so that he might be elected in Massachusetts and Illinois and Iowa and Ohio and all the Northern States, while they shrank from that and struck it out of the amendment, when they came to deal with Mississippi, having stricken it out of the fifteenth amendment, they put in this nice little fundamental condition, which I will now proceed to read for the enlightenment of those who have forgotten all these old things:

Second. That it shall never be lawful for the said State to deprive any citizen of the United States, on account of his race, color, or previous condition of servitude, of the right to hold office under the constitution and laws of said State or upon any such ground to require of him any other qualifications for office than such as are required of all other citizens.

So now it stands this way, that the Senator and his confrères, flushed with victory, inflamed by passion if not with hatred to the bleeding and prostrate people of the South, when Mississippi presented her constitution here for readmission to representation in Congress, said: "Mississippi shall never have the power which Massachusetts claims and exercises of prescribing an educational qualification for voters."

There we stand, sir, Massachusetts serene, with the most enlightened population, I suppose, according to its numbers, in the Union, a population composed of a race trained for a thousand years in the habits and practices of self-government. When Massachusetts through the Senator came to deal with Mississippi and Texas and Virginia—and I believe this condition was put in all of them, in Arkansas and every one; I am not sure about that, but I am as to the three I have first named—when they came to deal with these States where this unlettered, ignorant class, unused to the exercise of political power, were in the majority, they hastened to bind their hands and to shackle them forever, denying to them a power which Massachusetts was quietly exercising in her own jurisdiction.

Then, not satisfied with that, after holding out to the poor negro this boon of suffrage, and when a majority in this Chamber and a majority in the other House—not very large, I admit, but it was a majority, nevertheless—had agreed to secure to the poor negro the right to hold office in Massachusetts and in the other Northern States, under the cover of a committee of conference they quietly struck it out.

As was said by gentlemen in the debate who argued in favor of retaining the right to hold office, they were perfectly willing to admit the negro to suffrage in their States, the race being there few and far between, but when it came to securing to him the right to hold office they stood back aghast. But in Mississippi, in Texas, in Virginia, afraid to put it in the Constitution of the United States, where it would be equally binding on all, they put it in the act admitting those States as a fundamental condition.

Mr. President, I should think that the Senator before he asked me my plan about suffrage in Mississippi had better introduce a bill here and pass it making the law stand as he said it stood. Take the shackles off of our limbs, give us the privilege that Massachusetts has to fix suffrage for ourselves, and then when I am at liberty to speak I will speak. But, sir, you have got my hands bound, if only your fundamental conditions are constitutional. I believe they are not only the injustice which I have described them to be, as discriminating between Mississippi and Texas and Virginia on the one hand and the Northern States on the other, but I believe they are a gross violation of the Constitution, utterly null and void.

But do you want us to take the risk? Ah, does the Senator ask, "Why do you not act upon your convictions?" I can tell him, perhaps. There was a time when the Southern people were prostrate at the feet of the victor, when military rule was established over them, and when we appealed to that great tribunal appointed by the Constitution itself to settle the question of the constitutionality of these laws, and Congress, by a dishonest and disreputable trick, and I repeat the words, by a dishonest and disreputable trick, inserted into a bill, without disclosing its true character, a provision repealing the law which allowed the Supreme Court to decide a case involving all these questions which was then before it and which had been argued two or three days before this infamous proceeding on the part of the American Congress took place.

Sir, the Constitution, grand, great as it is, ought to be the palladium of our liberties. It ought to be that bulwark behind which every American citizen may rest himself secure against oppression and wrong. When that Constitution has been invoked on the part of the subjected people of the South it has proved a rope of sand. Does the gentleman want me to advise the people of Mississippi to embark in the tempestuous sea of disregarding these fundamental conditions upon the idea that they are unconstitutional and void? Does he ask me to take that risk? Sir, if I were to do it I would hear the Senator's bugle note summoning his clans in Congress to preserve, not the Constitution, but the sanctity of this act of readmission of Mississippi and Texas and Virginia to representation in Congress.

Sir, I have relied upon the Constitution. I have pleaded for it; I have invoked it; and I am sorry to say I fear it is only the recent amendments to the Constitution which seem to have any sanctity in the minds of some Senators.

Now I have answered the Senator. I have proven that I was right and he was wrong on the most fundamental point in issue between us. Remove your fundamental conditions and I will answer your question about my plan.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, the Senator seems to have conducted this debate a good deal on the principle which is contained in a brief which I heard of as given to a famous lawyer in our part of the country by his associate: "If you have not got any case, revile the counsel for the plaintiff."

Mr. GEORGE. I have not reviled you; I have exposed you as a witness; that is all.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator from Mississippi provoked this discussion by an angry and bitter reproach that the Senators on this side of the Chamber and the people of the North undertook to meddle with a matter which they did not understand and which he and his associates would settle in their own way.

Mr. GEORGE. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. HOAR. Certainly.

Mr. GEORGE. I want to call the attention of the Senator back to these fundamental conditions, that is all.

Mr. HOAR. I thought the Senator wanted to ask a question. On being asked in what his plan differs from ours, he replies in substance, though not in words, that he has not got any; that is, he devotes two twenty or thirty minute speeches to asserting that an old act of 1870 or thereabouts, passed now twenty years ago and more, so bound the hands of the people of Mississippi, including his own, that they can not do anything for the benefit of this race, and to settle these great race issues and difficulties, this gigantic problem before the American people. He thinks the act is not constitutional, but he is afraid if he proceeds to disobey it somebody will summon some clans somewhere who will reproach him and his associate, and so he does not propose to do it.

So this great Senator from Mississippi, this great leader of his people and of the men who think with him, when asked if he has any different plan from that of a liberal provision for education, the security of an impartial administration of justice, and the security of the constitutional right of the ballot, declines to tell us whether he is in favor of either one of those things, and goes off to get up an immaterial issue as to the exact meaning of the statute of 1870.

Mr. President, I do not agree with the honorable Senator from Mississippi in regard to his construction of that statute. If I did, I should agree with him that it was unconstitutional. When we passed our constitutional amendment, known as the reading and writing amendment, in Massachusetts, we expressly enacted that no person should be deprived of the right to vote who had it at the time of the passage of the amendment. Now, what is said in the statute of 1870 which the Senator has read? The statute of 1870 reads:

That the constitution of Mississippi shall never be so amended or changed as to deprive any citizen or class of citizens of the United States of the right to vote who are entitled to vote by the constitution herein recognized.

It provides—

That any alteration of said constitution, prospective in its effects, may be made in regard to the time and place of residence of voters.

Does the Senator from Mississippi doubt that a provision of a reading and writing clause like that of Massachusetts would be entirely constitutional and consistent with this act as applied to all future voters?

Mr. GEORGE. Do you want me to answer?

Mr. HOAR. Yes, I want to know whether the Senator agrees with me or not on that question.

Mr. GEORGE. I think the intention of the proviso which the Senator is discussing was to prevent the State of Mississippi forever from imposing any such qualification.

Mr. HOAR. I do not so understand it.

Mr. GEORGE. I think the proviso is unconstitutional, and when the Senator gets through I will show him why I think so.

Mr. HOAR. I merely wanted to know whether the Senator agreed with me on that proposition, not to have him argue the opposite.

Mr. GEORGE. All right.

Mr. HOAR. We have always contended and always understood in Massachusetts that the reading and writing clause was not in the nature of a disqualification of a person for voting, but only in the nature of a condition which any person could prepare himself to fulfill if he saw fit, like the condition of paying a poll-tax, which we still retain, like the condition of residence, like the condition of putting his name on a voting-list, and it is so construed everywhere.

The representation never has been diminished in those States which have a reading and writing clause, by the reason that there was a certain number of illiterates incapable of reading and writing, and therefore incapable of voting in these States. It always has been regarded and understood and claimed by every Massachusetts man, as far as I have ever heard (a much stronger provision existed in the State of Rhode Island until recently), that these were in the nature of conditions which the individual citizen might prepare himself to fulfill, and not in the nature of essential qualifications for voting which would be under the regulation of this fundamental provision. So I conceive and believe that the State of Mississippi might to-day, as it might have done a year after the statute of 1870 was passed, so amended its constitution as to provide that all future persons coming to the voting age or claiming to be voters must possess themselves of the capacity to read and write before they should be admitted to the elective franchise. That is my understanding of that clause. I do not stop to debate it now. It is no new suggestion, because it has been the universal understanding and claim in the State of Massachusetts in regard to the operation of their own constitution.

I ought to have added before that the fifteenth amendment was ratified by the last State just about the time of the passage of the statute of 1870. I do not care to enter upon the disagreeable history of the enactments which created the necessity of these provisions in the acts of reconstruction. The Senator well knows that many eminent leaders of the Northern sentiment, including Governor Andrew, of my own State, including the late distinguished Senator from Indiana, Mr. Morton, and many others all over the country, were in favor of remitting the control of the States of the South to the old white voters who had governed those States before the war. It was a policy which had many supporters; but under what was known as Mr. Johnson's policy constitutional conventions and Legislatures assembled in many States, in Mississippi, in Texas, in Louisiana, and in various States—

Mr. BUTLER. And in South Carolina.

Mr. HOAR. And in other States, I presume in the State of Mississippi. There were some eight or ten of them in all. They were composed of the intelligent white classes in those States. They were men who had lived with the colored race in a condition of slavery. They were men who had gone through the war, and the feelings of the war which the Senator thinks existed and burned with so fierce a flame in the breasts of the people of the North I suppose he will hardly claim were absent from the breasts of his own people. The natural result followed, which I do not speak of now by way of reproach, but by way of accounting for the policy of these statutes. They passed laws which, in point of fact, in spite of the Constitutional amendments, if they had been carried out would have reduced the blacks to a condition of servitude again.

In the State of Louisiana and in some of the other States, there were laws which made it a penal offense, punishable by imprisonment in the penitentiary, for a white man to associate on terms of equality with a black man. There was another law, which I remember, which provided that any man of color who was found for a certain time out of work might be sold by a decree of any local magistrate, and that in the sale his former master should have the preference in the purchase; in other words, providing that American citizens, as these men had become by their freedom and by the Constitution, should be sold at auction for the crime of being out of work.

As I have said, I do not suppose these laws approve themselves now even to the persons who passed them. They were laws which were passed by persons who had just been forced to abandon the institution of slavery and were intended to restore, as far as was within their power, that institution. I no more bring them up now as a matter of reproach than I should bring up the institutions which preceded the war as a matter of reproach. Such a thing would not be attempted or vindicated or approved anywhere now. But that was what made this change of opinion. That was what led John A. Andrew and Oliver P. Morton, after expressing the views to which I have alluded, to become the most earnest, radical advocates of extreme and forcible, operative, drastic measures of legislation.

There was no purpose on the part of the men who voted for them to tie up forever; there could not be. As I said at the time and as I repeat now, we conquered in that war. The men whom we conquered might be brought to our side, but not to our feet. We never had the purpose of having a Constitution so framed or so interpreted or so administered that there should be anywhere under the flag of this Republic vassal States or subject citizens; but we did mean and we do mean that the men who by the beneficent operations of the war, which North and South alike concur in hailing with satisfaction, have been made free men and equals and citizens shall be protected and preserved and secured in the freedom and the equality and the citizenship which they then gained.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I simply desire to make one remark. It is now late. I am not going into the fundamental conditions any more; I am satisfied on that point. But the Senator made a remark in his last speech that is untrue historically, and I want to call his attention to it. He says the fifteenth amendment was passed on account of the black-code laws in the Southern States.

Mr. HOAR. No; I did not say that. I beg the Senator's pardon for interrupting him, Mr. President, but I desire the Senator's leave to say that he misunderstood me.

Mr. GEORGE. What was the Senator's position?

Mr. HOAR. I was speaking of the statutes of reconstruction.

Mr. GEORGE. On that subject I desire to make a statement, so that the Senator may understand the history of that matter. The fourteenth amendment was passed after the black laws were enacted in the Southern States and was supposed to be sufficient to annul them.

Mr. HOAR. If the Senator will pardon me I will look at the date.

Mr. GEORGE. It was February, 1869.

Mr. HOAR. The statute, if I mistake not, was passed after the adoption of the fifteenth amendment. I can give the Senator the date if he will wait a moment.

Mr. GEORGE. No, sir; not after its passage by Congress. I desire to state for the information of the Senator and others who have curiosity to know about these things, that in February, 1869—

Mr. HOAR. February 19, 1870, the last State which was needed to be counted in making the requisite number for the constitutional amendment, Minnesota, adopted it. The statute was passed a few days after the ratification of the fifteenth amendment.

Mr. GEORGE. No; the statute was passed the 23d of February, 1870.

Mr. HOAR. February 19, 1870, was the date of the ratification of the last State which adopted the constitutional amendment. So they were substantially contemporary.

Mr. GEORGE. Very well. I desire to make this remark; it may as well be known now: The Senator seems to be not entirely clear upon these great historical events. The fifteenth amendment was repudiated over and again by the Republican party, not getting more than 11 votes in this body at any one time, until February, 1869, when after the election of General Grant upon a platform which promised the people of this country that Congress would not pass the fifteenth amendment it was passed by Congress and afterwards ratified.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. CHANDLER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock and 55 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, March 13, 1890, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, March 12, 1890.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

EXPENSES OF IMMIGRATION INVESTIGATION.

Mr. OWEN, of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution which I send to the desk.

The SPEAKER. The resolution will be read, after which the Chair will ask for objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That $5,000, or so much thereof as may be needed, is hereby appropriated, out of the contingent fund of the House, to be expended under the direction of the Sergeant-at-Arms of the House, to pay the expenses of the House Committee on Immigration and Naturalization in the joint investigation of the working of the Federal immigration law by the Senate Committee on Immigration and the House Committee on Immigration and Naturalization, as authorized by the Senate concurrent resolution.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the resolution?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I could not quite catch the exact reading of the resolution, and would like to ask if it is contemplated that this is to provide for the expense of both committees or for the House alone, as I presume it is intended to do.

Mr. OWEN, of Indiana. I will state to the gentleman that this is for the House alone.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I have no objection to it.

There being no objection, the resolution was considered, and agreed to.

REPORTS FROM COURT OF CLAIMS.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of privilege, or at least, I think, a question of order; at any rate, one that involves the orderly procedure of the business of the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RICHARDSON. The question which I raise, Mr. Speaker, involves the preparation of the Calendar of business of the House and refers to the location or position on the Calendar of those cases coming over from the Court of Claims from the last Congress—cases reported from the Court of Claims in the last Congress—which were not disposed of at the close of that Congress.

Under the seventh section of the Bowman act, Mr. Speaker, I insist that these cases take their places at the head of the Private Calendar; and I ask to have read from the Clerk's desk a ruling upon that question made by the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the Fiftieth Congress, which ruling also embodies the section of the Bowman act to which I have referred.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. McCOMAS. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. McCOMAS. The Bowman act, chapter 116, volume 22, of the Statutes at Large, in section 7, provides—

"That reports of the Court of Claims to Congress under this act, if not finally acted upon during the session at which they are reported, shall be continued from session to session and from Congress to Congress until the same shall be finally acted upon."

Now, in order to give effect and force to that continuance from Congress to Congress, my question is, will not claims thus reported back from the Court of Claims to the last Congress and then reported by its committee to the Forty-ninth Congress with an accompanying bill standing on the Calendar of the last Congress—will not those claims, under the force of the terms of the section which I have read, be placed upon the Calendar and be the first claims in priority on the Calendar for consideration during the present Congress? I send to the Speaker's desk the act to which I have referred.

The SPEAKER. The Chair remembers the terms of the act. The practice in the House has been when a report is received from the Court of Claims it is referred to the committee which had original jurisdiction of the matter—the Committee on War Claims or the Committee on Claims, as the case may be. If that committee during that Congress reports the claim back again to the House, the Chair thinks that the section of the act to which the gentleman from Maryland refers requires the report to be continued on the Calendar, and the Chair has so instructed the Clerk in the present session to place on the Calendar in regular order all the reports made by committees on reports from the Court of Claims. That will be done.

Mr. RICHARDSON. This question was afterwards raised in Committee of the Whole House—I mean subsequent to the ruling of the Speaker just read—and I have in my hand the ruling of the Chairman of the committee, which I will read myself. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HATCH] was then occupying the chair, and the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. PERKINS] raised the question of order upon a bill which had been reached for consideration on the Calendar. The Chairman of the committee ruled as follows, as will be found by reference to page 7437 of the RECORD of the Fiftieth Congress:

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair decides, this having been reported from the Court of Claims under the Bowman act, and referred to the Committee on War Claims and reported back favorably, that it takes its place at the head of the Calendar and has precedence over other bills. This is one of that class of claims, and I believe is the last one.

That shows, Mr. Speaker, that the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole governed himself by the ruling of the Speaker.

Now, I want to say that the Calendar, which I hold in my hand, is not made up at this present session of Congress in accordance with that ruling of the Speaker and of the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole. I think it ought to be, and hence have called attention to it in order that the question may be disposed of properly.

As a further evidence that the ruling was right, I desire to have read from the desk the ruling of the Speaker of the House of Representatives in the Thirty-seventh Congress, December the 6th, 1861. I want to say that, as I understand the law, the seventh section of the Bowman act, which has just been read by the Clerk, is literally the law in reference to these claims reported from the Court of Claims, which was in force in 1862, the seventh section of the Bowman act being simply a repetition of the act then in force. I ask the Clerk now to read the decision to which I have referred.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Speaker announced that, in conformity with the law and usage of former Congresses, such bills from the Court of Claims as were left undisposed at the close of the last Congress should be again read a first and second time, and, together with the adverse reports of the said court, which were also left undisposed of, would be committed to the Private Calendar.

Mr. RICHARDSON. That was in accordance with the law which was enacted, if I remember correctly, in 1855. The seventh section of the Bowman act is simply a re-enactment of that act, and upon which the ruling is made as shown in 1862. I think it right, Mr. Speaker, that these findings should be placed properly at the head of the Calendar where they belong in order to be disposed of first.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman has no objection, a ruling made by the Speaker pro tempore of the last Congress will be read in that connection.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I will be very glad to have it done. May I ask when the ruling was made?

The SPEAKER. The first session of the Fiftieth Congress, on January 27.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Who was the Speaker pro tempore at that time?

The SPEAKER. The late Mr. Cox, of New York.

The Clerk read as follows:

On motion of Mr. LANHAM the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House; and after some time spent therein, the Speaker pro tempore resumed the Chair, and Mr. HATCH reported that the committee, having had under consideration bills upon the Private Calendar, had reached in its regular order the bill of the House (H. R. 6336, first session, Forty-ninth Congress) for the relief of Martha J. A. Rumbaugh, whereupon objection had been made to considering the same.

Mr. LANHAM made the point of order that the said bill was not properly upon the Calendar of the Committee of the Whole House, for the reason that it was a bill introduced into the Forty-ninth Congress, and that the only report upon it was from a committee of that Congress, and that it had never been introduced or reported upon in the present Congress.

The Speaker pro tempore overruled the point of order upon the ground that the bill referred to was one of the class which were reported to the Forty-ninth Congress with accompanying reports from the Court of Claims. They were, by direction of the Speaker during the present session, ordered to be placed on the Private Calendar for consideration on Fridays. In the opinion of the Chair, it did not follow that these bills of a former Congress are here for passage by the present House without the formalities contemplated by our rules. They are on the Calendar for appropriate action, which may be the reference of them to a committee or to lay them on the table, etc. The reference of the bills to the Calendar did not necessarily import that they were to be passed or to be considered with a view to their final disposition. Even messages of the President were often directed to be placed on the Calendar; but no one would suppose because a President's message is placed on the Calendar of the Committee of the Whole that that committee should at once consider, for instance, the question of the tariff presented by that message without such preliminary steps as the rules contemplate. The Chair, therefore, held that the bill in question, being a bill of the Forty-ninth Congress, was, with the report of the Court of Claims which accompanies it, before the House for appropriate action, but not for final disposition, inasmuch as under the rules certain preliminary steps are indispensable.

Mr. COMPTON appealed from the decision of the Chair;

Pending which,

On motion of Mr. BLOUNT, the appeal was laid on the table.

Mr. BAYNE. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that the Court of Claims is part of the judicial system of this country and that this section of the Bowman act is part of the law of the land. It gives to the findings of that court a certain status in the progress of the legislation of the country, not by indicating to the Speaker an interference with any rule of the House, nor any direction to the Speaker to do any particular thing; but by virtue of a succession of facts that will arise—that is to say, ipse facto—these reports which came from the Court of Claims to a preceding Congress will, by virtue of that fact, have precedence on the Calendar of a succeeding Congress, and that status should not be taken away.

I think that status can not be properly taken away by a rule of the House or by reports from committees or by the fact that these bills are to be referred to committees. I think that status was intended to be acquired by the Bowman act, for the purpose of carrying out the essential provisions of that act, which were that by this method a citizen could sue the Government and possibly obtain redress of his grievance. I do think that in the interest of this act, in the interest of the findings of this court, in the interest of the law of the land, and in the interest of the conservation of our judicial system, of which the Court of Claims forms a part, these measures and findings of the Court of Claims should have their proper relation to the Calendar, namely: that, coming before it from preceding Congresses, they should be placed at the head of the Calendar.

Mr. DINGLEY. I would like to ask the gentleman a question. Do I understand the gentleman to maintain that a bill introduced in the last Congress and reported by a committee of the last Congress could be placed upon the Calendar for consideration of this Congress without having been reported by any committee of this Congress?

Mr. BAYNE. This is what the law says: "That they shall be carried at the head of the Calendar."

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman from Pennsylvania suggest to the Chair how it is possible for any past Congress to lessen the powers of the House of Representatives?

Mr. BAYNE. I do not say that it could or possibly how this reference could. I do not think I could assent to that proposition, that a bill, simply because it reported the findings of the Court of Claims, should have precedence in this Congress; but is not the law defeated if that bill, after having been referred to a committee of this Congress, shall not take its proper status on the Calendar; and is not its proper status on the Calendar by virtue of this law and by virtue of the judgment of this court at the head of the Calendar?

There is no difficulty about placing these cases in that position, even although reports may have come in from committees on original reference; but yet, when they do come back, there is no difficulty whatever practically in placing these findings of the Court of Claims at the head of the Calendar. It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that this step of the Bowman act was an effort on the part of Congress to enable citizens to sue this Government to obtain money due them. If these cases are to be relegated to such place on the Calendar as they may happen to find, when they are reported by a committee then this act of Congress is certainly defeated and its object is not attained. We do not attain the object and purpose of that act.

It seems to me that the proper and orderly method of doing the business would be that when these findings are reported by the committee the bill should go to the head of the Calendar.

Mr. CRISP. I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. BAYNE. Certainly.

Mr. CRISP. The question I want to ask the gentleman is whether it is competent for any act of Congress to do anything that takes away from this House the right to make rules for its own government and its own proceedings, its Calendars, and putting cases there under the rules of the House.

Mr. BAYNE. I do not think it is competent for any act of Congress to do that.

Mr. CRISP. That is the effect of the act, as I understand it, which the gentleman cites. It fixes a place on the Calendar of this House and says where these bills shall be placed, and that is a question that must be determined by this House for itself.

Mr. BAYNE. No; it does not fix the place. There is a rule which governs where they shall go.

Mr. CRISP. I understand they are to go first on the Calendar.

Mr. BAYNE. They go first on the Calendar by the fact of their having been reported to a former Congress under the law.

Mr. CRISP. But my understanding is that no action of a former Congress upon reports of committees has any force or effect on this Congress, unless it be by its own consent.

Mr. BAYNE. But it is not the action of a former Congress. It is the operation and action of the law of the land.

Mr. CRISP. Then you understand that the law can take away from this House the right to govern and control its own proceedings?

Mr. BAYNE. Not at all. It does not interfere at all with the right of this House to govern and control its own proceedings.

Mr. CRISP. That is the way I understand it.

Mr. BAYNE. It simply provides, by reason and by virtue of the fact that these bills have been reported to a former Congress, that they shall be carried over on the Calendar of the next Congress. It does not preclude the examination of the measure by a committee of this Congress at all. The reference can be made to a committee; the committee can examine it and a report can be made; but you ignore the law which you had a hand in passing, unless these bills take their places on the Calendar under the provisions of this act.

Mr. HEARD. Mr. Speaker, if my friend from Pennsylvania will allow me, I wish to ask him this question: Was it not the purpose of the Bowman act, in the declaration which he has cited, simply to perpetuate that evidence for the use of any succeeding Congress, and not to attempt to provide that a report sent from the Court of Claims of one Congress should compel any succeeding Congress to give precedence to the subject to which such report might relate, as the gentleman claims, by putting the case to which the report refers at the head of the Calendar without any action of a committee of that Congress?

Mr. BAYNE. I think the intention of Congress in enacting that law was to give to the findings of the Court of Claims a superior status to that of the report of a committee, because it was considered—

The SPEAKER. Perhaps gentlemen will recollect that the Chair is to pass upon this question, and that it would be more satisfactory if the remarks which they are addressing to each other could be heard by the Chair. [Laughter.]

Mr. HEARD. I am, perhaps, unfortunate in that either the Speaker did not understand me or else I do not now understand the Speaker. I addressed myself to the Chair and asked permission to propound a question to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The SPEAKER. Yes, but it is desirable that the Chair should hear the inquiry and the answer. The Chair has not heard a word of the dialogue between the gentlemen. [Laughter.]

Mr. HEARD. I regret that, Mr. Speaker, on account of the Chair.

The SPEAKER. The Chair regrets it for the very same reason.

Mr. HEARD. I will now endeavor to supply the loss. The question I put to the gentleman from Pennsylvania was this: Was it not the purpose of Congress in the enactment of the Bowman act to provide simply for the perpetuation of the evidence, so far as it might be considered evidence, which is contained in the findings of the Court of Claims? Was it not the object to provide that, by reason of the failure of any Congress to act upon such finding or such advice coming from the court, it should not therefore be lost so as to necessitate another reference of the question to the court and another report upon the same facts? That is my opinion of the intent of the act.

Mr. BAYNE. That was but a part of the intention of the act. When the act was under discussion it was alleged on all hands that the committees of Congress could not report intelligently on many of the claims referred to them, because of being confined to ex parte evidence, because there was no cross-examination, because the investigation which they could make was not a thorough one; and the purpose of referring these claims to the Court of Claims was that counsel might be heard on both sides, that the facts might be judicially ascertained, that the opinion of the court might be rendered, and that then the report of the court might give these claims a legal status, in order that such of them as were just and should be paid might obtain early and favorable consideration by Congress. All these were factors in the discussion and enactment of the bill, and all of them should be considered now.

There is no gentleman who will not concede that when an investigation is made by the Court of Claims under legal rules, counsel appearing on both sides and the facts being developed in that way, the finding of that court is infinitely superior, in a great majority of cases, to the finding of a committee of this House, arrived at, perhaps, on ex parte evidence, perhaps on the statement of an individual without being sworn at all. It was to give a status to the claims of parties who employed counsel to press their cases before that court and to have the merits determined there that this law was enacted, and I think it should be rigidly adhered to.

Mr. HEARD. Mr. Speaker, I desire to make another inquiry of my friend from Pennsylvania.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would like to reserve this question and make a decision upon it later, unless gentlemen desire to discuss it further now.

Mr. HEARD. Well, Mr. Speaker, I desire to make a very few observations. I will not detain the House long. In response to what the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BAYNE] last said, with regard to the effect of findings of the Court of Claims, I think it will be conceded by every gentleman who has investigated that question and thoroughly considered it—and in that class I expect to find my friend from Pennsylvania when he shall have more maturely reflected upon the subject—that a finding of the Court of Claims does not have the effect of giving the claim any "legal status" apart from the fact that when the report comes here it may be regarded by the House as furnishing evidence superior in character to the evidence upon which we ordinarily act in the consideration of these claims. That it does have more weight and should have more weight I readily concede; but that the Court of Claims, by a finding under the Bowman act, can bind Congress at all, I think the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BAYNE] will not seriously contend. I think it has never been contended that the House of Representatives, as a branch of Congress, is obliged by such a finding to do more than consider it as it would consider any other evidence coming before it.

ELECTRIC WELDING.

Mr. LODGE, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, reported back the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Navy be requested to communicate to the House of Representatives the report of the United States Naval Board appointed under orders of the honorable Secretary of the Navy January 9, 1890, to investigate the welding process of the Thomson Electric Welding Company of Boston, Mass.

ALICE E. ROBERTSON.

Mr. McRAE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the Senate bill which I send to the desk. It has been favorably, and I believe unanimously, reported by a committee of this House.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill, after which the Chair will ask for objections.

The bill (S. 680) for the relief of Alice E. Robertson was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arkansas?

Mr. CANNON. Is that bill called up for consideration?

The SPEAKER. The request is for immediate consideration of the bill.

Mr. CANNON. I think it had better go to the Calendar.

Mr. McRAE. I hope my friend from Illinois will not insist upon that.

Mr. CANNON. I object. Regular order.

Mr. McRAE. This bill has been considered favorably by a House committee.

Mr. CANNON. That may be, but I think it had better go to the Calendar.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made.

ELEVENTH CENSUS.

Mr. DUNNELL. I am directed by the Select Committee on the Eleventh Census to report back with a favorable recommendation the bill which I send to the desk and to ask for its immediate consideration. There is a short report which gives argument in favor of the passage of the bill, and which, if any gentleman desires, can be read.

The bill was read, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 7025) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for taking the eleventh and subsequent censuses," approved March 1, 1889.

Be it enacted, etc., That section 18 of an act entitled "An act to provide for taking the eleventh and subsequent censuses," approved March 1, 1889, be amended by adding to the last line of section 18, after the words "and actual necessary traveling expenses," the words "and a per diem allowance in lieu of subsistence of not less than $3 nor more than $5 per day."

The amendment reported by the committee was read, as follows:

In line 8 strike out "not less than" and in line 9 strike out "nor more than five;" so as to read: "a per diem allowance in lieu of subsistence of $3 per day."

Mr. BLOUNT. That leaves $3 as the maximum?

Mr. DUNNELL. Yes, sir.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill at this time? The Chair hears none.

The amendment reported by the committee was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. DUNNELL moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

CLAIMS ALLOWED BY THE TREASURY DEPARTMENT.

Mr. WILCOX. I desire to present a privileged report from the Committee on Claims, and to ask for its immediate consideration. The committee has directed me to report back with a favorable recommendation the resolution which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, requested to transmit to the House of Representatives a list of all claims allowed by the accounting officers of the Treasury enumerated in House Ex. Docs. Nos. 55 and 153, Forty-eighth Congress, second session, for which appropriations have not been made.

The resolution was adopted.

REMOVAL OF HARBOR OBSTRUCTION, MILWAUKEE, WIS.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Illinois. I ask unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union be discharged from the further consideration of Senate bill No. 1701, and that the same be considered at this time.

The bill was read, as follows:

A bill (S. 1701) making an appropriation for the removal of a dangerous obstruction to the entrance of the harbor at Milwaukee, Wis.

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $6,100, or so much thereof as may be necessary, for the purpose of removing the sand-bars formed at the entrance or mouth of the harbor at Milwaukee, Wis., and to make the same free and easy of access or passage by boats arriving at or departing from such port.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Is there any special reason why this matter can not go into the general river and harbor bill?

Mr. HENDERSON, of Illinois. There is. I will briefly explain to the gentleman that on account of storms there has been a filling in of the harbor at Milwaukee, so that very recently a valuable vessel was very greatly damaged, far beyond the amount of money now asked. The continuance of this obstruction will seriously interfere with the entrance of vessels at that harbor as soon as navigation opens.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Is not that true of a great many harbors? Is there any special reason why this sand-bar should be dug out any more quickly than all the other sand-bars scattered around in our various water ways?

Mr. HENDERSON, of Illinois. I call for the reading of the report. The report (by Mr. HENDERSON, of Illinois) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Rivers and Harbors, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1701) making an appropriation for the removal of a dangerous obstruction to the entrance of the harbor at Milwaukee, Wis., having considered the same, beg leave to submit the following report, namely:

From a letter from the Chief of Engineers, herewith appended and made part of this report, it appears that no dredging has been done in the harbor at Milwaukee since the year 1880, when a channel was dredged 18 feet deep and 200 feet wide throughout the entire length of the harbor. From recent soundings it appears there is only a depth of 16 feet in the channel, and the Chief of Engineers recommends that the depth of the channel for the entire length be increased to 18 feet, at an estimated cost of $6,100.

It appears to the committee that the filling up of said harbor is a dangerous obstruction to navigation and a constantly increasing source of danger to all the larger class of vessels entering or departing from the harbor, and that such obstruction should be at once removed for the safety of such vessels and for the interests of that important harbor.

The committee, therefore, in view of these facts, report the bill back and recommend its passage.

WAR DEPARTMENT, Washington City, January 17, 1890.

SIR: I return herewith Senate bill 1701, "making an appropriation for the removal of the dangerous obstruction to the entrance to the harbor at Milwaukee, Wis.," referred to this Department on the 9th instant, and invite your attention to the report of the Chief of Engineers thereon.

The recommendation of the Chief of Engineers is approved.

Very respectfully,

REDFIELD PROCTOR, Secretary of War.

Hon. W. P. FRYE,

Chairman Committee on Commerce, U. S. Senate.

OFFICE OF THE CHIEF OF ENGINEERS, U. S. ARMY.
Washington, D. C., January 15, 1890.

SIR: I have the honor to return herewith letter of January 9, 1890, from the Committee on Commerce, United States Senate, inclosing Senate bill 1701. "A bill making an appropriation for the removal of a dangerous obstruction to the entrance of the harbor at Milwaukee, Wis.," and in reply to its reference to this office for report, I beg to state that no dredging has been done at this locality since 1890, in which year there was a channel dredged 18 feet deep and 200 feet wide throughout its entire length; soundings made on the 6th day of December, 1889, show a channel 16 feet deep.

It is recommended that the depth of the channel for its entire length be increased to 18 feet and to a width of 200 feet by dredging, at an estimated cost of $6,100. If the money is appropriated now the work can be completed in time for the opening of navigation on the lakes.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

THOS. LINCOLN CASEY,
Brigadier-General, Chief of Engineers.

Hon. REDFIELD PROCTOR,
Secretary of War.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Illinois. This has nothing to do with the general appropriation for rivers and harbors.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I will not object.

There being no objection, the House proceeded to the consideration of the bill, which was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Illinois, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ARCHIBALD HUNLEY.

Mr. FITHIAN. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 5067) for the relief of Archibald Hunley.

The bill was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to remove the charge of resisting his superior officer, and the decision of said military court-martial upon said charges, and all other charges which appear against said Archibald Hunley, late a private in Company H, Thirtieth Regiment of Illinois Volunteers, on the records of the War Department; and the proper Department of the Government is hereby directed to settle all claims for back pay, bounty, pension, or allowances as if such charges did not exist.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I would like to hear the report in this case.

Mr. CANNON. I call for the regular order.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is called for. The morning hour begins at five minutes before 1 o'clock. The first committee in order is the Committee on Elections.

Mr. LACEY. Before entering on the regular call, I ask unanimous consent to have published in the RECORD without reading—

The SPEAKER. The Chair will submit that request later.

The Committee on Ways and Means and the Committee on Appropriations were called, no reports being presented.

The Committee on the Judiciary was then called.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. On behalf of the Committee on the Judiciary I call up House bill No. 6956.

Mr. PERKINS. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. I was of the opinion that the call rested with the Committee on Indian Affairs. That committee certainly has not been called during the morning hour, and I do not understand why we return to the head of the list to-day. The last committee called in regular order, as I understand, was the Committee on Public Lands.

The SPEAKER. The call was gone through with, but two or three committees were passed over, by unanimous consent of the House; and those committees having since been called, it became necessary to commence again at the beginning of the list.

Mr. PERKINS. But I am of the opinion that the Committee on Indian Affairs has never been called, because I have been ready to present business whenever the committee should be reached in order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is quite certain that the committee was called.

Mr. ADAMS. My impression was that the call progressed a certain distance and certain committees were passed over, which committees have since been called; but, as I understand, the Chair had only reached the middle of the entire list. I have examined the RECORD to find the entire call of committees, and I can not find it.

Mr. PERKINS. I am very certain that the Committee on Indian Affairs has not been called.

Mr. DOCKERY. The committees have never been called through.

Mr. ADAMS. I went back in the RECORD ten days or two weeks to find when the call had taken place; and I respectfully suggest that the Chair must be mistaken.

The SPEAKER. The best information that the Chair can get is that the Chair is mistaken. [Laughter.] The call rests with the Committee on Naval Affairs. [A pause.] The Chair thinks it only fair that the Committee on Naval Affairs should be passed over without losing its right, because the Chair has given a wrong impression to members on this matter.

Mr. MORROW. May I be allowed, not being a member of that committee, to ask that the Committee on Naval Affairs be passed over?

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the Committee on Naval Affairs will be passed over this morning without prejudice. It is evident a wrong impression was given to that committee. The next committee is the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. MCCREARY. The chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs is absent. The Committee on Foreign Affairs has not been called.

The SPEAKER. The Committee on Foreign Affairs was called at the proper time.

Mr. MCCREARY. The chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs went away yesterday.

The SPEAKER. The Committee on Foreign Affairs was called in regular order.

Mr. MCCREARY. When?

The SPEAKER. On the 9th of February, when the Committee on Military Affairs was called.

Mr. MCCREARY. I ask, in the absence of the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, that it be passed over this morning without prejudice. It is an oversight.

The SPEAKER. That committee will not be reached to-day in the call.

Mr. MCCREARY. I understand, Mr. Speaker, you have passed two committees already.

The SPEAKER. They were passed on the 19th of February. The Committee on Foreign Affairs was called in regular order.

Mr. MCCREARY. The chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs was not aware of it.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman will examine the RECORD he will see it was called in due order.

Mr. MCCREARY. He asked me when he left to have it passed without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. He was under the impression the call would begin at the beginning of the list. The next committee to be called is the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

ASSISTANT GENERAL SUPERINTENDENT, RAILWAY MAIL SERVICE.

Mr. HOPKINS. I am directed by the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads to call up for consideration the bill (H. R. 4975) providing for the appointment of an assistant general superintendent and chief clerk, railway mail service.

The Clerk proceeded to read the bill.

Mr. McMILLIN. This bill has to be considered in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. I reserve the point of order.

The SPEAKER. The point of order may be made after the bill has been read.

Mr. McMILLIN. I reserve the point of order.

The SPEAKER. A point of order of that kind can be made at any time before the consideration of the bill has been entered upon.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Postmaster-General may appoint, and assign to duty, one assistant general superintendent, railway mail service, who shall be paid a salary of $3,000 per year; and one chief clerk of railway mail service, to be employed in the Post-Office Department, who shall be paid $2,000 per year; said assistant general superintendent and chief clerk to be also paid their necessary and actual expenses while traveling on the business of the Department. The salaries and expenses of these officers shall be paid out of the appropriation for the transportation of mail on railways.

Mr. McMILLIN. I make the point of order that this bill can not be considered in the House, but, as it makes an appropriation, it requires its first consideration in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER. This bill is not on the House Calendar, and has not been properly called up. It is in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. The rule provides the committee may call up bills from the House Calendar. This is on the Union Calendar.

Mr. HOPKINS. In the absence of the chairman of the committee I ask the committee be passed without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. DUNNELL. I object.

CHICAGO, MILWAUKEE AND ST. PAUL RAILWAY.

The Committee on Indian Affairs was next called.

Mr. PERKINS. On behalf of the Committee on Indian Affairs, I call up for consideration the bill (H. R. 3732) to accept and ratify an agreement made by the Sisseton and Wahpeton bands of Sioux Indians, and to grant a right of way for the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul Railway through the Lake Traverse reservation, in South Dakota.

The Clerk proceeded to read the bill.

Mr. PERKINS. This is a lengthy bill. It has been carefully considered by the committee. The road is now in operation under rights secured by treaty with these Indians after negotiation and agreement. I ask that the reading of the bill be dispensed with.

Mr. FITHIAN. I object.

The bill was read, as follows:

Whereas the second article of the treaty with the Sisseton and Wahpeton bands of Dakota or Sioux Indians concluded February 19, 1867, duly ratified and proclaimed (Statutes at Large, volume 15, page 506), provides as follows:

"The said bands hereby cede to the United States the right to construct wagon-roads, railroads, mail stations, telegraph lines, and such other public improvements as the interest of the Government may require, over and across the lands claimed by said bands (including their reservation as hereinafter designated), over any route or routes that may be selected by authority of the Government; and

Therefore,
Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That a certain memorandum of agreement now on file in the office of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, bearing date the 8th day of December, 1884, signed by Gabriel Renville, principal chief; Dave Fairbault, assistant principal chief; Michael Renville, president of council; Tacan-dupaholonica, councilman; Wicaneponopa, councilman; Eetukiya, councilman; Wandiduta, councilman; Ileojanjan, councilman; Wakinyanocana, councilman; Izakiye, councilman, and 27 other Indians, constituting a duly certified majority of all the adult male Indians of the Sisseton and Wahpeton bands of Dakota or Sioux Indians, occupying or interested in the lands of the Lake Traverse reservation, in the State of South Dakota, acting under the supervision and by and with the consent and approval of the Secretary of the Interior, be, and the same is hereby, ratified and confirmed; and that a right of way, not exceeding 200 feet in width, through said reservation, in the several directions and according to the maps of definite location filed in the Department of the Interior, be, and the same is hereby, granted to the said Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul Railway Company, its successors and assigns, upon terms and conditions mentioned in said agreement, which is in the words and figures following, to wit:

"Whereas by the second article of the treaty between the United States and the Sisseton and Wahpeton bands of Dakota or Sioux Indians, concluded February 19, 1867, duly ratified and proclaimed (Statutes at Large, volume 15, page 506, etc.), the said bands of Indians ceded to the United States the right to construct wagon-roads, railroads, mail stations, telegraph lines, and such other public improvements as the interest of the Government might require over and across the lands claimed by said bands, including their reservation as thereafter designated, to wit: Beginning at the head of Lake Traverse, and thence along the treaty line of the treaty of 1851 to Kampeska Lake; thence in a direct line to Relpan, on the northeast point of the Coteau des Prairies; and thence passing north of Skunk Lake, on the most direct line to the foot of Lake Traverse, and thence along the treaty line of 1851 to the place of beginning, over any route or routes that might be selected by authority of the Government; and

"Whereas the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul Railway Company, a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Wisconsin, duly authorized and empowered by the Legislature of the Territory of Dakota to extend its line of road and branches through said Territory, some time since applied to the Secretary of the Interior for permission to survey and construct a line or lines of railroad through said reservation, which said permission was, in exercise of the right reserved to the United States under said treaty provisions, granted, upon condition that the consent of the Indians to the construction of the road should first be obtained and a reasonable compensation paid to them by said company for the right of way and other privileges required; and

"Whereas the said Sisseton and Wahpeton Indians, in council assembled, on the 2d day of May, 1880, resolved to accept and after the rate of $1.75 per acre as compensation to them in respect of such lands as should thereafter be required by said railway company for a right of way not exceeding 200 feet in width across said reservation; and

"Whereas the said Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul Railway Company did, on or about the 26th day of May, 1880, file in the Department of the Interior a map showing the definite location of the Hastings and Dakota division of said railway, commencing at the eastern boundary line of the Sisseton and Wahpeton reservation, in the Territory of Dakota, being a point in the southeast quarter of the northeast quarter of section 35, township 122 north, range 51 west; thence in a westerly direction across said reservation to a point on the western boundary line thereof, to wit, to a point in the southeast quarter of fractional section 21, township 122 north, range 53 west, which said map of definite location was approved by the Secretary of the Interior on the 22d day of July, 1880; and said company has since constructed its railroad upon said line of route, and the same is now and for some time past has been in active operation; and

"Whereas the said Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul Railway Company did afterwards, on or about the 11th day of August, 1880, file in the Department of the Interior a map showing the definite location of the line of route of a branch of the Hastings and Dakota division extension of said railway (known as the Whetstone branch) through a further portion of the said Sisseton and Wahpeton reservation aforesaid, viz: commencing at a point on the eastern boundary line of said reservation, being a point on such boundary line about 700 feet southwesterly from the northeast corner of fractional section 33, township 124 north, range 50 west; thence northwesterly to a point in the north line of section 16, township 129 north, range 51 west, about 1,000 feet east of the northwest corner of said section 16, a distance of 42.1 miles; and said company has also partially constructed its road upon this last-mentioned line of route, and the same is now in active operation as far as the Sisseton agency; and

"Whereas the said Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul Railway Company did afterwards, on or about the 8th day of March, 1883, file in the Department of the Interior a map showing the definite location of the line of the said branch of the Hastings and Dakota division extension of said railway (known as the Whetstone branch) through the remainder of said reservation, as follows, viz: commencing at a point on the north line of section 16, township 229 north, range 54 west, 1,000 feet east of the northwest corner of said section 16; thence running northwesterly on a line curving southerly to a point on the west line of section 9, in said township and range, 900 feet north of the southwest corner of said section 9; thence on tangent to a point on the western boundary line of said reservation, a distance of 6.57 miles;

"Now, therefore for the purpose of evidencing the consent of the said Sisseton and Wahpeton bands of Dakota or Sioux Indians to the right of way hereinbefore mentioned, we, the undersigned chiefs, headmen, heads of families, and others, constituting a majority of all the adult male Indians of the Sisseton and Wahpeton bands of Dakota or Sioux Indians occupying or interested in the lands of the Lake Traverse reserve, in the Territory of Dakota, and acting under the supervision and by and with consent and approval of the Secretary of the Interior, do hereby consent and agree that upon payment by the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul Railway Company, its successors or assigns, to the Secretary of the Interior, for the use of our said bands of Indians, the sum of $2,668.24, lawful money of the United States (being at and after the rate of $1.75 per acre in respect of the lands hereinafter mentioned), the said Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul Railway Company, its successors and assigns, shall have and be entitled to a right of way extending over and across the Sisseton and Wahpeton (or Lake Traverse) reservation, in the several directions hereinafter mentioned, that is to say: (1) A strip of land not exceeding 200 feet in width, commencing at the eastern boundary line of said reservation, being a point in the southeast quarter of the northeast quarter of section 35, township 122 north, range 51 west; thence in a westerly direction across said reservation to a point in the western boundary line thereof, to wit, to a point in the southeast quarter of fractional section 21, township 122 north, range 53 west, as the same is laid down on the said map of definite location thereof hereinbefore referred to; said strip of land to be used as a right of way and roadbed for the Hastings and Dakota division of said railway and for no other purpose, and containing, in the whole, 352.14 acres. (2) A strip of land not exceeding 200 feet in width at a point on the eastern boundary line of said reservation, being a point on such boundary line about 700 feet southwesterly from the northeast corner of fractional section 33, township 124 north, range 50 west; thence northwesterly to a point in the north line of section 1, township 129 north, range 51 west about 1,000 feet east of the northwest corner of said section 16; thence running northwesterly on a line curving southerly to a point on the west line of section 9, in said township and range, 900 feet north of the southwest corner of said section 9; thence on a tangent to a point on the western boundary line of said reservation, a total distance of 48.37 miles, or thereabouts, as the same appears on the said two several maps of definite location hereinbefore referred to, said strip of land to be used as a right of way and roadbed for the Whetstone branch of the Hastings and Dakota division extension of said railway, and for no other purpose, and containing in the whole 1,172.58 acres, together with the free and unmolested right in said railway company, its successors or assigns, to construct, operate, and maintain a line of railroad through said reservation between the points aforesaid, subject, nevertheless, to the due observance of the Indian intercourse laws and the regulations prescribed, or from time to time to be prescribed, by the Secretary of the Interior for the benefit and protection of the Indian tribes.

"We do further undertake and agree that if at any time hereafter the said railway company, its successors or assigns, shall require the use and occupation of additional grounds for depot or station purposes on either of its lines of road within said reservation, said company, its successors or assigns, shall be privileged to select the same from the unoccupied lands of the reserve in quantity not exceeding 10 acres for each station, and not more than one station in every 10 miles, upon the same terms of compensation as hereinbefore provided for the right of way hereby agreed to, subject always to the requirements and approval of the Secretary of the Interior for the time being; damages to individual property to be paid by the said railway company and its successors, in addition to the within-contracted payments.

"Executed at the Sisseton agency, Dakota, this 8th day of December, A. D. 1884."

Sec. 2. That said railway company shall accept this right of way upon the expressed condition, binding upon itself, its successors and assigns, that they will neither aid, advise, nor assist in any effort looking towards the changing or extinguishing the present tenure of the Indians in their land, and will not attempt to secure from the Indian tribes any further grant of land or its occupancy than is hereinbefore provided: Provided, That any violation of the condition mentioned in this section shall operate as a forfeiture of all the rights and privileges of said railway company under this act.

Sec. 3. That Congress may at any time amend, add to, alter, or repeal this act.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. It would seem that the latter portion of the bill makes a further grant in several different directions.

Mr. PERKINS. I do not understand the question of my colleague.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. As I caught the reading of the bill, the latter portion of it makes a new grant in two or three directions through this reservation.

Mr. PERKINS. I will say, in answer to the inquiry of my colleague, that this road has been already built and is now in operation. It secured, after negotiation with these Indians, by treaty the right to enter the reservation. The money has been on deposit in the Treasury Department, but the Indians can not get it because there has been no ratification of the agreement. There is no objection, so far as I know, from any source. The gentleman from Dakota can answer more fully.

Mr. GIFFORD. I will state, Mr. Speaker, there are two short lines of road provided in this bill, one of which extends 40 miles in the reservation.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. How much is the reservation?

Mr. GIFFORD. It contains somewhere in the neighborhood of a million of acres.

And one line extends across the reservation, the other a short distance into it. Now, the additional ground you refer to is simply for another station on the line already constructed, not any projected line, for this does not propose to grant any land for such purpose. The bill does not extend through the reservation, the gentleman will understand. It only grants the right of way for such road as has been already built. It does not grant the right to build beyond where the road is already built. They do not want that or ask for it, but simply to complete what has already been done.

Mr. PICKLER. If the gentleman will allow me a moment, I will state that this has been in operation for seven or eight years.

Mr. GIFFORD. Yes; it has been in operation for at least that time.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. How about the payment to the Indians?

Mr. GIFFORD. The money has been deposited with the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Has it been paid to the Indians?

Mr. GIFFORD. This money, as I say, is with the Secretary of the Interior, and has been for seven or eight years, for their payment.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Is the object of this bill to return the money to the Indians?

Mr. GIFFORD. Yes; to pay it to the Indians, to whom it belongs.
Mr. PICKLER. This bill simply ratifies the agreement of the company with the Indians.

Mr. COBB. Let me ask the gentleman if this road was built under an agreement with the Indians?

Mr. GIFFORD. An agreement was first had with the Indians.

Mr. COBB. But have they any other powers except those which were obtained from the Indians or by their consent?

Mr. GIFFORD. No, sir.

Mr. COBB. Was this ratified by Congress?

Mr. GIFFORD. No, sir.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. They did not receive their power from Congress, as I understand it?

Mr. GIFFORD. No; under a treaty.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. With whom?

Mr. GIFFORD. It was under a treaty which provided that they could get the consent of the Indians. Now, by the consent of the Indians and with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, they entered into an agreement with the Indians for the right of way. The price and everything was agreed upon, with the consent of the Indians and the Secretary of the Interior secured.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. But from what source did this company originally obtain its authority to enter the Indian reservation?

Mr. GIFFORD. From the Indians themselves, by consent of the Secretary of the Interior and with his approval.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. But by what authority?

Mr. GIFFORD. By virtue of a treaty with the Indians that they could do so.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. A treaty with the Government, or a treaty with the Indians, or under a Government treaty with the Indians?

Mr. GIFFORD. I will explain to the gentleman. The Indians and the Government entered into a treaty by which the right of way to construct a road across this reservation could be secured with the consent of the Indians. The Government has always held that the action of Congress is of course to be secured to ratify such an agreement. That is the object of this bill. Now, inasmuch as this agreement was perfectly satisfactory to the Government and to the Indians, and the price regarded as ample, this bill ratifies that right. The gentleman will understand that the Government provided that the price should be paid for the right of way as agreed upon by the Indians, and for the 42 miles of road this money has been deposited subject to be paid to the Indians.

Mr. PICKLER. Let me say to the gentleman from Kansas that these Indians are educated, civilized Indian—farmers, supplied with schools, churches, and are as capable of making contracts as any white men. These are not by any means blanket Indians, but they are civilized and understand perfectly well what they are doing.

Mr. STEWART, of Vermont. What is the amount of money deposited?

Mr. GIFFORD. The amount deposited with the Secretary of the Interior is $2,402.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. The gentleman has not yet stated in response to my interrogatory whether the Government has ever authorized this company to enter the Indian reservation.

Mr. GIFFORD. I have just stated to the gentleman that it was authorized under the treaty.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. But has Congress ever granted the authority?

Mr. GIFFORD. No, sir.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Just let me ask the gentleman this: Has the Secretary of the Interior power to permit a railroad company to enter an Indian reservation and construct its lines without the consent of Congress?

Mr. GIFFORD. I think so, in this case. This is an exception. It is peculiar. It was a mooted question whether the consent of Congress was required at all or not.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Mooted by whom, the railroad attorneys? Because a railroad attorney will assume anything.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mooted by everybody.

Mr. COBB. Let me ask the gentleman how do these Indians hold that reservation?

Mr. GIFFORD. As a permanent reservation.

Mr. COBB. By act of Congress?

Mr. GIFFORD. No, sir; under a treaty; and the language is that they shall hold it as a permanent reservation. That is the exact language, I believe, of the treaty.

Mr. PERKINS. I would suggest, for the information of the gentleman from Alabama, that the treaty provides as follows:

The said bands hereby cede to the United States the right to construct wagon-roads, rail roads, mail stations, telegraph lines, and such other public improvements as the interest of the Government may require, over and across the lands claimed by said bands (including their reservation as hereinafter designated) over any route or routes that may be selected by authority of the Government.

Mr. COBB. Was that ratified?

Mr. GIFFORD. This bill is a ratification of it.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Now, we have been informed that there was a treaty between the Indians and the United States, and we have heard a portion of the language of that treaty cited here. What I wish to ask is this: Has this company ever received from the United States, by an act of Congress, permission to enter that reservation?

Mr. PERKINS. The object of this legislation is to ratify the agreement they made with the Indians, including the right of way across the reservation. There has never been any legislative action ratifying it. The Indians themselves gave the company this permission. Hence the necessity for the passage of this bill.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. In other words, the railroad company, as I understand it, assume that they are the United States Government, and enter into a treaty with the Indians for the purpose of constructing a railway through that reservation. They construct the road, and now come to us under the guise of confirming a treaty to justify them in their unmitigated impertinence in the attempt to exercise the authority which is only vested in Congress. Am I correct?

Mr. GIFFORD. No; I do not think you are at all. [Laughter.]

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. That is the position as it appears to me from the statements I have heard.

Mr. GIFFORD. I have no doubt that is the gentleman's view, but it is not correct.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The question was taken; and there were on a division—ayes 67, noes 8.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I will save the Chair the trouble of counting by not making the point of no quorum.

So the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. PERKINS moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

LOCATION OF INDIANS IN FLORIDA ON LANDS IN SEVERALTY

Mr. PERKINS. I now ask consideration of the bill which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 16) to enable the Secretary of the Interior to locate Indians in Florida upon lands in severalty.

The bill was read at length.

Mr. McMILLIN. Mr. Speaker, this bill is subject to the point of order that it can not be considered in this hour for the reason that the House Calendar that can be approached in this hour is provided for in this language:

A House Calendar, to which shall be referred all bills of a public character not raising revenue nor directly or indirectly appropriating money or property.

This bill does appropriate money.

Mr. PERKINS. This money has already been appropriated. It was appropriated at the last session of Congress, and this simply directs how it may be used.

Mr. McMILLIN. But under the law, if it was not expended in the way provided for, it is to be covered back into the Treasury; and this is a reappropriation of money. This may be a very proper bill, and I might not be disposed to antagonize it if it should come up properly, but I think it is subject to the point of order.

Mr. PERKINS. This money was appropriated by the last annual appropriation bill for the purchase of land for these Indians. The Secretary of the Interior found a difficulty in executing the direction of the last Congress, and has asked for this modification. The money has already been appropriated.

Mr. McMILLIN. But not for this purpose. It could not be for this purpose, because there is a modification asked by this bill.

Mr. PERKINS. It was appropriated to buy lands for these Indians, and was appropriated for that specific purpose.

Mr. DAVIDSON. I would ask the gentleman from Tennessee, in view of the fact that this is a meritorious bill, to withdraw the point of order.

Mr. McMILLIN. I do not resist this bill. I do not know anything about its merits; but I do think that this hour should not be consumed by the consideration of bills which properly are not to come up during the hour.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will say to the gentleman that it is a somewhat doubtful question whether this comes within the rule.

Mr. McMILLIN. Mr. Speaker, I have addressed myself to the point of order, and I have read the rule. The gentleman confesses what the bill does. His confession is that the money can not be appropriated to this use without legislation. Legislation appropriating money to any use can not be passed in this hour under the second section of Rule XIII.

Mr. BLOUNT. I would like to ask my friend from Tennessee a question, if he will allow me.

Mr. McMILLIN. With pleasure.

Mr. BLOUNT. If this bill should pass would not the appropriation which has been taken out of the Treasury be subsequently covered in?

Mr. McMILLIN. That is true.

Mr. BLOUNT. Therefore this bill does take money out of the Treasury.

Mr. McMILLIN. Whenever it diverts money, Mr. Speaker, from the use to which it was to be applied or from the use that it could be applied to under the previous act, it diverts it from the purpose to which it would go under this enabling act. This is clearly an appropriation, I think, as contemplated under the rules.

The SPEAKER. The Chair sustains the point of order.

EXTENDING TIME OF PAYMENT FOR INDIAN LANDS.

Mr. PERKINS. I ask consideration of the bill (H. R. 5974) extending the time of payment to purchasers of land of the Omaha tribe of Indians, in Nebraska, and for other purposes.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to extend the time of payment of the purchase money due for land sold on the Omaha Indian reservation under the sales made by virtue of "An act to provide for the sale of a part of the reservation of the Omaha tribe of Indians, in the State of Nebraska, and for other purposes," approved August 7, 1882, as follows: The time for the first payment is hereby extended until the 1st day of December, 1894, the second payment to become due in one year thereafter, and the third payment to be due and payable in one year from the time fixed for the second payment: Provided, That the interest on said payments shall be paid annually at the time said payments of interest are due. And provided, That the said act above mentioned, except as changed or modified by this act, shall remain in full force and effect: And provided further, That all the lands, the payment for which is hereby extended, shall be subject to taxation in all respects by and in the State of Nebraska as if fully paid for and patents issued.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

Amend by adding:

"SEC. 2. That any entryman that has taken less than 160 acres of land on this reservation, and has made payments on the same according to law, may amend his entry and purchase at the appraised price and upon the conditions prescribed in the act of August 7, 1882, such additional lands lying contiguous to the lands included in his original entry as he may desire: Provided, That the land so purchased, together with the land included in his original entry, shall in no case exceed 160 acres."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOOKER. Mr. Speaker, I would like to inquire of the gentleman from Kansas on what basis the rate of payment for this land per acre is fixed.

Mr. PERKINS. The land was appraised, Mr. Speaker, under an act of Congress, and this bill provides that they may take it just as the other settlers have taken it, at the appraised value, ranging from eight to twelve dollars per acre. This was a high appraisement, and it is for that reason largely that the land has not been taken heretofore.

Mr. HOOKER. What is the equity, propriety, and justice of the extension of the time to those who have bought those lands?

Mr. PERKINS. The low prices prevailing for farm products has prevented them from keeping up their payments. They are to keep up payments of interest, and that would be as satisfactory to the Indians as though the money was in the Treasury. Under the provisions for the sale they get the interest, and it is a matter of no importance to them whether they get it from the settlers or from the Government. This bill provides that they must keep up their interest payments.

Mr. HOOKER. I would like to ask one further question. Are these Indians satisfied with this provision?

Mr. PERKINS. They are. There is no objection to it from any source.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. PERKINS moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

DENISON AND WASHITA VALLEY RAILWAY COMPANY.

Mr. PERKINS. I now ask consideration of the bill (H. R. 856) to amend section 1 and section 9 of an act entitled "An act to authorize the Denison and Washita Valley Railway Company to construct and operate a railway through the Indian Territory, and for other purposes," approved July 1, 1886.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 1 of an act entitled "An act to authorize the Denison and Washita Valley Railway Company to construct and operate a railway through the Indian Territory, and for other purposes," approved July 1, 1886, be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to read as follows, to wit: "That the Denison and Washita Valley Railway Company, a corporation created under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Texas, be, and the same is hereby, invested and empowered with the right of locating, constructing, owning, equipping, operating, using, and maintaining a railway and telegraph and telephone line through the Indian Territory, beginning at a point to be selected by said railway company on the Red River, near Denison, in Grayson County, in the State of Texas, and running thence in a northeasterly direction by the most feasible and practicable route through the Indian Territory to a point in the east boundary line of the Indian Territory near Fort Smith, in the State of Arkansas, and also a branch line of railway from a point on said main line, not exceeding 50 miles from Red River, to be selected by said company, and running thence in a northwesterly direction through the Indian Territory and the county known as Oklahoma, to a point on the southern line of the State of Kansas at or about where the same is crossed by the one hundredth meridian, by the most practicable route thereto, with the right to construct, use, and maintain such tracks, turn-outs, branches, sidings, and extensions as the said company deem it to their interest to construct along and upon the right of way and depot grounds herein provided for."

SEC. 2. That section 9 of the act above referred to be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to read as follows, to wit: "That said railway company shall, build at least 50 miles of its railway in said Territory within three years after the passage of this amendatory act, or the rights herein granted shall be forfeited as to that portion not built; that said railway company shall construct and maintain continuously all fences, road, and highway crossings and necessary bridges over said railway wherever said roads and highways do now or may hereafter cross said railway's right of way or may be by the proper authorities laid out across the same."

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment recommended by the committee.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add to section 1 the following:

Provided, That all of the rights, franchises, powers, and privileges by this act granted to said railway company are hereby declared to be, and are hereby given, granted, and conferred upon and to it and its successors and assigns, subject to the same conditions and limitations as are contained in the act to which this is amendatory, except only as to the time in which to complete the construction of that part of said company's road required by section 2 of this act, which shall be done within the time therein set forth."

Mr. McMILLIN. Mr. Speaker, I was unable to hear distinctly the first section of the bill as it was read, but I am inclined to think it is subject to the point of order. With the view of ascertaining the fact, I wish to inquire of the gentleman in charge of the bill [Mr. PERKINS] what are the rights and franchises that are made assignable under the amendment proposed?

Mr. PERKINS. There is no appropriation whatever in the bill.

Mr. McMILLIN. Is there not an appropriation of public land?

Mr. PERKINS. No.

Mr. McMILLIN. A right of way?

Mr. PERKINS. The right of way through the Indian Territory is given to this company—

Mr. McMILLIN. And through Oklahoma.

Mr. PERKINS. If I remember correctly, this line does not contemplate entering Oklahoma.

Mr. McMILLIN. I did not hear distinctly the reading of the first section, but I think it shows that the right of way is given through Oklahoma. I will ask to have the first section read again.

Mr. PERKINS. I may be mistaken about that, but I know there is no appropriation whatever.

The Clerk again read the first section of the bill.

Mr. McMILLIN. That section shows that it gives the right to construct this line through the Territory of Oklahoma, and that there is an appropriation of public land, the property of the Government.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, if it should be held by the Chair that the language of the rule pertaining to appropriations can be construed to apply to this—

Mr. McMILLIN. Perhaps the shortest way of settling the question, if my friend from Kansas will permit me, will be for me to draw his attention to the language of the rule, which I will read:

Second, a House Calendar, to which shall be referred all bills of a public character not raising revenue nor directly nor indirectly appropriating money or property.

My friend will see that it is not confined to money. It applies to appropriations of money or property.

Mr. PERKINS. I would suggest to the gentleman that there is a public act granting to railroad companies the right of way across the public domain, and the language in this section pertaining to a branch of this line to run in a northwesterly direction into the Territory of Oklahoma is only language descriptive of the direction of the road. There is a general act granting to railroad companies the right of way over the public lands, and it is not necessary to have new legislation in order to give this company the right to build to Oklahoma.

The SPEAKER. This bill only gives land—

Mr. PERKINS. At most it only gives the right to pass over the land. It does not give the fee.

The SPEAKER. Does it give it as to land which is already appropriated by public act?

Mr. PERKINS. Yes, by public statute.

Mr. MCRAE. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman the date of the passage of the act to which this is amendatory. Was it before the passage of the Oklahoma section in the appropriation bill?

Mr. PERKINS. Yes; it was before that time.

Mr. MCRAE. Then if this will have the effect to grant the right of way through lands that were public lands at that time, without giving compensation to those who have taken up those lands since that time, it ought not to pass. If the purpose is to give the right of way over lands that were public at that time, but are not public lands now, the bill ought not to pass, because those who have taken up those lands ought to have the right to compensation like other people.

Mr. PERKINS. Of course where lands have been taken up under the homestead or pre-emption laws the Territorial or other existing law must govern, and compensation will have to be made as in other cases. This applies only to public lands and Indian lands.

Mr. MCRAE. But there are no public lands in Oklahoma now, because they have all been taken up.

Mr. PERKINS. Yes, they have all been taken up.

Mr. MCRAE. Then I suggest that this provision ought to be stricken out.

Mr. PERKINS. I have no objection to that. I regret that the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HARE] who introduced this bill is not present to explain it.

Mr. HOOKER. Is there a report upon this bill?

Mr. PERKINS. Yes, sir.

Mr. HOOKER. It ought to be read.

Mr. PERKINS. I see the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HARE] is now in his seat.

Mr. HARE. I have just come in and do not understand what is before the House.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, the point of order is not waived.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has not heard any waiver.

Mr. COBB. Mr. Speaker, I have an amendment that I desire to offer to this bill at the proper time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can not offer an amendment pending a point of order. The Chair desires to be put in possession of the facts of this matter. If this bill does not make an appropriation of land or of property of the United States, it is not open to the point of order.

Mr. HARE. I do not consider this bill as appropriating lands of the United States. This is to amend a charter that was granted three years ago. The original charter required the company to construct so many miles of railroad within a certain time. The company failed to construct as much as was required by the act, and they come now to ask that the charter be extended and that they be given three years more in which to construct 100 miles. In addition to that, there is an amendment authorizing the extension of a branch of the road to Oklahoma.

There is no public land granted, as I understand, by this bill. It simply grants a right of way through the Indian Territory. It does not appropriate any public domain either of the Indians or of the United States, but simply gives a charter for the right to construct a railroad.

Mr. HOOKER. Let us have the report read.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. On the point of order I wish to say that the portion of the Territory which this right of way proposes to enter is now public land.

Mr. HOLMAN. On the question of order I wish—

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas has the floor.

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to suggest to the gentleman from Kansas that the general law granting right of way through the public lands does not apply perhaps to Oklahoma, inasmuch as—

The SPEAKER. But the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANDERSON] is upon the floor on a point of order.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I was going to call the attention of the Chair to this fact: That the charter for this company, as I understand, has expired; that while in one sense this is an extension of the original charter, yet in an actual and substantial sense it authorizes a new branch; that a portion of the land through which this right of way is intended to be granted to this company is now public land; that while in the sense in which the old land-grant roads were spoken of as receiving grants of public lands this road does not receive a subsidy, yet to the extent of its right of way it does receive a grant of public land—a grant of public land 200 feet wide and a given number of miles in length; that this public land is public property; and therefore, so far as the bill grants a right of way through any public land, it is giving away public property and is liable to the point of order.

Now, I want to call the attention of the Chair to another feature of the bill—

Mr. PERKINS. If my friend will permit the suggestion, I will ask to strike out in the bill the words "and the country known as Oklahoma." That will remove all question.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not see how this bill in any way appropriates public land.

Mr. PERKINS. I do not either; but I was willing to remove the difficulty by the change I have suggested.

The SPEAKER. The bill simply grants right of way, which is a different affair.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I am not through yet. I want to call the attention of the Chair to another fact. This bill in language does what I never knew any bill to do before: it grants the ownership of a public highway to a company. The acts of 1862-1864 did not grant ownership; they granted franchises; they granted certain privileges. Nowhere have I ever seen an act that granted to a company the ownership of a public highway. If you take the position that you can exercise the power of eminent domain for the purpose of taking from one private citizen his property and giving it to another private citizen in the form of a railway company, you are running in the very teeth of the fundamental principles of law which have been recognized from the day that the law began.

Now, this bill in language takes a public highway and grants the ownership of it to a company. It does not grant alone the franchise of collecting tolls over a public highway; many bills do that; and they also grant the franchise of collecting a reasonable rate for operating a road as a public carrier.

But this bill goes away beyond that; it goes away beyond a grant of public money or public land; it goes to the point of granting a public highway to a private corporation; and I submit to the Chair that this is a grant of public property, and under the rules this bill can not be considered in the House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I thought the Chair would.

Mr. HOLMAN. Has not the hour expired?

The SPEAKER. The hour has not expired.

Mr. HOOKER. I ask for the reading of the report accompanying this bill.

The SPEAKER. The question is upon the amendment reported by the committee.

Mr. HOOKER. I ask for the reading of the report.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman desires to address the House, he can have the report read as a part of his remarks.

Mr. HOOKER. I will take the floor and ask that the report be read in my time.

The report (by Mr. BOOTHMAN) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 856) to amend section 1 and section 9 of an act entitled "An act to authorize the Denison and Washita Valley Railway Company to construct and operate a railway through the Indian Territory, and for other purposes," approved July 1, 1886, submit the following report:

In 1886 Congress passed an act granting a right of way through the Indian Territory from a point about 100 miles west of the northeast corner of the State of Texas, at or near Denison, in Grayson County, Texas, to a point near Fort Smith, Ark., on the eastern boundary of the Indian Territory, to the Denison and Washita Valley Railway Company. This act, among other conditions, required the company to construct at least 50 miles of the proposed road in the Indian Territory within three years from the passage of the act. About 10 miles have been so constructed and are now in operation therein. The whole line contemplated to be built in the Territory was something near 125 miles in length. The reason given why the 50 miles have not been built is the failure to secure the necessary funds, the company being composed largely of persons of limited means, who depended on the sale of the bonds of the road for the purpose of completing it.

The committee is informed that the company has now practically succeeded in making arrangements by which it can go on and complete the road and the branch road by this bill proposed to be built in a short time. The advantages claimed to result from the road when built are that it will open up the lumber region of the Red River on the one hand to the people of Oklahoma, the Indian Territory, and Kansas, while on the other it will give an outlet to the coal mines of the Indian Territory, which are now in operation, to the south, northwest, and western portions of that region and to the people of Texas.

Your committee are of opinion that the bill should be amended so as to require the company to complete the construction of not less than 100 miles of the proposed road and branch within the limits of the Indian Territory in three years; also, that the further privileges conferred by the bill should be given upon the same conditions and limitations as were imposed in the original act to which this bill is amendatory.

We therefore recommend that section 1 of the bill be amended by inserting at the end thereof the following proviso, namely:

"Provided, That all of the rights, franchises, powers, and privileges by this act granted to said railway company are hereby declared to be, and are hereby, given, granted, and conferred upon and to it and its successors and assigns subject to the same conditions and limitations as are contained in the act to which this is amendatory, except only as to the time in which to complete the construction of that part of said company's road required by section 2 of this act, which shall be done within the time therein set forth."

Also amend section 2 by striking out the word "fifty," in line 3 of said section, and inserting the words "one hundred" in its stead; and as thus amended we recommend the passage of the bill.

The amendment reported by the committee was agreed to.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I wish to offer an amendment. I will ask my colleague [Mr. PERKINS] whether the original act of which this is amendatory contains the ordinary repealing clause.

Mr. PERKINS. There is a repealing clause in this bill, and there was also in the original act.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I did not hear the repealing clause when the bill was read.

Mr. PERKINS. The original act is very carefully framed in that particular. It authorizes Congress to alter or repeal the legislation at any time and to declare a forfeiture if the company does not conform to all the provisions of the bill.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I wish to offer an amendment to strike out the word "own" where it occurs in the first section of the bill. It sets forth a grant to this company of certain powers to survey, construct, etc., a railway company, and among the words employed is the word "own."

Mr. PERKINS. I move the previous question on the amendment and on the passage of the bill.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I move to strike out that word.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. PERKINS] moves the previous question upon the bill and pending amendment.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I rise to a point of order.

Mr. PERKINS (to Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas). That includes your amendment.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Very well; then let my amendment be put.

The SPEAKER. The question can not be put on the amendment until the motion for the previous question is put.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. All right.

Mr. COBB. I had proposed an amendment; I do not know whether that is included in the operation of the previous question or not.

The SPEAKER. No amendment of the gentleman has been stated to the House.

Mr. COBB. I asked the privilege of offering it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognized the gentleman in charge of the bill.

The question being taken on ordering the previous question, there were—ayes 61, noes 21.

Mr. BUCHANAN, of New Jersey. No quorum.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Jersey makes the point that no quorum is present. The Chair will count the House. [A pause.] The Chair counts 124 members—not a quorum.

Mr. PERKINS. I believe the hour is exhausted or nearly so.

A MEMBER (to Mr. BUCHANAN, of New Jersey). Withdraw your point.

Mr. BUCHANAN, of New Jersey. I will not insist on the point if a fair opportunity for amendment be given.

Mr. PERKINS. I move a call of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the roll.

The roll was called; and the following members failed to answer to their names:

Abbott,	Burrows,	Grout,	Rife,
Adams,	Campbell,	Hall,	Rockwell,

The SPEAKER. Two hundred and ten members have answered to their names, which are more than a quorum.

Several members asked to have their names recorded, having come in after their names had been called.

The SPEAKER. The rule provides for noting members reporting to the Clerk to be recorded as present.

Messrs. EDMUNDS, SHIVELY, HANSBROUGH, ALLEN of Mississippi, BROOKSHIRE, ATKINSON of Pennsylvania, ELLIOTT, ADAMS, GROUT, BRECKINRIDGE of Arkansas, TILLMAN, ABBOTT, BURROWS, MORRILL, FARQUHAR, DALZELL, and HENDERSON of Illinois appeared, and were recorded as present.

Mr. CANNON. I move that all further proceedings under the call be dispensed with.

The motion was agreed to.

OKLAHOMA.

Mr. CANNON. I am directed by the Committee on Rules to submit the following report.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Rules, to whom was referred the following resolution: "Resolved, That the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union be discharged from the further consideration of Senate bill (S. 895) to provide a temporary government for the Territory of Oklahoma, and the substitute therefor reported by the Committee on Territories, and that Thursday, March 13, 1890, be set apart for the consideration of such bill, immediately after the morning hour, and that two hours be given for general debate and for the offering of amendments to such bill and substitute, at the expiration of which time the previous question shall be considered as ordered on such bill and pending amendments, and immediately thereafter the vote shall be taken in order upon such pending amendments and the passage of the bill and the substitute recommended therefor;"

having had the same under consideration, report the same back with a substitute therefor, and recommend the adoption of the said substitute in the following words: "Resolved, That immediately after the morning hour this day the House shall resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (S. 895) to provide a temporary government for the Territory of Oklahoma and a substitute therefor reported by the Committee on Territories; and that the consideration of the said bill be continued in committee during this legislative day; and that on tomorrow, immediately after the morning hour, the Committee of the Whole House shall resume the consideration of the said bill, and at 4 o'clock on said day the committee shall rise and report the bill to the House, with such amendments as may have been agreed to; and thereupon the previous question shall be deemed ordered upon said amendments, and the engrossment and third reading and passage of the bill."

Mr. CANNON. This substitute recommended by the Committee on Rules, if adopted, provides that the balance of to-day, and to-morrow until 4 o'clock, shall be devoted to the consideration of the Oklahoma bill, at which time the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and substitute therefor and amendments in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

I will now yield for five minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARNES].

Mr. BARNES. Mr. Speaker, I have been seriously and earnestly opposed, from its first presentation, to the substitute offered by the Committee on Territories for the organization of the government of Oklahoma Territory, and have given my preference to the Senate bill. I am still of the same opinion. But I recognize the fact that there must be a limit to all debate. There are other pressing and important measures coming from the Committee on the Territories. They must be considered by the House. This bill stands in the way.

I recognize, Mr. Speaker, also, the further fact that it is exceedingly important, and is so recognized by the Executive Departments of the Government, because of pressing necessities, that a Territorial government in some form should be organized for the Territory of Oklahoma. I still hope that the Senate bill may be finally adopted.

But, sir, in view of all the circumstances and the long time that has been already given to the debate on this bill, I believe that a limit should be put to it, and after a full consideration of all the circumstances have given my assent to this proposition and trust the opponents of the measure will, as far as possible, assent to it by the adoption of the resolution reported from the Committee on Rules limiting the debate to the time specified.

Mr. ADAMS. I desire to ask my colleague a question.

Mr. CANNON. Certainly.

Mr. ADAMS. I notice that the phrase "immediately after the morning hour" occurs twice in the pending resolution. I had supposed that the morning hour under our new rules lasted all day, unless terminated by a particular motion; and I will simply ask whether there may not be some ambiguity in the expression? It should have been "after the first sixty minutes of the morning hour have expired."

Mr. CANNON. I will accept the amendment and modify the resolution accordingly.

Mr. HOOKER. Mr. Speaker, I would like to be heard on this question.

Mr. CANNON. I will yield five minutes to the gentleman.

Mr. HOOKER. Before that, I would like to have the proposed substitute again read, not in my time.

The substitute as modified was again read.

Mr. HOOKER. Mr. Speaker, I am at a loss to understand what is the purpose of the Committee on Rules in presenting a proposition of that character to limit the debate on a measure of the importance of that which is now under consideration. We are confronted with a proposition here to introduce a special rule with reference to the consideration of this Oklahoma bill; but, like all special rules, it is obnoxious to the objection that it is intended to apply to a particular measure only, and will cease and have no further force or effect after that particular measure shall have been disposed of under the special rule invoked.

Now, sir, we are considering this measure, this amendment of the House to the Senate bill, and we are considering it in Committee of the Whole. We have progressed to a certain point—to the consideration of seven sections of the bill—and now the Committee on Rules, consisting of but five members of this body, two from the Republican side, two from the Democratic side, and the Speaker of the House, who is ex officio chairman of the committee, here propose to limit all discussion and action on this measure. I want to call the attention of the House to the fact that if the Committee on Rules have the power to introduce an arbitrary rule for the governance of the House in the consideration of any particular measure it may do it as to all measures. We may assume, if the exigency arises, that they may be expected to exercise the same power and that it will be exercised on every other bill or every other occasion on which it may be the desire of the majority to force an early vote.

Why, Mr. Speaker, should this be done? What necessity exists at this time for it? Why not abide by the rules that have been adopted for the government of the House with regard to this bill and in regard to all other bills? Why should we adopt a special rule to apply to the consideration of this measure departing thus early from the rules, which have been incubated after months of deliberation by the Committee on Rules and presented for the consideration of the House, and for its guidance in the transaction of the public business? Why now stop in the midst of the discussion and consideration of this important measure and let this committee report its special rule by which the previous question shall be considered as ordered at a specific time, and thereby force action upon the bill whether the House has considered it fully or not?

Mr. Speaker, there are over thirty sections to this bill. We have considered thus far but seven. There are numerous amendments proposed in regard to the other measures embodied in the bill, and if you fix a particular time for calling the previous question to-morrow or at any future time, as is proposed by the Committee on Rules, you may exclude and will, in all probability, exclude the consideration of many of the most important amendments. This is a measure, as all gentlemen will concede, of the utmost importance, and is one which ought to be considered under the rules of the House. It should be considered in accordance with the rules adopted by the House for the government of all such matters, and if there be a reason why this rule should be introduced by the autocratic power of the Committee on Rules, I warn you gentlemen that you may look for a similar innovation on all other measures of public importance, and you may expect that when rules are adopted by the House to meet certain contingencies and to fit certain purposes, cutting off debate on a particular measure—that you may expect a like character of rules to apply to other equally important measures, and to any measure, no matter what it is, which may come before the House for consideration.

I do not look, sir, upon the rules which require the House to pause, reflect, and consider before expressing its judgment; I do not look upon the rules which require argument which will illustrate and elucidate facts and truths and impresses upon the people the great consequences involved in that particular controversy; I do not look upon such rules as in the way of a proper conduct of the public business, but on the contrary as auxiliary if not essential to the conduct of such cases. But, whatever be their character, they have been adopted by the House; they are the rules of the House, framed for its government, and why should they be changed? And if they may be changed in regard to this particular bill so they may also be changed and altered in respect to every measure which may come before the House of Representatives.

I can see no reason whatever for it. The committee have a right to determine this question in the ordinary manner fixed by the rules of the House. We have considered it for some time in committee, but now we are asked to adopt another rule which takes it away from the committee, and I tell you gentlemen again if you do this you may well expect your general rules to be superseded at any moment by reports from the Committee on Rules, on resolutions offered by gentlemen limiting debate upon any particular measure. You may expect the limitation of debate upon the great question of taxation, and you will have it on every other great question. And I say if this supersedes the standing rules and orders of the House you may well and reasonably expect to have the same proposition made when we come to consider that great question of taxation, the most vital question which can be considered by this or any other Congress.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. CANNON. A word in reply. I yielded to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BAENES] five minutes, and, in simple justice, yielded to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HOOKER] for five minutes, as they occupied different positions upon this matter. Now, as I said in the beginning, this order, if adopted, will devote the balance of to-day and to-morrow until 4 o'clock to the consideration of this bill, and then come to a vote, the consideration commencing to-morrow after the expiration of sixty minutes spent in the morning hour.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Will the gentleman from Illinois allow me a suggestion, which is this: To strike out "sixty minutes in the morning hour," and let the consideration commence immediately after the reading of the Journal?

Mr. CANNON. I would prefer not to dispense with the sixty minutes of the morning hour.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. It makes a delay of sixty minutes.

Mr. CANNON. For that matter, I want to say that the Oklahoma bill almost from the commencement of this session has blocked the way, and it has been talked about and discussed till I think all of us understand the merits of this bill and the proposed substitute. I believe, for one, that a great block of our people in a portion of our Territory, without government and substantially without law, should not be compelled to further wait in that condition. Therefore, as I understood it was agreeable to many gentlemen upon that side and to many upon this side to close the consideration of the Oklahoma bill, for one I voted for this order. The gentleman from Mississippi seems to claim that other orders may follow. They may or may not; I do not know. I have none in mind at this time and know of none that are to follow; but if they do follow they will follow by a majority vote in this House. We are not alone in this House and in this Congress in making special orders. In past Congresses, especially the Forty-eighth, Forty-ninth, and Fiftieth Congresses, they were almost of daily occurrence. I move the previous question on the adoption of the report.

The question was put; and the Speaker announced that the "ayes" seemed to have it.

Mr. HOOKER. Division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 103, noes 23.

Mr. HOOKER. I raise the point that no quorum is present.

Mr. SPRINGER. I hope the gentleman will withdraw that, as it is just so much time taken from the consideration of the bill.

Mr. HOOKER. I raise the point.

Mr. SPRINGER. Let us have the yeas and nays.

Mr. CANNON. Yeas and nays, Mr. Speaker. [Before the question was put.] I will withdraw the demand for the yeas and nays, as it is on the previous question.

Mr. SPRINGER. I withdraw the demand for the yeas and nays at present.

Mr. HOOKER. I now call for the yeas and nays, as this is an important question.

The yeas and nays were refused.

The SPEAKER. On this question the yeas are 108, the noes 23; and there being a quorum present, the previous question is ordered. The question is now on the adoption of the resolution.

The resolution as amended is as follows:

Resolved, That immediately after the call of committees under clause 4, Rule XXIV, this day, the House shall resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of Senate bill (S. 895) to provide a temporary government for the Territory of Oklahoma and a substitute therefor reported by the Committee on Territories; and that the consideration of the said bill be continued in committee during the remainder of this legislative day, and that on to-morrow, immediately after sixty minutes have been occupied by a call of committees, the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union shall resume the consideration of the said bill; and at 4 o'clock on said day the committee shall rise and report the bill to the House with such amendments as may have been agreed to, and thereupon the previous question shall be deemed ordered upon said amendments, and engrossment and third reading and passage of the bill.

The resolution was adopted.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, Mr. PAYSON in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole for the further consideration of the bill (S. 895) to provide a temporary government for the Territory of Oklahoma. Section 7 of the bill was under consideration, and the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MORSE] is entitled to the floor upon an amendment which was then under consideration.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. Chairman, it is not my purpose to detain the House with any remarks at this time. I simply desire to say that, after conferring with legal gentlemen who are members of this House upon this floor, I think it best to withdraw the amendment I offered and to offer the following amendment as a substitute for that amendment, which will obviate all the objections raised to the other amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend section 7 by inserting, after the word "Territory," in line 6, the following:

"And that the provisions of section 2139 of the Revised Statutes be, and the same are hereby, extended to this Territory until otherwise provided by law."

Mr. STEWART, of Georgia. I desire to have that section read, Mr. Chairman, that it may be thoroughly understood.

The Clerk read as follows:

No ardent spirits shall be introduced under any pretense into the Indian country. Every person (except an Indian in the Indian country) who sells, exchanges, gives, barter, or disposes of any spirituous liquors or wine to any Indian under the charge of any Indian superintendent or agent, or introduces or attempts to introduce any spirituous liquor or wine into the Indian country, shall be punishable by imprisonment for not more than two years and by a fine of not more than $500. But it shall be a sufficient defense to any charge of introducing or attempting to introduce liquor into the Indian country that the acts charged were done by order of or under authority from the War Department or any officer duly authorized thereunto by the War Department.

[Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. STEWART, of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I do not desire to discuss this matter, but only to make one statement. A gentleman the other day made the statement that the laws of Nebraska covered this question. The Nebraska statute provides that by the consent of thirty freeholders the right to retail spirituous liquors may be granted under license of that State. Thinking that there was some mistake about that, I desire to call the attention of the House to that fact. I have the gentleman's statement in the RECORD to that effect.

Now, I only want to make one passing remark. The provision read applies to the Indian Territory. Some question has been raised on the floor as to the fact that No Man's Land is not strictly in the Indian country, and that question might be made. The provision is that the code shall apply to the entire Territory of Oklahoma and make symmetry in our statutes.

[Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

The question was put; and the Chairman announced that the "noes" seemed to have it.

Mr. STEWART, of Georgia. Division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 30, noes 44.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. KERR, of Iowa. I ask unanimous consent that on this amendment there shall be a yeas-and-nays vote in the House.

A MEMBER. I object.

Mr. KERR, of Iowa. Then I make the point of no quorum.

Cries of "Too late!" "Too late!"

Mr. KELLEY. Mr. Chairman, I rise to offer an amendment which I send to the desk.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Amend section 7 by striking out the word "Nebraska" wherever it occurs in this section and inserting "Kansas."

Mr. KELLEY. Mr. Chairman, the object of the amendment is very similar to the object of the amendment which has just been voted down, but my reason for offering the amendment is not that I have any objection to the laws of Nebraska, but because I prefer that the laws of Kansas should apply to this Territory. As is perhaps well known to every gentleman in this House, in Kansas we have prohibition, and it works well, and probably more people have gone to this Territory from Kansas than from any other State, and I have been requested by many of them to offer this as an amendment to the pending bill. Further than that, Mr. Chairman, in Kansas we have a provision of law which allows women to vote upon all questions pertaining to the municipal government of cities and towns and in relation to schools, and we find that it works very well, and adds a great deal to our power to enforce the prohibition law. Indeed, I think that without this provision prohibition, even in Kansas, would be a failure. Now I hope the women who have gone to this new Territory as pioneers will be placed on an equality with the men who have made sacrifices by going out there, and that their counsels and their intelligence and their patriotism will be felt in the popular vote in the same way that it is in the State of Kansas, and will have its influence in the enactment of laws for the government of that Territory.

Mr. KERR, of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. In addition to what the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. KELLEY] has just said with regard to this matter, I think it is very important, in the organization of this Territory, to provide against the introduction of intoxicating liquors. The gentleman from Kansas has adduced forcible reasons why the laws of Kansas should prevail in this Territory, but, in addition to that, I wish to suggest that in Kansas, and in Iowa, and in every State where the policy of prohibition has been adopted we find that one of the strongest arguments made against it is that it is a violation of vested rights; that the liquor-dealers have vested interests which the adoption of the policy of prohibition affects injuriously. The governor of my State, elected last fall, devotes a great deal of space in his message to arguing that our prohibitory laws are destructive of vested rights. Now, in order that this question may not hereafter arise in the Territory of Oklahoma and the argument be made there as it has been made in Iowa and elsewhere, that vested rights are affected by prohibitory legislation, I think that in the organization of this Territory we ought to begin on the principle that no man can have a vested right to destroy his fellow-men by the introduction of a system that has proved so disastrous, so prolific of crime and of other evils that affect society. For that reason, sir, I hope that the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Kansas will be adopted.

Mr. PICKLER. Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of this amendment. I am in favor of it not only because I believe in keeping liquor out of this Territory until the Territorial Legislature shall act upon the question, but also because I believe that two men out of every five now in the Territory of Oklahoma have gone there from the State of Kansas. The laws of Kansas have been over that Territory until the present time—

Mr. KILGORE. I understood the gentleman to say that most of the present population of the Territory are from the State of Kansas.

Mr. PICKLER. A large percentage of it.

Mr. KILGORE. My understanding is that most of them have run away from Kansas to get rid of the prohibition laws. [Laughter.]

Mr. PICKLER. I want to say to the gentleman from Texas—I do not know whether he indorses the opinion or not—that there are Texas Prohibitionists down there in Oklahoma who are praying to him to vote for this amendment.

Mr. CULBERSON, of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I understand that the proposition of the pending amendment is to import into Oklahoma the laws of Kansas.

Mr. PICKLER. Yes, sir; instead of the laws of Nebraska, as the bill proposes.

Mr. CULBERSON, of Texas. I want to ask the gentleman whether, under the laws of Kansas, a person who served in the Confederate army is allowed to vote.

Mr. PICKLER. I can not answer the gentleman, but if there is any objection on that score it can be easily removed. I got acquainted with men down there who had been Confederate soldiers and who were law-and-order men and helped to keep the law in force, and if there is any such prohibition in the laws of Kansas as the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] intimates, I should be emphatically in favor of eradicating it.

Mr. CULBERSON, of Texas. I understand that there is such a provision. I will ask the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. PERKINS] if it is not so?

Mr. PERKINS. That is a constitutional provision. It prohibits such a person from voting unless where the disqualification has been removed by act of the Legislature.

Mr. CULBERSON, of Texas. And this amendment applies to the constitution and laws of Kansas and proposes to introduce them in Oklahoma?

Mr. PICKLER. I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that there is nothing in the bill or amendment in regard to the constitution of the State, but only in regard to the laws.

Mr. CULBERSON, of Texas. But the constitution is the supreme law of the State.

Mr. PICKLER. But this bill or this amendment does not provide anything about the constitution of the State being established for the government of Oklahoma. The bill only speaks of the statutes. However, I want to say further to the gentleman that if that provision of the Kansas law or constitution would apply I am sure there would be no objection on the part of any gentleman on this floor to eradicate it now. In my opinion, there is not a man here who wants any such rule to obtain in a Territory like Oklahoma, which is being settled from States north and south. The bill, however, speaks only of the statutes, not of the constitution.

Mr. CULBERSON, of Texas. I think the gentleman is mistaken about that.

Mr. PICKLER. Mr. Chairman, while I believe in the prohibition law of the State of Kansas—while I believe in prohibition upon principle—that is only one reason why, in my judgment, the statutes of Kansas should be applied to this Territory. As I was about to remark, a large number of the people in that Territory are from Kansas and are acquainted with the provisions of the statutes of that State. United States marshals from Kansas are the officers who have been protecting the citizens in that Territory since it has been settled. Prisoners held to answer there are held to answer before the courts of Kansas. Oklahoma City in its organization adopted the laws of Kansas for its government. There is, therefore, it seems to me, every argument why the laws of Kansas, rather than the laws of Nebraska, should be extended to this Territory. Why the laws of Nebraska should be applied to this Territory, as this bill provides, is something that I do not understand.

Mr. Chairman, aside from what may be the opinion of any gentleman on this floor as to the liquor question, this matter of keeping intoxicating liquors out of that Territory is a very serious one for the people there. Let us provide in this bill, as the General Government has provided up to this time, that no intoxicating liquors shall be admitted into that Territory until its own Territorial Legislature shall act upon this question. It will be time enough, gentlemen, for saloons in Oklahoma Territory when the people there vote that they will have them. During the months of April, May, and June of last year I do not remember a day when Indians did not come to the city of Guthrie, the largest city of the Territory, from the Iowa and Kickapoo reservations, only a few miles distant. The Indians come there daily on horseback and on foot. Now, if you admit liquor into that Territory, it will be impossible to keep it from the Indians. Only a mile and a half from the cities of Kingfisher and Lisbon are the camps of the Arapaho Indians. In view of the presence of the Indians, I submit that if you allow intoxicating liquors to be imported into this Territory and saloons to be established, you take great risk with reference to the peace and welfare of that community. The towns with their officers might be able to cope with any trouble that might arise; but if the Indians, who must travel by the homes of the settlers in returning to their reservations, should be permitted to become intoxicated, there will be no safety for the settlers.

Even if there were none but white settlers in Oklahoma, there are the strongest reasons why intoxicating liquors should not be admitted there. There are conflicting interests among the settlers in that country. There are questions as to who are entitled to the ownership of lots. Other questions which arouse men in any country are coming up for settlement. The people there must organize their Territory, must erect counties, must vote upon county-seats, must put into operation the whole machinery of government. There is everything at issue to arouse the feelings of men, and every reason, it seems to me, why, before the Territorial organization is effected, Congress should keep liquor out of that Territory.

Is it not time enough—I appeal to gentlemen on this floor—is it not time enough to have saloons out there, is it not time enough for liquor to be introduced among those people, when the Territory has been placed under their own Territorial enactments? As I understand, under the laws of Nebraska (which this bill proposes to extend to this Territory) saloons can be opened anywhere in that Territory upon the petition of thirty freeholders. Adopt such a provision, gentlemen, and it will not be twenty days after the passage of this bill before there will be from three hundred to five hundred saloons opened in this little Territory of Oklahoma.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. PICKLER. I move to amend by striking out the last word.

Mr. PEEL. I wish to submit to the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. PICKLER] whether it would not be better to allow the statute of the United States which prohibits the introduction of liquor into the Territory to remain unrepealed by this bill.

Mr. PICKLER. Emphatically; I should be in favor of that; but the committee has voted that down. I would prefer a provision of that kind to the Kansas enactment.

Mr. PEEL. The law of the United States, I think, would be better than the law either of Nebraska or Kansas.

Mr. PICKLER. It seems to me that the House can scarcely have understood the question in voting down the provision to which the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. PEEL] refers. I should be in favor unequivocally and emphatically of making the statutes of the United States on this subject apply to this Territory until the Territorial Legislature shall act on the subject. I should prefer such an amendment as that to the amendment of my friend from Kansas [Mr. KELLEY].

Mr. ROGERS. The gentleman will allow me a single remark. I concur with the view expressed by the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. PICKLER], that it would be wise to keep liquor out of this Territory until the Territorial organization is completed. But the amendment of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. STEWART] went far beyond that. It was in such terms that it would continue in force until an act of Congress should repeal it; an act of the Territorial Legislature could not do so.

Mr. PICKLER. That could be very easily remedied by modifying the terms of the provision.

Mr. STEWART, of Georgia. My amendment provided for that.

Mr. ROGERS. I did not so understand.

Mr. STEWART, of Georgia. By its terms, it was provided that it should remain in force only during the Territorial existence.

Mr. ROGERS. I thought the provision was that it should continue in force until repealed by a law of Congress.

Mr. PICKLER. I will detain the committee but a moment longer. I submit that the people of Oklahoma Territory, if they could voice their sentiments, would by a large majority say to you in no uncertain tones, "Keep liquor out of our Territory until we have our own Territorial laws." I know that is what a large majority of them desire.

Remember this, gentlemen: that the Government of the United States has by its strong arm kept liquor out of this Territory from the time of its first settlement until the present. Now, can you afford as a House of Representatives of the United States to force liquor upon those people by voting for this bill as it stands? It seems to me not.

I say, therefore, this proposition involves a broader question than what a man may believe on the liquor question. That is not the prime inquiry. The important, the paramount question is whether the House of Representatives will continue the policy which the Government has heretofore adopted, and keep liquor out of that Territory until these people can form their own laws and until these perilous questions to which I have referred—because the questions in respect to property rights with regard to town sites, etc., are perilous questions which are to be settled in the coming months—until these perilous questions have been settled by the act on of the people of the Territory. I hope this House will coolly and deliberately say by its vote to the people of Oklahoma: "As the United States Government has kept liquor out of your Territory until the present, we will continue that policy, and will not allow it to come in until you say so by your own enactment." That is reasonable. There is nothing unfair about that. It does not compromise the convictions which any gentleman may entertain in regard to the liquor question. It is in the line of peace, good order, right, and justice. I hope it will prevail.

Before sitting down I will say that I do not care in what form the purpose I have advocated be accomplished, whether by a continuation of the statute of the United States on the subject of intoxicating liquors or by extending to this Territory the statutes of Kansas. I simply desire that by some effectual provision intoxicating liquors shall be kept out of this Territory until the Territorial Legislature can pass on the question.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I desire to have the following letter read in closing my remarks.

The Clerk read as follows:

NATIONAL WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION,
Chicago, Ill., March 6, 1890.

To the honorable Senate and House of Representatives of the United States:

In view of the fact that your honorable body is considering a constitution for Oklahoma, we, the undersigned, representing more than one hundred and fifty thousand women, beg that you will use the constitution of the prohibitory State of Kansas as your model.

Oklahoma has never suffered the disgrace of the legalized liquor traffic, and we earnestly entreat that the United States Government will continue to protect her in this, as in every other particular, and that this may go into her fundamental law.

FRANCES E. WILLARD,
President National Woman's Christian Temperance Union.
CAROLINE B. BUELL,
Corresponding Secretary.
ESTHER PUGH, Treasurer.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will consider the pro forma amendment as having been withdrawn.

Mr. CHIPMAN. I ask for the reading of the pending amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend section 7 by striking out the word "Nebraska" wherever it occurs and inserting the word "Kansas."

Mr. CHIPMAN. Mr. Chairman, I suppose the object of this amendment is to introduce into the Territory which we are now organizing what are known as the prohibitory laws of Kansas. I, sir, must oppose that. I do not believe we ought at this stage to fasten any policy in regard to the liquor traffic on the Territory. If we do anything at all we should leave the people there free, as the people of the other Territories have been left free, to shape their policy for themselves.

I say without reserve that I am utterly opposed to what is known as the prohibitive policy. I believe it is vicious in principle and I know that it is vicious in practice. It is undemocratic. It is more congenial to despotic than to free governments.

I have observed its effect in my own State for a period of nearly twenty years, and the people of that State threw it aside in utter disgust, because it did not prohibit the use or the sale, even, of liquor. Drunkenness was rather encouraged by it, and it was found intemperance increased under the operation of that law, and the liquor traffic was unregulated, unchecked by any proper code of regulations. It was evil in its principle, in its effects. It had no redeeming feature, and was cast aside by the people.

For these reasons, Mr. Chairman, I must oppose this amendment. It undertakes, not to leave the people of the Territory free, as somebody said on the other side, to choose a system, but it fastens a system on them, a system which is exceptional, a system which does not prevail in a majority of the States of the Union, and it undertakes to determine that system in advance and commit this Territory in the direction of what is known as prohibition. Is essays to achieve the great purpose of the prohibitionist, to lay the foundation of a State in prohibition.

Mr. PICKLER. Let me ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. CHIPMAN. Ask your question.

Mr. PICKLER. Either I do not understand the proposition or the gentleman does not. We only seek to keep the liquor traffic out until the first Legislature is organized to determine the matter.

Mr. CHIPMAN. That is what I am opposed to. I do understand the gentleman. I do him the compliment to say he expresses himself clearly, and it is that very thing I object to. I object that the people of my State, that the brewers, that the men who have their capital invested in this business shall be handicapped in order that the views the gentleman who has just questioned me entertains shall be made the foundation of the future of a great Territory, and of what will be a great State, that they shall be the rule of action in advance of everybody who goes into the Territory. That is what I am opposing, and that is what I invite the House to vote down in the shape of the pending amendment. I do not propose that my constituents who are in the liquor traffic shall be branded as outlaws.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. ALLEN, of Michigan. I am surprised, Mr. Chairman, that my colleague would open this Territory to the liquor traffic, by indirection or otherwise, until the people thereof have had opportunity to express their choice. All must admit that without the presence of statutory law saloon-keepers can go now into the Territory as freely as those who go there with dry goods and groceries. In other words, under the common law there is no restriction on this business. Here we have a Territory which has been kept in order by the good sense and good conscience of the people, aided by the United States Army. [Applause.] Through the course of procedure relative to this Territory there has not been a day or an hour that the use and sale of liquor there have not been prohibited. My friend from Michigan who opposes this amendment proposes, instead of leaving things in statu quo, to throw down the barriers and admit whisky with no more restrictions than upon the admission of dry goods, except a small tax and without opportunity on the part of the people there in any manner to prevent it. It is that we object to. We say things should remain as they are in this Territory until the people have organized their Government and can act on the question for themselves. [Applause.]

Then if they want prohibition let them have it. If they want license they will legalize it. But as far as we are concerned it would be a fatal mistake for this House or for Congress to reverse what has been the policy of the Government ever since the first white man set foot in this Territory, to wit, to keep alcoholic liquors out of it. We can not afford to allow it, and that is the only question before us now, namely, whether we will let things remain as they are or allow whisky to come in free as a commodity, when every man, whether he uses it or not, knows it to be an evil, and an evil which should be held in check by the most stringent laws.

Mr. CHIPMAN. Will my colleague allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. ALLEN, of Michigan. Certainly.

Mr. CHIPMAN. Under what law does the Government exercise the policy of keeping whisky out of the Territory now?

Mr. ALLEN, of Michigan. Under a special law applicable to the conditions there and backed by the strong arm of the military.

Mr. CHIPMAN. That is no law at all.

Mr. ALLEN, of Michigan. I understand; but let matters remain as now relative to liquor, at least until the people have an opportunity of framing a law themselves upon the subject.

Mr. FITCH. Let me ask the gentleman from Michigan whether, if that policy is good, that the Army should enforce prohibition in Oklahoma—whether it would not be also good to be established as a permanent procedure in the District of Columbia.

Mr. ALLEN, of Michigan. The cases are entirely different. They have no government out there except the Army, in one sense of the word, and the Army of the United States is to-day keeping peace in that Territory; and experience has shown that it is absolutely necessary, in order to preserve peace, to keep whisky out. Now, does the gentleman want to throw down the door and let New York saloon-keepers go down there without let or hindrance and set up their whisky bars?

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. PETERS. Mr. Chairman, objection has been made to the amendment that has been offered by my colleague from Kansas, extending the laws of Kansas over this Territory, instead of the laws of Nebraska, because of a provision existing in our State constitution disfranchising those that were in the Confederate army. I propose now an amendment, if in order, and if not I shall present it at the proper time, which I will ask the Clerk to read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add to section 7:

"Provided, That the constitutional provision of Kansas disfranchising persons who served in the Confederate army shall not apply to the qualifications of a voter in the Territory."

Mr. PETERS. That will obviate any objection on that score. I am free to say, from my intercourse with the people in the Territory, that they do not desire that any of those who served in the Confederate army should be deprived of the privilege of voting. I agree that the time has come when a Territory should be allowed to fix its own citizenship, as far as the question of voting is concerned, and I believe the amendment proposed will exempt from the operation of that provision in the law all such persons.

Mr. CULBERSON, of Texas. But does not the constitution of Kansas go still further and prohibit such persons from not only exercising the right of suffrage, but from holding any position under the government?

Mr. KELLEY. I will accept the modification of my amendment as suggested by my colleague [Mr. PETERS].

Mr. PETERS. The suggestion of the gentleman from Texas calls to my mind an additional provision of our Constitution which will be necessary to accept also, namely, the provision that men can not hold office under the Constitution who served in the Confederate army, and I will make that change in the amendment.

Now, Mr. Chairman, while I have the floor I wish to say a word upon another question which has been raised here, namely, prohibition. I want to testify from personal observation that there is not a law that can be framed that is more essential to the peace and good order of that Territory of Oklahoma, when it shall have been formed, than this law of prohibition. We have a law now, a statute law, which prevents the introduction of whisky into the Territory.

Mr. CANDLER, of Georgia. Does it prevent?

Mr. PETERS. Yes, sir; as much as any law for the prevention of crime. It prevents as much as the law for the suppression of murder. There is a criminal law on the statute-books of all of our States prohibiting murder and horse-stealing and similar crimes. In every State of the Union we have such laws, prescribing punishment for horse-stealing and also for the crime of murder. This prohibition law prohibits just as well as any of them.

Mr. KILGORE. Will the gentleman allow me a moment?

Mr. PETERS. I will yield to the gentleman for a question shortly.

We have laws in all of the States prohibiting murder, and yet we have murder committed even within the shadow of the Capitol of the United States. We have laws prohibiting all crimes, and yet the prosecution of criminals takes up much of the time of our courts for the administration of justice; and if that objection is any argument against prohibition, the same can be made against any law, whether it be in regard to horse-stealing or murder or any other crime prohibited by common or statute law.

Mr. FITCH. Mr. Chairman, it is claimed that this is an attempt on the part of the advocates of prohibition to do here in the House what they were defeated and prevented from doing in the committee. In the committee this same matter was brought up and discussed. The advocates of one side desired the laws of Arkansas and on the other the laws of Kansas; and the law of Nebraska, where a high license exists, was selected as a compromise measure. Now these gentlemen, with their pet hobby of prohibition, which has been voted down in State after State, North, lately, would attempt to put on to this Territory this Kansas law which, as I say, State after State has voted down and refused to accept, and the question is, will you override the unanimous decision of the committee on a fair compromise to have the law of Nebraska taken, in order to place gentlemen who are the advocates of prohibition before their Republican or Democratic constituencies, as the case may be?

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. BREWER having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. McCook, its Secretary, announced that the Senate has passed a concurrent resolution providing for the printing of 5,000 extra copies of the report of the Superintendent of the United States Coast and Geodetic Survey for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1889; in which concurrence was requested.

It also announced that the Senate agreed to the amendments of the House to the concurrent resolution of the Senate authorizing the Senate Committee on Immigration and the House Committee on Immigration and Naturalization to jointly investigate the workings of the various laws of the United States and of the States relative to the immigration from foreign countries to the United States.

Also, that the Senate agreed to the concurrent resolution of the House to authorize the printing of additional copies of the tenth, eleventh, and twelfth annual reports of the Director of the United States Geological Survey.

It also announced that the Senate returned, in compliance with the request of the House, the bill (S. 140) to prevent the introduction of contagious diseases from one State to another, and for the punishment of certain offenses.

OKLAHOMA.

The Committee of the Whole resumed its session.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Mr. Chairman, I have not occupied a single moment of the time of the Committee of the House during this session of Congress with reference to the Oklahoma bill.

When this, or a similar bill, was under consideration in the last Congress it did not meet my approval. It seemed to me that, as I said then, we were providing for a government before we had a people to be governed; but since the adjournment of the Fiftieth Congress the situation has changed in the opening of Oklahoma Territory, and I think we ought now to recognize the fact that civil government must be provided for that Territory.

I desire to address myself now directly to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. KELLEY]. The committee have reported in favor of extending the laws of the State of Nebraska—that is, general statutes, which are not locally inapplicable and conflicting with this act—over the new Territory of Oklahoma. The first thing that strikes the mind of one who contemplates this proposed enactment is, that the committee have passed over the State which is most contiguous to the proposed Territory and taken the statutes of another State, entirely removed in locality and in circumstances from the proposed Territory. No explanation has been given here of this remarkable fact, unless it has been done in the remarks just submitted by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITCH]; and that is that the committee recognized the State of Kansas had a prohibitory liquor law, while the State of Nebraska had a high-license law.

Mr. DORSEY. If my friend will allow me to interrupt him, I will state that there were other objections to the Kansas statutes. There was the disqualification of men who had been in the Confederate service.

Mr. CUTCHEON. For one, I am in favor of removing that objection.

Mr. MANSUR. If the gentleman will permit me to interrupt him, I will state the matter as I understand it—and I appeal to the gentleman from Nebraska to inform me whether I am correct—if it be not true that they have prohibition in Nebraska by virtue of the general law, but that each and every county can by vote adopt high license, and that we took that as a compromise in the committee.

Mr. DORSEY. That is true.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Mr. Chairman, I hope these interruptions will not come out of my time.

The next thing that strikes my mind in regard to this amendment is this: Here is a Territory in which this traffic in intoxicating liquors has never been permitted; in which, under the laws of the United States, being an Indian Territory, it was a crime against the laws of the United States to take, vend, or give away a single drop of intoxicating liquors.

There are in this Territory more than 60,000 Indians of various tribes, who will be there just the same after this bill becomes law as they are to-day. They will be subject to the same passions, subject to the same weaknesses, subject to the same influences precisely, after this so-called Oklahoma bill becomes a law that they have been under in the past. They will be Indians still. And if it has been necessary in the past, in order to protect them, and protect others around them with whom they come in contact, from the influences of the sale and use of intoxicating liquors it will be equally as important that the restriction shall continue in the future.

We set apart this Territory years and years ago. We said by solemn treaty obligation that it was set apart as a perpetual home for these Indian tribes. That treaty has never been abrogated by the consent of these people. We propose now, contrary to the express stipulations of that treaty, to extend a Territorial government over the people—a people to whom we commit ourselves by solemn treaty obligations that we would never extend a Territorial or State government over them except by their consent; and it seems to me that we propose to break this treaty obligation. We propose, also, to thrust this unspeakable, this indescribable curse upon these Indian people, open whisky shops all around them and let a flood of evil in upon them. For one, I stand here to protest against it, in the name of humanity, in the name of decency, in the name of the plighted faith of this great nation, that is not to break these treaty obligations with its weakest wards. [Applause.]

Mr. McRAE. Mr. Chairman, the proposition is to strike out Nebraska and insert Kansas where it occurs in the bill, thus extending the laws of the State of Kansas over the Territory of Oklahoma. I am opposed to this in any shape, but if it is to be done at all I hope the amendment will be modified as was suggested by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON]. I oppose this amendment without any reference to constitutional prohibition in Kansas or the high-license laws of Nebraska. The controlling objection with me is to that clause of the constitution which disfranchises Confederate soldiers and other persons who aided or abetted in the late rebellion. Until a moment ago I did not suppose such a law existed in any State in the Union. I have just examined the constitution of Kansas and much to my surprise find that there is such a provision. I will ask the Clerk to read that part of section 2 of Article V relating to this subject.

The Clerk read as follows:

* * * No person who has ever voluntarily borne arms against the Government of the United States or in any manner voluntarily aided or abetted in the attempted overthrow of said Government, except all persons who have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States since the 1st day of April, A. D. 1861, provided that they have served one year or more therein, shall be qualified to vote or hold office in this State until such disability shall be removed by a law passed by a vote of two-thirds of all the members of both branches of the Legislature.

Mr. McRAE. Now, Mr. Chairman, whatever gentlemen may think about prohibition, the Congress of the United States ought not to sanction any such law as this. It can not now at this distance from the war period afford to extend such laws over a territory inhabited in part by the class of citizens thus discriminated against. As a rule, the Confederate soldiers are good citizens, loyal to the Government, and as well qualified to vote and hold office as any other class of people in the United States. Many of them now reside in the Oklahoma country, and they have a right to all the privileges and immunities accorded to other law-abiding citizens of that Territory without asking pardon of the Kansas Legislature.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to call the attention of the committee to the pending amendment, offered by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. KELLEY], in regard to substituting the laws of Kansas in place of those of Nebraska. In the Committee on Territories, when this subject was under consideration, the whole question was exhaustively discussed, and delegates were here from Oklahoma representing both political parties. These gentlemen were divided. Some wanted the laws of Arkansas, some those of California, some those of Kansas, and some those of Colorado, and others of Texas. After hearing all these various views for some time and after an express declaration of the representatives of Oklahoma Territory, citizens who came here to represent the interests of the various localities, we concluded that a compromise of all these conflicting interests could be effected by taking some State that had not been in controversy at all; and in the spirit of compromise, on the motion of the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. DORSEY], the committee unanimously agreed to put Nebraska in the place of all those other States. That was done in the spirit of compromise after a very exhaustive discussion of the whole subject. Now, I hope this committee will ratify that compromise, and that the good faith that prevailed there may prevail here.

Mr. HILL. I would like to be informed as to what the laws of Nebraska are upon this subject?

Mr. SPRINGER. The laws of Nebraska on the subject of the sale of liquor are prohibition in the first instance, and no right to sell except upon certain conditions of obtaining license, for which the lowest charge, I believe, is $500.

Mr. PICKLER. That is not the law of Nebraska, as I understand it.

Mr. STEWART, of Georgia. I have the statute here.

Mr. SPRINGER. What is it?

Mr. STEWART, of Georgia. It simply provides for a license to be granted upon a petition signed by thirty citizens.

Mr. SPRINGER. Well, it is a high-license law. The gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. DORSEY], living in the State, can, of course, explain the law better than I can. I understand, however, that there can be no liquor-selling unless the municipality or the county organization shall agree to it and order it. The rule in that State, and in other States, is that every spring election there is a contest as to whether the town is to be "wet" or "dry;" sometimes a town is "wet" and sometimes it is "dry," but they always pass upon that question in the spring election.

Mr. HEARD. Does not the history of the case show that the elections go "wet" when the people are "dry?" [Laughter.]

Mr. SPRINGER. The gentleman can, perhaps, explain that better than I can.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] has expired.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I desire to ask the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] a question. I want to ask him what he thinks the result would have been if when this Territory was opened in April last there had been the law of Nebraska in force there, under which, upon the petition of forty freeholders, saloons could have been opened in every town and in every ward.

Mr. FLOWER (sotto voce). The result would have been that anybody could have taken a drink if he pleased. [Laughter.]

Mr. SPRINGER. The consequence was that neither the law of Kansas, nor the law of Nebraska, nor of any other State was in force there, nor any law except that of the United States. That law was found sufficient before there was any regular government established there; so it is likely to be sufficient when they have a regular government.

Mr. CUTCHEON. There was a law of the United States there prohibiting the introduction of liquor, and the army of the United States was there to enforce it. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I desire to say, in corroboration of what has been said by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER], that this question was carefully considered by the Committee on Territories. We listened to gentlemen from Oklahoma representing every shade of political conviction and of party affiliation. Some were in favor of the adoption of the laws of Kansas, others desired the adoption of the Arkansas statutes; some favored the statutes of Texas, and some California or Illinois. We found these adverse and conflicting views among those representing the people of Oklahoma, and we found also that as a committee we were divided.

Personally I favored the statutes of Kansas, and I believe, as the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. PICKLER] says, that a majority of the residents of Oklahoma at this time desire to have the statutes of Kansas extended over them; but, for the purpose of compromise, the committee agreed on this provision in relation to the laws of Nebraska, and I think we should stand by that agreement, and therefore I do not favor the amendment asking for the adoption of the laws of Kansas under the circumstances.

Mr. PICKLER. Do I understand the gentleman from Kansas to say that the Committee on Territories agreed unanimously to take the laws of Nebraska so as to make it easier to open saloons in Oklahoma?

Mr. PERKINS. Not at all, sir. That is not the object of accepting the statutes of Nebraska. The object was what I have suggested, to secure harmony, in order that we might report a bill here that would receive the unanimous support of the members of the committee upon the floor of this House and at the same time secure the best possible legislation for the people of Oklahoma.

Mr. KELLEY. Will the gentleman from Kansas allow me a question?

Mr. PERKINS. Certainly.

Mr. KELLEY. I understood the gentleman to say that, without doubt, the majority of the citizens of Oklahoma are in favor of the laws of Kansas.

Mr. PERKINS. So I believe.

Mr. KELLEY. The gentleman says he believes that, but at the same time he tells us that the committee are opposed to taking the laws of Kansas. Now I ask him, which had this House better consider and obey, the wants and the will and the wishes of the people of Oklahoma or the wants and the will and the wishes of the Committee on Territories?

Mr. PERKINS. I think we had better pass the bill recommended by the committee and secure this important legislation for the people of Oklahoma—a bill that, after consideration, has the unanimous endorsement of the committee and I believe the approval of a great majority of the members of this House.

Now, Mr. Chairman, some of these questions anticipate my remarks, and I prefer to say what I have to say in order, and then, if any gentleman wishes to ask me a question I shall endeavor to answer it.

As I understand the statutes of Nebraska they provide for high license. The Nebraska system is what is known as the "high-license" system. Personally I believe it is better for the people of the Territory that during the temporary period of organization, the existing condition concerning the sale and traffic in alcoholic beverages should be continued, and continued until they have a Territorial Legislature of their own which can legislate for them upon this subject.

For that reason I was in favor of the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MORSE], but I do not accept the amendment of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. KELLEY], for the reasons which I have already suggested, namely: That the Committee on Territories, after fully considering the subject, agreed to take the laws of Nebraska, which is a high-license State, as a compromise. Under the laws of Nebraska no man can obtain permission to sell intoxicating beverages until he has presented a petition either to the county commissioners or to the city government asking for it, and that petition must be signed by at least 30 freeholders of the community or the city in which he lives and in which he desires to establish his saloon.

If the license is for an incorporated city the petition must be signed by freeholders, residents of the city. If for a town not incorporated, by freeholders and residents of the county. Now I desire to suggest that there are no freeholders in any city of Oklahoma to-day; there is no person qualified to be a petitioner under the laws of Nebraska in any town of Oklahoma to-day. No title has been secured to their town sites, and hence no petition, such as the laws of Nebraska provide for, can be presented after this bill becomes a law, until the Legislature of Oklahoma has convened and has put into effect in that Territory local government, or until legal city governments are organized and the town sites are entered and a title secured to the land.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. PERKINS. I ask unanimous consent to proceed for a few moments longer.

Mr. MORRILL. I will take the floor and yield my time to the gentleman.

Mr. HOOKER. I would like to put a question to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. PERKINS]. Are we to understand the gentleman as saying that he prefers the high-license system of Nebraska to the system of prohibition?

Mr. PERKINS. I do not say that at all.

Mr. HOOKER. What do you say about that?

Mr. PERKINS. I say that personally I think it is better to have the present conditions continued and preserved upon that subject, and I voted for the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts for that reason. Personally I prefer to have prohibition extended over this Territory. But I believe in local government, and in due time I would give to the people of Oklahoma the right through their Territorial Legislature to legislate for themselves on this subject. Every man who has had occasion to investigate this question at all knows that the prohibition which has prevailed in Oklahoma during the last ten months has contributed wonderfully to the good order prevailing there, has contributed wonderfully to the protection of property, the preservation of peace and good order, and the safety of human life. I presume that most of the members of this House know that under the statute of the United States no intoxicating liquors can be introduced or sold within the boundaries of the Indian Territory or upon any of the Indian reservations or to Indians.

Mr. DINGLEY. I wish to ask the gentleman whether section 2139 of the Revised Statutes applies now to the territory included in Oklahoma?

Mr. PERKINS. I was about to remark that the President of the United States directed that the forces in control there during the time intervening from the opening of the Territory until the present should not permit intoxicating liquors to be introduced or sold there. There was some question in the mind of the Attorney-General whether the section referred to continued in force after those lands were opened to settlement; but to avoid any question President Harrison gave the instructions I have suggested.

Mr. DINGLEY. Then the effect of the passage of this bill as reported by the committee would be to set aside section 2139 of the Revised Statutes so far as it applies to Oklahoma—

Mr. PERKINS. I think so.

Mr. DINGLEY. And substitute the Nebraska license system?

Mr. PERKINS. Substitute the Nebraska statutes. I think that would be the effect so far as Oklahoma proper is concerned, but would not change the law as to Indians or Indian reservations.

Mr. DINGLEY. I would like to ask the gentleman whether he thinks it quite right that Congress should now set aside this legislation which has protected that Territory thus far until the people shall act on the question?

Mr. PERKINS. I have already stated that personally I am in favor of continuing in that particular the conditions existing in the Territory to-day. Without entering into a discussion of the merits of prohibition, for I know that gentlemen differ on that subject honestly and conscientiously, and I am not discussing prohibition on its merits, because I am aware of these differences of opinion, but I think this House can with consistency and propriety continue the conditions existing there to-day until the Legislature of the Territory can be called together and can legislate on the subject and can express the voice of the people of Oklahoma.

If the Legislature that shall be chosen should provide for high license or for local option or for prohibition, that will be their business, and we will have done our duty if we procure for them temperance, sobriety, and good government until they can legislate for themselves. All that is proposed, as I understand, by these amendments is that temporarily, until a Legislature can be chosen, until it convenes, until it legislates for the people, the conditions now existing in the Territory in reference to alcoholic beverages or intoxicating drinks shall continue. Personally, I think that is wise and right. Yet I do not apprehend much difficulty from the adoption of the Nebraska statutes, for the reason I have suggested: that no man under that statute can secure authority to sell a single drop of intoxicating drink until he has obtained a license so to do; and in order to obtain that license he must present a petition signed by at least thirty qualified freeholders of his county or his city.

Now, there is no county organization in Oklahoma; there is no board of county commissioners to whom in accordance with the laws of Nebraska petitions may be presented, and there can not be such officers until the Legislature has met and provided for them by law. Hence the adoption of the bill as reported by the committee, putting into effect in Oklahoma the statutes of Nebraska, would, in my judgment, give to the people of Oklahoma practically prohibition. Yet, in order that there may be no question on that subject, I am personally in favor of the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. KILGORE. I wish to ask the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. PERKINS] whether it is not a fact that the act of Congress which now controls in that Territory would continue in force until the machinery was provided for putting in operation the statute of Nebraska?

Several MEMBERS. Oh, no.

Mr. PICKLER. Make that certain and we are content.

Mr. KILGORE. That is certain enough, anyhow.

Mr. PICKLER. No, sir.

"The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. PERKINS] has expired.

Mr. SPINOLA. I have listened for a great many years to the discussion of the temperance question; and up to this time I have been unable to discover that the enactment of any special laws by any law-creating authority in the country has ever yet had the effect of preventing the indulgence of the people in intoxicating drinks. What we want to do is not to undertake to say that a man shall or shall not do a particular thing; but we want to adopt on this question the very best regulation we can establish; and that, in my judgment, is not prohibition. It has failed in every instance where it has been established. In States where they have amended their constitutions to provide for prohibition there is as much liquor consumed as there ever was. [Applause.]

Mr. FUNSTON. I dispute every statement made by the gentleman from New York City. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. SPINOLA. Oh, sit down, and speak in your own time. [Laughter and applause.]

Why, take the State of Maine, which has tried prohibition for thirty or forty years, and there is more whisky consumed there to-day than when prohibition was begun. So it will continue for all time. [Applause.]

Mr. FUNSTON. I deny it. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. SPINOLA. Sit down. [Laughter.] Mr. Chairman, if you do what is right and proper, we will surround the use and sale of liquor with proper regulations. You can not stop men from doing what they wish to do, even as to the commission of crime. You can not make any law so severe as to stop them. Nor, sir, can you frame any law to prevent men from the gratification of their appetites, whatever they may be.

Kansas! Prohibition in Kansas! Why, sir, I am sick of Kansas and its prohibition! [Great laughter and applause.]

Mr. PETERS. They are not your kind of politics. [Renewed laughter.]

Mr. SPINOLA. No; they are not, and I thank God for it. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. FUNSTON. I suppose you prefer those of New York City.

Mr. SPINOLA. Yes, sir; I do. I come from New York City, one of the most christian, intelligent, and enterprising communities on the face of this continent. [Applause and laughter.] That Democratic State, by the acts of you Republicans, has been made irredeemably Democratic for the next eight or ten years. [Applause on the Democratic side.] There will be no more Republican Senators from that State after the term of WILLIAM M. EVARTS has expired. [Laughter and applause.] Kansas! Why, her State constitution has pardoned every man except those who took part in the rebellion.

Her State constitution says that for every man who took up arms against the Union there shall be no toleration. That intolerance of Kansas they propose to extend to Oklahoma. Suppose our brethren did commit the folly of going into rebellion. Now, after we have given them a good thrashing and they want to come back, why should we shut the door in their faces? [Applause.] They are American citizens, and they are to-day as loyal as any men in Kansas or elsewhere. [Applause.]

Mr. PERKINS. The Legislature of Kansas has always removed those disabilities when any man has made application for that purpose.

Mr. SPINOLA. But it requires a two-thirds vote. Here is a Territory to be organized, over which it is proposed to extend this provision of the Kansas constitution imposing these political disabilities. I am opposed to it, and I hope it will be voted down. [Applause.] I would leave that intolerance to Kansas and extend it nowhere else. [Renewed applause.]

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. FUNSTON. Mr. Chairman, it was the furthest from my intention to refer to the remarks which the gentleman from New York [Mr. SPINOLA] has just made had he not taken upon himself to reflect on my State of Kansas. I stand here, Mr. Chairman, to resent his reflections upon my State and to hurl them back upon him. [Applause.]

When he says no State in this Union that has passed prohibition laws has observed those prohibition laws, I say so far as the State of Kansas is concerned his statement is not the truth.

Mr. SPINOLA. That is ante-bellum talk. [Laughter.]

Mr. FUNSTON. I am here to-day to say that we have had prohibition in our constitution and in our laws since 1840, and I am here to say we have gained about 100,000 annually in population, although it was said the State would be depopulated as soon as we passed that prohibition law. [Applause.] I am here to resent the charge against prohibition. We have a State 400 miles east and west and 200 miles north and south, with a population of 1,600,000 people, and not one open saloon in it. [Long continued applause.]

I wish to say further that, as to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SPINOLA] being sick of hearing about Kansas, I have no doubt the Republican majority of 82,000 does make him supremely sick whenever he thinks of it. [Laughter and applause.] I wish to say still further to the gentleman from New York that the Republican party had its birth on Kansas soil in the district I represent.

There was begun the original movement which brought forth this grand Republican party, and which is to-day dominant in the councils of the nation. It brought the cause of freedom to a happy conclusion, and I hope to see the Republican party champion the cause of prohibition as it championed the cause of liberty. [Applause.]

Mr. TAISNEY. Mr. Chairman, during the month of last May my professional duties called me to one of the county-seats of the southwestern part of Kansas. I was engaged there in the trial of causes before the district court of that State. While engaged in the trial of a cause, the court being held in a public hall, used as a theater—I say while engaged in the trial of a cause and examining a witness, my attention was attracted by the rapping on the judge's desk by him of his pencil, and, looking up, I observed him scowling in the direction of one of the wings of the stage. I looked myself, and there beheld the prosecuting attorney of the county shaking a bottle of beer at the judge of the court. [Laughter.] The judge was very indignant. Now, the bottle of beer was not shaken at him in a menacing and intimidating manner, but rather in a seductive and enticing manner. [Laughter.] The judge scowled and shook his head. The prosecuting attorney retired into the wings of the stage, and in a few moments the judge turned to the jury and said, "Gentlemen, we will now take a recess for ten minutes." [Laughter.] "Under the usual instructions you will be permitted to separate for that period of time. Be prompt, gentlemen, in returning to your seats. We will now take a recess," and the judge departed into the wings of the stage.

Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to the further extension of Kansas prohibition. [Great laughter.]

Mr. FUNSTON. That, Mr. Chairman, was about the only Democratic judge in the State. [Laughter.]

Mr. STEWART, of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, this is, strictly speaking, "much ado about nothing." This is simply a question of construction as to whether the section read does not include the entire Territory under the provision of the Revised Statutes. It is no effort at establishing prohibition or temperance, but to make clear and certain that which is uncertain. The proposition offered is that the provision of the section should embrace the entire Territory of Oklahoma, and that is all there is of it.

Now, I am opposed to embracing in this Territorial bill either the law of Kansas or the law of Nebraska, or indeed of any other State, and I offer as a reason for it what I ask the Clerk to read. I desire to advise the House in adopting the laws of Nebraska that we should understand exactly what we are providing for, and in that view I ask the Clerk to read a section from the law in the State of Nebraska.

The Clerk read as follows:

Every person, male or female, who has resided in the district forty days and is twenty-one years old and who owns real property in the district or personal property that was assessed in the district in his or her name at the last annual assessment, or who has children of school age residing in the district, shall be entitled to vote at any district meeting.

Mr. STEWART, of Georgia. Now, we do not intend, unless we understand thoroughly this code of laws—we do not intend, I take it, to establish in the Territory any provision of law which would be manifestly objectionable, but nevertheless we are proposing to adopt here what we do not understand. Hence the greater reason for adopting the Federal statute which my friend from Texas called attention to awhile ago, for many believe now that is already in force and will be in force in this Territory. But to put the matter beyond all question I offered this amendment.

Mr. DORSEY. Will you yield to me for a moment?

Mr. STEWART, of Georgia. I want to have this amendment read.

Mr. DORSEY. I want to explain to the gentleman that what he has read is simply a provision for school elections.

Mr. STEWART, of Georgia. Well, the law you propose is for all purposes.

Mr. DORSEY. But in justice to the State the gentleman should say that this is not a provision for general elections, but for school elections.

Mr. STEWART, of Georgia. But the provisions of Nebraska are to apply to this Territory.

Mr. DORSEY. Well, you can not make any mistake if you adopt the laws of Nebraska.

Mr. STEWART, of Georgia. I ask that the Clerk read the amendment I have proposed.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert after the word "Territory," in line 6 of section 7, the words:

"Provided, That section 2139 of the Revised Statutes of the United States shall be enforced in said Territory until after the adjournment of the first session of the Legislative Assembly of said Territory."

Mr. STEWART, of Georgia. All I want to say now—

Mr. CUTCHEON. Will the gentleman allow the section of the statutes referred to in his amendment to be read?

Mr. ROGERS. I will refer to that presently.

Mr. STEWART, of Georgia. I only want to state this. I am opposed to adopting the laws of Kansas, or Nebraska either, in this Territory. It is now simply a matter of construction as to whether these statutes do not already obtain in that Territory. But in order to put it beyond question I have offered the amendment.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Chairman—

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the substitute proposed by the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. ROGERS. I desire to be heard for a few moments on this question.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Arkansas.

Mr. ROGERS. If the committee will give me its attention for a very few moments I will try to place before them the legal status of this question as it will obtain by the passage of this bill with the amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia incorporated.

At present the statute reads as follows:

No ardent spirits shall be introduced under any pretense in the Indian Territory.

Mr. CUTCHEON. That is the existing law.

Mr. ROGERS. Just a moment. That is the existing law at present applied to Oklahoma. Now, the Kansas courts have jurisdiction to enforce that. It is likewise the law which pertains to all Indian reservations, including the five civilized tribes, certainly those Indians proximate to that portion of the country in which I live. If, however, the bill is passed organizing the Territorial government over Oklahoma without the enactment of the provision offered by the gentleman from Georgia, this law will have no application whatever to that Territory. I think I make myself clear on that point.

But it is right to say in this connection, also, that while, if the bill passes without the provision, liquor may be taken into Oklahoma, and while without any regulation at all unless regulated by the Nebraska law, nevertheless so far as the Indian tribes are concerned in Oklahoma, or the five civilized tribes, or anywhere else—provided these tribes are under control of an agent or still in their tribal relations—any sale, gift, barter, or exchange to any Indian is a violation of the provisions of this statute.

Let me follow it up consecutively; so that, Mr. Chairman, I now invite attention to this:

Every person who sells, exchanges, gives, barter, or disposes of any spirituous liquors or wine to any Indian under the charge of an Indian superintendent or agent, or introduces or attempts to introduce any spirituous liquor or wine into the Indian country, shall be punishable by imprisonment for not more than two years and by a fine of not more than $500.

Now, under this statute it has been held by the Federal court that a wholesale liquor merchant in Arkansas is liable to prosecution under the provisions of this act, even though the sale may take place in the State. If, however, the Indian has dissolved relations with his tribe and is no longer under the control, management, and general supervision of the Government, but has become a citizen of the State, the law relaxes; but in Arkansas it, however, happens we have a law that makes it an offense to sell to him. Now, that leaves this question in this attitude: Is Congress prepared to organize the Territory of Oklahoma without some provision to regulate the liquor traffic?

Mr. HILL. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question? I would like to inquire if you consider all these provisions just read from and the statute, taken together, refer simply to the sale to Indians?

Mr. ROGERS. It does.

Mr. HILL. And not to white men?

Mr. ROGERS. But, Mr. Chairman, the section I have alluded to applies only to the sale to Indians, and every man will observe that if this section is extended over Oklahoma Territory it is an absolute prohibition for any purpose to introduce liquor into the Territory of Oklahoma, even for sacramental purposes or for anything else, so far as that is concerned, except by order made by the Secretary of War.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I am not familiar with the Nebraska law, but I take this position: That it is a safe thing to do to adopt, in connection with the Nebraska laws generally, the provision offered by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. STEWART], because that provision simply says that this section of the statute shall be continued in force over Oklahoma Territory until the adjournment of the first session of its Territorial Legislature. If at that time the Territorial Legislature, in the exercise of the ordinary local self-government conferred upon it by Congress, has not made suitable provision for this matter, Congress may still regulate it. It seems to me that no people, knowing the influences liquor ordinarily has upon communities, will permit this business to be carried on without proper restraint and proper legislation. So I believe Congress may act wisely and safely by extending the provisions of this act—that is, the proviso of this section—over that country until the adjournment of the first session of its Legislative Assembly.

To do that will enable this Territorial organization to take place, enable the election of the legislators to the first General Assembly to be had free from the influence of liquor or anything of that description, and it will keep away from the tribes or any of them so far as possible the sale of these liquors until the Legislative Assembly have made such rules as they may deem best. It must be presumed that the Legislature of that Territory can manage their own affairs and the protection of their own people; and I take it that it can be faithfully intrusted to—as I think the American people everywhere can—adopt such legislation as will protect their several communities.

Mr. MORSE. I desire to say that while I am myself personally and heartily in sympathy with the laws of Kansas on this subject I hope the amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia will be accepted as a very wise and just compromise of this matter. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia is exactly the amendment, in other words, which I offered this morning and which was voted down in less than a quorum by a very small majority. It seems to me as if there was no possible doubt as to whether or not the provisions of existing law extended over the Territory of Oklahoma; but this will make that matter so that there could be no mistake about it. Now, I wish to say that we should not adopt the law of Nebraska nor the law of Kansas nor any other law, but simplify the matter by continuing the existing restriction in regard to the liquor traffic over this Territory.

Why, will any gentleman here picture to himself what would have been the history of the Territory of Oklahoma when that Territory was entered upon under the President's proclamation if there had been no restriction of the liquor traffic of that Territory? I venture to say that there would have been bloodshed—a good deal of bloodshed—and the course of the President of the United States in ordering the Army to banish and keep liquor out of that Territory was very wise and salutary. I hope it will be continued until these people may speak for themselves. This amendment of the gentleman from Georgia is in the interest of good morals; it is in the best and highest interests of the people of that Territory, and it is desired by the people of that Territory, and I know whereof I speak.

Mr. CONGER. As a member of this House, who represents in part a State which has a prohibitory law upon its statute-book—and which, by the way, enforces it—I simply wish to furnish a little evidence in reply to the statement made by my venerable friend from New York [Mr. SPINOLA], and I will read from the last annual message of the governor of Iowa to the Legislature now in session. He says:

Our present statute was passed by the Twentieth General Assembly, and came into force July 4, 1884. Since that time about three thousand saloons have been closed in Iowa. The law has steadily grown in public favor, and during the last two years has been nearly as well enforced in ninety counties of the State as any other law. There is, indeed, every reason to believe that in these ninety counties it is better enforced than any license law was ever enforced in Iowa, and even better than any high-license law is now enforced in any other State in the Union. The reports from the States which have license laws bear me out in this assertion.

It is a well recognized fact that crime is on the increase in the United States, but Iowa does not contribute to that increase. While the number of convicts in the country at large rose from 1 in every 3,442 of population in 1850 to 1 in every 880 in 1887, the ratio in Iowa is at present only 1 to every 3,130. The jails of many counties are now empty during a good portion of the year, and the number of convicts in our penitentiaries has been reduced from 750 in March, 1886, to 604, July 1, 1889. It is the testimony of the judges of our courts that criminal business has been reduced from 30 to 75 per cent. and that criminal expenses have diminished in like proportion. There is a remarkable decrease in the business and fees of sheriffs and criminal lawyers, as well as in the number of requisitions and extradition warrants issued. We have less paupers and less tramps in the State in proportion to our population than ever before. Breweries have been converted into oat-meal mills and canning factories, and are operated as such by their owners. The report of the superintendent of public instruction shows an increased school attendance throughout the State. The poorer classes have better fare, better clothing, better schooling, and better houses. The deposits in banks show an unprecedented increase, and there are everywhere indications of a healthy growth in legitimate trade. Merchants and commercial travelers report less losses in collections in Iowa than elsewhere.

Mr. Chairman, it is the duty of this Congress to furnish for this newly organized Territory the best code of laws possible, and I submit that such a statement as that which I have read proves that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. KELLEY] ought to pass.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Chairman, it would seem from the speeches we have been listening to and the amendments which have been offered to this bill either that the settlers in this new Territory are not a part of the American race or that the American people have lost their capacity for self-government. The whole of our political institutions are based as upon a bed-rock, upon the assumption that man is capable of self-government and that each local community is capable of self-government; and the history of the formation of all the governments of this Union, from the first in Massachusetts and Virginia, extending all over the whole country from ocean to ocean and from the lakes to the gulf, has in a century demonstrated that each American community is capable of governing itself.

They tell us, Mr. Chairman, that there are Indians in this Territory, and that therefore we must prevent the white people from importing intoxicating beverages. Where is there a Territory in the Union in which the first nucleus of a government of English-speaking people was not formed in the presence of Indians? The first government of Massachusetts, of Rhode Island, of Connecticut, of Georgia, of New York, of Pennsylvania, of all the older States, was formed in the presence of Indians. There is not one of those States to-day in this family of the United States whose first local government was not formed in the presence of Indians. It was so in my own State, and the Indians largely dominated the whites; yet we had no prohibition. The white people of that State were capable of governing themselves and of taking care of themselves and of the Indians, too.

A statute has been read which has been on our Federal statute-books these many years, but it is a statute that was made against the Indians, because our fathers never believed that the Indians were capable of self-government. They knew that they were not, and hence they provided that no intoxicating liquor should be carried into the Territory where the Indians were and where white people were prohibited from going. The Indians are not capable of self-government, but we are; and the history of the last one hundred years has shown that this Government, based upon the consent and the will of each individual and of each community, has attained a greatness, a power, yes, and a temperance which exists nowhere else. Our fathers hated paternalism and I inherit that hate. If the people, who are our creators, are not capable of self-government, how is it that the creature is so much more wise and virtuous than those who created it? How is it that we can govern these white people of Oklahoma better than they can govern themselves? How is it that we, the servants of the people, can govern our masters, and yet that those masters are incapable of governing themselves? I shall vote against all these amendments, and if you attempt this paternalism by placing these proscriptions upon this bill, prohibiting each man from determining for himself what he will eat, what he will wear, where he will go, how long he will stay, when he will come back, I will vote against the bill.

This is a free government, and freedom means that each man shall determine for himself what he will do, what he will eat, what he will drink, what he will wear, what creed he will profess, everything that regards himself alone and dissociates him from his fellow-beings. The rightful jurisdiction of government comes in where his action involves another; but where his action does not involve another he is not the subject of any government but the government of God and his own conscience. This, sir, is my creed.

I believe that I am capable of taking care of myself; I believe that each one of the gentlemen before me is capable of taking care of himself, and I believe equally that each one of the white men in Oklahoma Territory is just as capable of taking care of himself as you are capable of taking care of him. I want him to be permitted to do as he pleases with himself. I do not want you to dictate what he shall drink, or what he shall eat, or what he shall wear, or what church he shall attend, how he shall demean himself on the Sabbath day, what time he shall get up, how he shall worship, whether he shall count his beads, or whether he shall worship with his face towards Jerusalem or towards Mecca. That is none of your business. It is none of my business. It is a business that he has not delegated to any government on earth. The interference doctrine is one that does not belong on this continent. Paternalism has cursed all the countries of Europe, and all other nations except this, which was dedicated by our fathers to be the home of a fearless-minded and a free people. [Applause.]

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. Mr. Chairman, while this discussion is both interesting and instructive, much of it seems to me to be foreign to the pending question.

The question presented by the pending amendment is not a question of prohibition or anti-prohibition; it is not a question of high license or low license; it is simply whether the law now in force in the Indian Territory as to the liquor traffic shall remain until Oklahoma shall have a Legislature. One gentleman has remarked that he is opposed to introducing into this new Territory the policy of prohibition by invoking the laws of Kansas, a policy which to him is objectionable. We are not proposing to introduce into Oklahoma any new policy. All we propose to do is to continue in the Territory the present statutes of the United States until the Territory is completely organized and prepared to make provision for questions of this kind. We are proposing nothing new, nothing different from what has existed in the Territory heretofore and has met the approval of everybody.

I have in my hand now, and have had for some time, an amendment almost identical with that proposed by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. STEWART], which I had intended to offer; and I think that, after all, this is the proper solution of this whole difficulty, as it continues in force until the Territorial Legislature shall otherwise provide, section 2139 of the Revised Statutes. I never knew a man, Democrat or Republican, who was opposed to this section of the statutes of the United States. It has always been conceded to be a wise policy to prohibit this traffic in the Indian Territory, among the Indians and among the whites as well, and it is still a wise policy. It is a necessary policy. We have been boasting of the good order that has prevailed in Oklahoma.

The President in his message refers to this matter and points to the good order prevailing there as a marvel. Allusion has been made to it on the floor of this House in a hundred speeches. There is good order there to-day simply because this statute of the United States prohibiting the introduction of intoxicating liquors in the Territory has been in force, and is in force now, and will be until this new Territory is organized. Therefore, I beg gentlemen on both sides of the House to lay aside all abstract questions with regard to temperance, prohibition, license or no license, and come to the real issue involved in the pending amendment, which is to continue the present policy until the Legislature has time and an opportunity to inaugurate some other policy.

The only thing we now propose is to continue in force in this Territory the present statute of the United States prohibiting the liquor traffic until the Legislative Assembly of the new Territory shall enact laws on this subject or until the first session of the Legislature shall adjourn, by which time the people can settle this question for themselves. We ask this much and nothing more in the interest of humanity, in the interest of peace and quiet, in the interest of good order and good sense, and in the general interest of the people of Oklahoma. I think we ought to agree upon this as a compromise, and I think there should be but one opinion as to the wisdom of this adjustment; we ought to adopt this amendment unanimously.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. MANSUR. Mr. Chairman, I would ask "in the name of the great Jehovah and the Continental Congress" whether 200,000 white people in the Territory of Oklahoma ought not to be heard and consulted on a question like this by the great American Congress of the nineteenth century. If we are to suffer them to have something to say in this matter—if we are to pay any respect to their views as expressed to us through their accredited representatives who have spoken to our committee from nearly every town in that Territory—then I have some reason to believe that this bill reflects their wishes.

I challenge any gentleman on this floor—I care not who he is—to take any one of the first twenty-four sections of this bill and show where it touches a red man at all. I repeat, for I would like to have it understood, that the first twenty-four sections of this bill do not relate to a red man or to a tribe, do not relate to the Indians in any manner whatever. The first twenty-four sections relate to white men only, of whom there are 200,000 in that Territory now asking for law and order and legislation.

Now, if gentlemen will permit us to explain to them the legal provisions which are to operate in that Territory they can perhaps understand somewhat the situation, because it is a fact about which there can be no dispute that two things are settled: First, in the whole Indian Territory as now organized all persons are prohibited from introducing intoxicating liquor and, next, by the laws as they now exist, no white man under the severest penalties can sell a drop of liquor to any red man whatever. The whole effect, then, of our legislation is simply to take out of the existing condition a certain small territory, 2,000,000 acres in one place and a little more than 3,000,000 acres in No Man's Land, in all less than 6,000,000 acres, and to put this much territory under the control of white men when their Territorial Legislature shall be organized.

Now, the second of these twenty-four sections provides that the Constitution and all the laws of the United States not locally inapplicable shall have the same force and effect in the Territory of Oklahoma as elsewhere in the United States. There is nothing there that conflicts with the law which prohibits the importation of intoxicating liquor into that Territory and the sale of such liquor to any Indian.

Now, as to every Indian reservation within the whole limits of the Indian Territory as now organized, we say expressly that those first twenty-four sections of the act thus organizing this Territorial government shall not apply. Remember, gentlemen, we say in plain, clear language that, as to every Indian tribe and as to the land of every Indian tribe, none of these twenty-four sections which apply to the white people shall operate. Remember, too, that if any white man sells an Indian a drop of intoxicating liquor he is punished under the severest penalties. The laws in that respect are ample.

Mr. OATES. Will the gentleman kindly state the number of square miles embraced in this Territory?

Mr. MANSUR. There are between 22,000,000 and 23,000,000 acres, which would approximate very nearly 40,000 square miles—about the area of the State of Ohio.

Now I call attention to the language of section 7 of this act:

That the general statutes of Nebraska which are not locally inapplicable or in conflict with this act or in conflict with any law of the United States are hereby extended to and put in force in the Territory of Oklahoma until after the adjournment of the first session of the Legislative Assembly of said Territory.

It will thus be seen that you have the statutes of the United States absolutely prohibiting the importation of a drop of intoxicating liquor into the Indian Territory and absolutely prohibiting the sale of a drop of intoxicating liquor to any Indian; and the laws of Nebraska, if they should be in conflict with those provisions, do not overturn them. So that, so far as the Indians are concerned, we have provided here absolutely all the legislation that can be desired for their protection.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. PERKINS. I move that all debate on section 7 and pending amendments terminate in two minutes.

Mr. HOOKER. I hope that will not be done. I have an amendment which I propose to offer.

The CHAIRMAN. The motion of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. PERKINS] is in order.

Mr. SPRINGER. It does not interfere with the offering of amendments.

The CHAIRMAN. Not at all. The closing of debate upon the section and the pending amendments does not, under the rule, preclude the offering of amendments; it simply prevents debate upon them when offered. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Kansas that all debate on section 7 and pending amendments be limited to two minutes. [The question was put.] The ayes seem to have it.

Mr. PICKLER. I demand a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 98, noes 21.

So the motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate on the pending amendment is limited to two minutes; and the Chair recognizes the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. PERKINS].

Mr. PERKINS. I will yield the floor to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. ROGERS].

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Chairman, I wish to supplement what I said before by a single statement. It will not be found to be true, if we adopt this bill without the amendment of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. STEWART], that section 2139 will apply to Oklahoma Territory. The moment you come out of the Indian Territory, the Territory of Oklahoma, that section of the Revised Statutes of the United States, so far as it applies to the introduction of spirits, is no longer of force in Oklahoma Territory. But in so far as it prohibits and punishes the gift, barter, sale, or exchange of ardent spirits to an Indian in that Territory, it will be in force. And that is the law all over the United States, if such Indian is a member of a tribe under the control of an agent or on a reservation. I will make one other suggestion. The object of extending or, to use a more correct term, of continuing in force section 2139 of the Revised Statutes over what is known as Oklahoma Territory is not to organize a government for the people there, but it is simply to preserve the status quo in that Territory until the people can have an opportunity to organize a government for themselves.

I have no doubt, for such has been the history of the Anglo-Saxon people the world over, that the people of Oklahoma can take care of themselves with the bayonet and with the rifle and the Army.

But we are not dealing with the Indian question on that line now. That line has been passed long ago by the American people. We are now treating the Indian in this country, or pretending to do so, with some degree of humanity, with a view of elevating him to citizenship, intelligence, and capacity for self-government. [Applause.]

The purpose of continuing this law is for his protection in pursuance of the plighted faith and settled policy of the nation when it made treaties and passed laws keeping liquor from those tribes.

So I say it would seem the practical effect of this amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia is merely to allow the people of Oklahoma to organize a government for themselves, and in the mean time to preserve the status quo, protect the Indians, carry out treaty stipulations, and accomplish a high duty rightfully imposed upon us. [Applause.]

The amendment of the gentleman from Georgia was again read.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I ask that the section of the Revised Statutes referred to in the amendment be read.

The CHAIRMAN. It is not here, and it has been read already.

Mr. KELLEY. Would the status of Nebraska apply?

The CHAIRMAN. That is not a parliamentary question, and points of construction each gentleman must determine for himself.

The question recurred on the substitute of Mr. STEWART, of Georgia.

Mr. MCADOO. I demand a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 75, noes 39.

So the substitute was agreed to.

Mr. SPRINGER. This is a substitute for the amendment of the gentleman from Kansas. Now, the question is on the adoption of the amendment as amended or agreed to by the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of opinion that the adoption of the substitute is tantamount to the rejection of the amendment.

Mr. SPRINGER. But this simply takes the place of the amendments, and now the vote is to incorporate it in the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of opinion that the last vote settles the matter as to the amendment of the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. SPRINGER. I think the Chair is mistaken as to the parliamentary situation. The committee have thus far only substituted the amendment of the gentleman from Georgia for the proposed amendments.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I wish to make a parliamentary inquiry. I understand the parliamentary status is this: The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. KELLEY] offered an amendment to substitute "Kansas" for "Nebraska"; to that the gentleman from Georgia offered a substitute—

The CHAIRMAN. No, the gentleman is mistaken. The gentleman from Kansas offered an amendment, and his colleague [Mr. PETERS] offered an amendment to that amendment. The gentleman from Georgia thereupon offered a substitute for both, which has been adopted by the committee; and in the judgment of the Chair that determines the amendment proposed by both the gentlemen from Kansas. If the Chair is wrong, it would like to be set right in the matter.

Mr. STEWART, of Georgia. It was intended to operate as a substitute for the amendment of the gentleman from Kansas, but it did not strike out Nebraska.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment of the gentleman from Kansas was voted down by the adoption of the substitute offered by the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. SPRINGER. But it is not yet in the bill.

Mr. CUTCHEON. If the Chair will permit me, the committee decided its preference for the substitute offered by the gentleman from Georgia over that suggested by the gentleman from Kansas. Now the question is on the adoption of the substitute.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will submit the question to the committee, as it involves some doubt, and the question is on agreeing to the substitute of the gentleman from Georgia.

The question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 70, noes 47.

So the amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. KELLEY. I would like to inquire if that amendment now takes the place of the word "Nebraska."

The CHAIRMAN. It does not.

Mr. HOOKER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment to strike out this section altogether. I think it will relieve the bill very much of the trouble that is shown to exist by the discussion which has just taken place.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair was about to suggest that the amendment is not debatable.

Mr. HOOKER. Why not?

The CHAIRMAN. Because the committee has by a direct vote closed debate upon the section and all pending amendments.

Mr. HOOKER. But mine was not a pending amendment when that order was made.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks that debate is closed by order of the committee, but will cause the rule to be read.

Mr. HOOKER. It was stated by the gentleman in charge of the bill that the motion would not preclude the offering of further amendments.

Mr. PERKINS. No, not the offering of amendments.

Mr. BOUTELLE. But it cuts off debate.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the sixth clause of Rule XXIII.

The Clerk read as follows:

6. The committee may, by the vote of a majority of the members present, at any time after the five minutes' debate has begun upon proposed amendments to any section or paragraph of a bill, close all debate upon such section or paragraph, or, at its election, upon the pending amendments only (which motion shall be decided without debate); but this shall not preclude further amendment, to be decided without debate.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of opinion that under this Rule the debate is terminated.

Mr. HOOKER. I only wanted simply to make an inquiry as to what has become of the Oklahoma bill; for I do not suppose it makes much difference to the Indians whether they are robbed drunk or robbed sober.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Mississippi.

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read section 8, as follows:

Sec. 8. That jurisdiction is hereby conferred upon the district courts in the Territory of Oklahoma over all controversies arising between members or citizens of one tribe or nation of Indians and the members or citizens of other tribes or nations in the Territory of Oklahoma, and any citizen or member of one tribe or nation who may commit any offense or crime in said Territory against the person or property of a citizen or member of another tribe or nation shall be subject to the same punishment in the Territory of Oklahoma as he would be if both parties were citizens of the United States. And any member of any Indian tribe or nation in said Territory shall have the right to invoke the aid of the courts therein for the protection of his person and property as though he were a citizen of the United States.

Mr. HOOKER. I have an amendment which I desire to offer to this section.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend section 8 by striking out all after the word "citizens," in line 10, and inserting "and any person residing in the Territory of Oklahoma in whom there is Indian blood shall have the right to invoke the aid of the courts therein for the protection of his personal property as if he were a citizen of the United States."

Mr. HOOKER. It will be observed, Mr. Chairman, that the language of section 8 of the substitute bill provides, after conferring jurisdiction on the district courts of Oklahoma, that any member of any Indian tribe or nation in said Territory shall have the right to invoke the aid of the courts therein for the protection of his personal property as though he were a citizen of the United States.

It was said in debate the other day by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] that the Indians themselves had given their assent to this proposition. As I understand from them their assent was given, by their attorneys, to the proposition that any Indian embraced in the Territory of Oklahoma might appeal, as a citizen of the United States would appeal, to the courts thus established for protection or for the determination of his rights. It was not intended to apply nor was the concession made as to any Indian tribe. But according to the language of the bill it would imply that he must be a member of some tribe in said Territory. The amendment I propose is to give the right to anybody of Indian blood, or holding relations with the Indians; and it is proper, it seems to me, in order that there should be protection accorded to everybody within the Territory—not the Indian Nation, but the Territory of Oklahoma—who should have the right to appeal to the courts of the United States for protection of his own right.

There will be Indians embraced in the Territory under the eighth section, probably, and if the courts are established and this bill passes, they will have the right when they hold relations with the Indian tribes under their law. And I think the amendment ought to be accepted by the committee and added to the bill, for that is what the Indians assented to. It does not refer to the tribes, but to such Indians as may be there and to white citizens who hold relations with the Indians, and they ought to be allowed to invoke the protection of the courts.

I hope the amendment will be adopted as a matter of right.

Mr. PERKINS. Let it be again read.

The amendment was again reported.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. PERKINS. I have no objection to the amendment.

The amendment was adopted.

The Clerk read as follows:

Sec. 9. That the provisions of Title LXII of the Revised Statutes of the United States relating to national banks, and all amendments thereto, shall have the same force and effect in the Territory of Oklahoma as elsewhere in the United States; Provided, That persons otherwise qualified to act as directors shall not be required to have resided in said Territory for more than three months immediately preceding their election as such.

Mr. HOOKER. I would like to inquire of the chairman of the committee what is meant by this provision of this statute:

Provided, That persons otherwise qualified to act as directors shall not be required to have resided in said Territory for more than three months immediately preceding their election as such.

Mr. DORSEY. Under the law the officers of a national bank must have been a resident of the Territory in which the bank was organized at least six months. There are so few residents of Oklahoma who have been there more than six months that we deemed this provision wise.

The Clerk read as follows:

Sec. 10. That the lands embraced in the section of country lying west of the one hundredth meridian and between the States of Kansas and Colorado on the north, the Territory of New Mexico on the west, and the State of Texas on the south, known as the Public Land Strip, are hereby declared a part of the public domain of the United States, and shall be open to settlement under the provisions of the homestead laws of the United States, and under the provisions of sections 12, 13, and 14 of "An act making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the year ending June 30, 1890, and for other purposes," approved March 2, 1889, and under the provisions of section 2 of "An act to ratify and confirm an agreement with the Muscogee (or Creek) nation of Indians in the Indian Territory, and for other purposes," approved March 1, 1889, and under the provisions of this act; but all actual and bona fide settlers upon and occupants of the lands in said Public Land Strip at the time of the passage of this act shall be entitled to have preference to and hold the lands upon which they have settled under the homestead laws of the United States by virtue of their settlement and occupancy of said lands, and they shall be credited with the time they have actually occupied their homesteads, respectively, not exceeding two years, on the time required under said laws to perfect title as homestead settlers. And all other lands in the Territory of Oklahoma which are not required by law, treaty stipulations, executive orders, or right of occupancy for the use of any Indian tribe or which may be relinquished as an Indian or military reservation, shall be a part of the public domain, and shall thereupon be open to settlement under the provisions of the homestead laws of the United States, and under provisions of said acts of Congress approved March 1 and 2, 1889, and under the provisions of this act: Provided, That all tracts of land in Oklahoma Territory which have been set apart for school purposes, to educational societies, or missionary boards at work among the Indians shall not be open for settlement, but are hereby granted to the respective educational societies or missionary boards for whose use the same have been set apart.

Mr. HOLMAN. It will be observed that the last portion of this section, after including the Public Land Strip, provides that—

And all other lands in the Territory of Oklahoma which are not required by law, treaty stipulation, executive orders, or right of occupancy for the use of any Indian tribe, or which may be relinquished as an Indian or military reservation, shall be a part of the public domain.

Now, in view of that provision I wish to add to that section the following provision.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add to section 10 the following:

Provided, however, That no part of the land embraced within the Territory hereby created shall inure to the use or benefit of any railroad corporation (except the rights of way and land for stations heretofore granted to certain railroad corporations), nor shall any provision of this act or any act of any officer of the United States done or performed under the provisions of this act or otherwise invest any corporation owning or operating any railroad in the Indian Territory with any land or right to any land in said Territory; and this act shall not apply to or affect any lands which upon any condition, on becoming a part of the public domain, would inure to the benefit of or become the property of any railroad corporation.

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to say a few words in regard to this amendment. Two railroad corporations authorized to construct railroads in the State of Kansas and subsidized with grants of public lands in that State, running to the northern boundary of the Indian Territory, were by acts of Congress in 1866 authorized to extend their railroads southward through the Indian Territory, with large grants of land in the Indian Territory when the lands in the Indian Territory through which the railroads would pass should become "public lands." In one of those grants ten sections per mile, in the other twenty sections per mile, through the Indian Territory were to be the property of the railroad companies when the lands became "lands of the United States."

These two roads run north and south. A third road (the Atlantic and Pacific) runs east and west through the Indian Territory, and the act authorizing its construction and creating that corporation, also enacted in 1866, contains substantially the same provision as to subsidy in lands in the Indian Territory, with the stipulation that Congress shall provide, when practicable, for the extinguishment of the Indian title with the consent of the Indian tribes. Now, the question is, and it is a serious one to which I invite attention of the House, whether the mere repeal of the acts authorizing those grants will be effectual or not. I fear the mere repeal will not accomplish the purpose, for I apprehend the courts, judging from former decisions, may hold that, inasmuch as the railroad corporations were not entitled to lands within the Indian Territory until the Indian title was extinguished, they were not in default until the Indian title was extinguished and the lands became public lands of the United States; that they were not in default until the Indian titles were extinguished, and that when the lands became "lands of the United States" their rights under the grants would accrue.

You gentlemen are familiar with the unexpected decisions which have been rendered by the courts in relation to these unfortunate grants to railroad corporations. If this view is correct I submit that the last clause of my amendment, "and this act shall not apply to or affect any lands which upon any condition, on becoming a part of the public domain, would inure to the benefit of or become the property of any railroad corporation," is absolutely necessary to defeat any claim the railroad corporations may assert under the several extraordinary grants made in 1866. I am certain Congress does not intend to extinguish the Indian title to these lands at great expense in such form as may even by possibility secure several million acres of the most valuable portions of these lands to railroad corporations.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PEEL. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment:

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 37, after the word "act," insert the following:
"Provided, That nothing herein contained shall in any way change the possession, legal or equitable title to that part of the Indian Territory known as the Cherokee Outlet, and—"

Mr. PEEL. Mr. Chairman, I believe the members of the committee say that this is substantially a portion of the bill. If that be true, of course it would be unnecessary; but, inasmuch as there is a great deal of apprehension on the part of the Indians or some of their number as to whether the status of the Outlet might be affected in some way, I desire to have the amendment inserted. If the bill is what it is designed to be or intended to do, that provision will not certainly hurt it. I do not think we ought by any kind of legislation to change the title, equitable or legal, that the Indians have to this strip which is known as the Outlet.

Mr. PERKINS. I hope, Mr. Chairman, that amendment will not prevail. As suggested by the gentleman from Arkansas, the bill is amply guarded so as to protect what rights the Indians possess concerning the Cherokee Strip as well as other lands within the boundaries of that Territory. But I am not in favor of any affirmative proposition which may be construed as legalizing or recognizing a claim which does not in fact exist. I am willing to leave the status of every piece of land to which the Indians claim any title whatever under the provisions of this bill as it is, but it seems to me that here is an attempt to get legislative recognition which I am opposed to, because I do not think we ought to enter upon that field of legislation. But then there seems to be this question also about that amendment. These Indians, the Cherokees, have leased these lands to cattle companies. The cattle companies are there in possession of them, and they have been notified by the President of the United States that after a certain day they must get out of there, because their possession is not lawful and is contrary to public policy. Therefore I do not want this House to legalize any possession that has been given to these cattle companies in the Cherokee Strip.

Mr. MANSUR. Mr. Chairman—

The CHAIRMAN. Debate on this amendment is exhausted.

Mr. MANSUR. I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will permit me, I would ask that that amendment be again reported.

Mr. MANSUR. I have no objection to that.

The amendment was again reported.

Mr. MANSUR. Mr. Chairman, the objection that I have to that is that it dignifies one piece of Indian land in the Indian Territory over and above all the others. The Indians themselves, by their representatives, day after day, before our committee, sought to have us insert some direct, positive legislation upon this bill. That is true of the Choctaws and the Chickasaws; it is true of the Cherokees; it is true of the Osages; it is true of every Indian tribe that sent representatives to appear before us. They came with the most skillful men that the country can furnish. They came with propositions so insidious in character that you could scarcely understand them, and when they go away with affirmative legislation they invariably assert at home that they have a new recognition and a new lease of life and are stronger than they ever were before.

Therefore I insist, sir, that, in the interest of the white people of this country, the true method of dealing with the Indians is to say specifically—as we have said in this bill, not once or twice, but four times—that there is nothing in the bill which in any way changes the existing status of any Indian or any Indian tribe. Having said that, we should neither add to nor take from it. Hence I say that this House ought not to indulge in the recognition of a specific claim or title to any one piece or tract of land. More than that, the eye of the nation is to-day turned toward the Cherokee Strip as it never was before. We have had court after court, two Attorneys-General and two Administrations differing in politics, declare that the Indians have no such right in this strip as that they can lease or transfer it to any other party than themselves; that whatever right they have in the land, if any, belongs to the Indians and to the Indians alone, and is not transferable for leasing purposes of any kind.

Now, I say we ought not to embarrass our Government. We ought not to legislate against our white men. We ought to stand right where we are, because I venture the assertion right here, as an honest conviction of my heart, that the attempt of the Cherokee Nation to get these 6,022,000 acres of land is the grandest steal of modern times as against the white men of this country. All that is necessary to satisfy any gentleman of that is for him to investigate the facts. Two Administrations, the Democratic one just out and the Republican one just in, while they do not use the same kind of language that I do, yet, by the notices they have given to the cattle barons everywhere, they do take the same ground and the same view of the matter. Therefore, let this House not indulge in this kind of positive declaration, but be content with just what the bill says, that there is not a word in it that changes the status of any right, title, or claim that any Indian or Indian tribe has to any lands in the Territory.

Mr. PEEL. I move to strike out the last word. In justice to myself I desire to say that if I know anything about a negative proposition that is exactly what this amounts to. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. MANSUR] has declared that this bill asserts in three or four places that it does not interfere with the title to this Outlet.

Mr. MANSUR. It does not name the Outlet, but it says it does not interfere with the title to any land.

Mr. PEEL. "Any land;" well, if that does not include these lands, then I do not know what common language means. Now, I want it distinctly understood that I do not recognize any claim that the cattle-men have ever set up to this Outlet or to any other country out there.

I never believed that the Indians had any legal right to lease those lands, and I approve of the action of the President ordering the cattle-men out of there; but as long as there is any apprehension on the part of those who claim an interest that this bill will in some way embarrass it, while this committee claim that it will not, I think it desirable that the uncertainty should be removed.

Mr. KERR, of Iowa. Supposing the amendment which the gentleman from Arkansas proposes adopted, would it not prohibit any action by the Government to dispossess these cattle syndicates?

Mr. PEEL. Why, certainly not. It just leaves the status as it was before the bill was passed. It is not proposed by this bill to put the cattle-men out or to interfere with them in any way. That belongs to the executive branch of the Government, and it has the right to do it. I care very little about this; but in order to allay apprehensions and in order that the declarations of this committee to the House and the country may not be misunderstood, I propose this proviso, which I think will put the question at rest. If we want to interfere with Indian rights or Indian claims to lands, let us do it boldly. I am ready to go as far as anybody, but I am not willing to pass any bill that is deceptive in its character. I do not think that this bill is so, but at the same time I believe that the adoption of this proviso can not do any harm.

Mr. HEARD. If the word "possession" were omitted, would not the gentleman's amendment still effect the purpose which he says he desires to accomplish? Then it would go to the title, legal or equitable, and would not cut any figure in the matter of the control of the leasing by the Government.

Mr. PEEL. I want to say to my friend that the treaty of 1866 reserves the possessions to the Indians. That is in the treaty, and we can not interfere with it by this bill unless we undertake to take the possession away from them.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Chairman, I am advised that there are two or three gentlemen who would like to speak on this amendment and the further discussion may therefore consume some time. I will move that the committee rise.

Mr. BUCHANAN, of New Jersey. I ask the gentleman to withhold that motion for a moment until I make a request that an amendment which I have prepared be printed in the RECORD, to be considered as pending to-morrow when the previous question operates.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Jersey sends to the desk an amendment, which will be printed in the RECORD and be considered as pending.

The amendment of Mr. BUCHANAN, of New Jersey, is as follows:

Strike out section 25; strike out section 26; strike out section 27; strike out section 28; strike out section 29; strike out section 30; strike out section 31; strike out section 32; strike out section 33; strike out section 34; strike out section 35; strike out section 36; strike out section 37; strike out section 38; strike out section 39; strike out section 40; strike out section 41; strike out section 42; strike out section 43; strike out section 44.

The following amendments, by Mr. PICKLER, were also ordered to be printed in the RECORD, to be considered as pending:

Amend section 11 by striking out all of said section after the words "final proof," in line 11 of said section.

Amend section 12 by striking out all after the word "patent," in line 15 of said section.

The following amendment, by Mr. TARSNEY, was also ordered to be printed in the RECORD, to be considered as pending:

Amend section 10 by adding thereto the following proviso:
Provided, further, That the lands in this section declared a part of the public domain of the United States and hereby opened to settlement are hereby created into a public land district, and the President is hereby empowered and directed to locate land offices for the same in said district, and to appoint, in conformity with existing law, a register and receiver for said land office; and for the purpose of carrying out this provision the sum of $2,500, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated.

Mr. PERKINS. I renew the motion that the committee rise.
 The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. PAYSON reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, having had under consideration the bill (S. 895) to provide a temporary government for the Territory of Oklahoma, had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. PERKINS. I move that the House now adjourn.

Pending the motion to adjourn, business was transacted by unanimous consent, as follows:

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. KENNEDY, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills and a joint resolution of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (S. 280) to amend an act to incorporate the Georgetown and Tennallytown Railway Company of the District of Columbia, which became a law August 10, A. D. 1888;

A bill (S. 308) to ascertain the amount due the Pottawatomie Indians of Michigan and Indiana;

A bill (S. 1297) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the construction of a wagon and foot-passenger bridge across the Mississippi River at or near Lyons, Iowa;"

A bill (S. 1858) to shorten the terms of imprisonment in the jail and in the work-house of the District of Columbia on account of good conduct during confinement;

A bill (S. 1905) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the building of a railroad bridge at Fort Smith, in the State of Arkansas," approved July 19, 1888;

A bill (H. R. 5682) to amend an act entitled "An act to constitute Columbus, Ohio, a port of delivery, and to extend the provisions of the act of June 10, 1880, entitled 'An act to amend the statutes in relation to the immediate transportation of dutiable goods, and for other purposes,' to said port of Columbus, Ohio," approved February 9, 1889; and Joint resolution (S. R. 63) providing for taking the census in Alaska.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. RUSK, for this day, on account of important business.

To Mr. LANSING, for ten days from this date.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

Mr. WILSON, of West Virginia, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, papers in the case of William Hawkins.

CORRECTION.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to state, in regard to the resolution submitted by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] calling for Departmental information, that it was incorrectly stated to be a report from the Naval Committee. Without objection, the resolution will be journalized as having been introduced by the gentleman from Massachusetts by unanimous consent. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

MEMORIAL ADDRESSES ON HON. JAMES LAIRD.

Mr. LAWS, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and adopted:

Resolved, That Saturday, April 12, 1890, at 4 o'clock in the afternoon, be set apart for paying tribute to the memory of Hon. James Laird, late a member of the House of Representatives from the Second district of the State of Nebraska.

CAR-COUPERS AND AIR-BRAKES ON FREIGHT TRAINS.

Mr. LACEY, by unanimous consent, presented the following resolutions of the Legislature of the State of Iowa; which were referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD:

Whereas reliable statistics show that thousands of our young men are killed and many thousands more are crippled for life in this nation, in coupling and uncoupling cars and from being on top of freight trains to handle brakes; and

Whereas the National Car-Builders' Association (an organization of mechanics in the employ of railroad companies, charged with the responsibility of car-building and representing in the said association about 90 per cent. of the railroads of the nation) did, after years of earnest investigation and tests, at their twenty-fifth annual convention, held in Minneapolis, Minn., June, 1887, adopt by over a two-thirds majority vote an automatic safety car-coupler of the vertical plane hook type as the standard automatic coupler for general and uniform use upon cars in this nation; and

Whereas the managers of the railroads represented in that association of National Master Car-Builders did, after ninety days of consideration, approve the action of the master car-builders by over a two-thirds majority vote, thus making what was named by the executive committee of the Master Car-Builders' Association the M. C. B. coupler, meaning the Master Car-Builders' Coupler, the standard car-coupler for cars, on their own motion; and

Whereas said executive committee, under instructions from the association, did make specifications and draught contour lines of said coupler, and published them to the world, stating that any automatic vertical plane coupler that would couple automatically with the M. C. B. coupler, and also couple readily by hand to the common draw-bar, with the link and pin coupler, would be considered as a standard coupler and so used by all railroads (of which couplers there are now some ten or twelve already accepted and in use by the roads), thus forestalling a monopoly in such coupler; and

Whereas said same master car-builders did in the same convention, held in Minneapolis in 1887, adopt the report of their committee on freight-car brakes, which report showed that power or air brakes were as practically applicable to freight as to passenger cars; and

Whereas there being now no longer any doubt as to the practicability of applying such brakes to freight trains, and were such uniform automatic power brakes and couplers universally and uniformly adopted and used in the freight-car transportation service of this nation, it would prevent a very large per cent. of the fatalities and injuries now daily and hourly suffered by this large class of young men engaged in the indispensable work of the commerce of the nation; Therefore,

Be it resolved by the senate (the house concurring), That our Senators and Representatives in Congress be most earnestly and respectfully requested to take all proper means to have enacted at the earliest possible date efficient laws that shall require that all cars used on railroads in the interstate commerce of the nation shall be equipped with uniform, safe, automatic couplers and power automatic brakes, to the end that the terrible sacrifice of life and limb be prevented and that this "reproach to our civilization of subjecting any class of American workmen, while in the pursuit of a necessary and useful avocation, to a peril of life and limb as great as that of a soldier in time of war," be taken away.

I hereby certify that the foregoing resolution has been passed by both houses of the Twenty-third General Assembly of Iowa.

W. R. COCHRANE, Secretary Senate.

The motion of Mr. PERKINS that the House adjourn was then agreed to; and accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 15 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

EXECUTIVE AND OTHER COMMUNICATIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

ADDITIONAL BUILDINGS AND IMPROVEMENTS IN THE CHILOCCO SCHOOL, INDIAN TERRITORY.

Letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a copy of a communication from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, with explanatory papers, explaining the necessity for additional buildings and improvements in the Chillico School, Indian Territory—to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

PERSONS ARRESTED FOR MURDER, ETC., IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Letter from the Attorney-General of the United States, transmitting a report of the number and names of persons arrested in the District of Columbia charged with murder, manslaughter, etc., in answer to resolution of the House of Representatives of February 21, 1890—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

SENATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate bills and resolution of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

A bill (S. 680) for the relief of Alice E. Robertson—to the Committee on Claims.

A bill (S. 1219) to provide for the construction of a public building at Salt Lake City, Utah Territory—to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

A bill (S. 2653) to provide for the times and places to hold terms of the United States courts in the State of Washington—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed and bound in cloth 5,000 extra copies of the report of the Superintendent of the United States Coast and Geodetic Survey for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1889, together with the usual necessary progress sketches and illustrations, 1,000 copies of which shall be for the use of the Senate, 2,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, and 2,000 copies for the use of the United States Coast and Geodetic Survey; to the Committee on Printing.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, the following reports were filed, and, with accompanying bills, ordered to be printed, and referred as follows:

Mr. THOMAS, from the Committee on War Claims, to which was re-committed the bill (H. R. 7158) authorizing the Quartermaster-General and the Commissary-General to re-examine claims against the United States, and extending time for filing such claims, reported, as a substitute therefor, a bill (H. R. 8098) authorizing the Secretary of War to cause to be re-examined claims against the United States, and extending the time for filing such claims, and for other purposes; which said substitute was read twice, and referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. ENLOE, from the Committee on War Claims, reported favorably the following bills; which were severally referred to the Committee of the Whole House:

A bill (H. R. 5280) for the relief of Mrs. Ellen P. Malloy;

A bill (H. R. 1341) for the relief of Louisa Q. Lovell and others; and A bill (H. R. 1353) for the relief of the heirs of William D. Wilson, deceased.

Mr. LANSING, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, reported with amendment the bill (H. R. 3809) relative to the Rancho Punta de la Laguna—to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky, from the Committee on War Claims, to which was referred a letter from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a copy of the findings of fact in the case of Mary
J. Dooley vs. The United States, reported the same with the recommendation that the same be printed and recommitted to said committee; which was so ordered.

Mr. THOMAS, from the Committee on War Claims, reported favorably the bill (H. R. 6000) for the relief of Samuel Marsh—to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. THOMPSON, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported favorably the bill (H. R. 813) to provide an additional mode of taking depositions of witnesses in cases pending in the courts of the United States—to the House Calendar.

Mr. CUTCHEON, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported favorably the bill (H. R. 7976) to amend sections 1216 and 1285 of the Revised Statutes relative to certificates of merit to enlisted men of the Army—to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. ATKINSON, of Pennsylvania, from the Committee on Expenditures in the Treasury Department, reported, as a substitute for the bill of the House (H. R. 3896) to determine and increase the pay of watchmen in the Treasury Department, a bill (H. R. 8106) to determine and increase the pay of watchmen in the Treasury Department—to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. DAVIDSON, from the Committee on Commerce, reported, as a substitute for the bill (H. R. 4665) to establish five lights at stations along the ship-channel of Mobile Bay, a bill (H. R. 8107) to establish additional aids to navigation along the ship-channel of Mobile Bay,
Alabama—to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. KERR, of Iowa, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, reported favorably the bill (H. R. 4596) to provide for the construction of a public building at Hastings, Nebr.—to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. ATKINSON, of Pennsylvania, from the Committee on Expenditures in the Treasury Department, reported favorably the bill of the Senate (S. 2237) providing for the maintenance of discipline among customs officers—to the House Calendar.

ADVERSE REPORT.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, an adverse report was delivered to the Clerk and laid on the table, as follows:

By Mr. THOMPSON, from the Committee on the Judiciary, on the bill (H. R. 879) to amend section 3477 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, the following resolutions were delivered to the Speaker and referred as follows:

By Mr. LANSING:

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay out of the contingent fund of the House of Representatives to Charles H. Clark the sum of $50, being the amount due him for services rendered as temporary clerk in the document room of the House of Representatives from January 6, 1890, to February 1, 1890;

to the Committee on Accounts.

By Mr. KELLEY:

Whereas in defiance of the proclamation of the President of the United States, dated February 17, 1890, persons largely interested in the live-stock business in the Indian Territory and the adjacent States have conspired together to drive their herds into the section of country known as the Cherokee Strip, claiming the right to do so under lease purporting to have been made by the authorities of the Cherokee Nation; and

Whereas it appears that the influence of the so-called "cattle barons" to hold such Strip for grazing purposes has been the principal obstacle in the way of the adjustment of the claim of the Cherokee Nation and the opening of said land to settlement: Therefore,

Resolved, That any violation of the provisions of said proclamation would be prejudicial to the public interests, and its rigid enforcement will receive the unqualified approval of the country at large, and especially of the persons wishing to make homes upon the land in question.

Resolved, That whatever may be the consideration awarded in the adjustment of the Cherokee claim, lands herein referred to should be opened to actual settlement under the homestead laws of the United States; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, the following bills were delivered to the Speaker, severally read twice, and referred as follows:

SENATE.

THURSDAY, March 13, 1890.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented a letter from the secretary of Utah Territory, transmitting a copy of a memorial to Congress from the governor and Legislative Assembly of Utah, praying that an appropriation of $250,000 be made for the construction of a public building at Ogden, Utah; which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. PADDOCK subsequently said: I suggest that the memorial of the Legislative Assembly of the Territory of Utah, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, relating to the construction of a public building at Ogden, be referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It asks for an appropriation.

Mr. PADDOCK. It is for the construction of a public building for a post-office and other Government offices.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is customary to refer petitions asking for appropriations to the committee on that subject. If there be no objection, however, the memorial will be referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. PADDOCK. That is the proper reference.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented a petition of Grand Army Post No. 289, of Grenola, Kans.; a petition of citizens of Cherryvale, Kans.; a petition of citizens of Smith County, Kansas; a petition of citizens of Brewster, Kans.; a petition of citizens of Wanego, Kans.; a petition of citizens of Lyons County, Kentucky; a petition of citizens of Horton, Kans.; and a petition of the Grand Army of the Republic Post No. 27, of Caldwell, Kans., praying for the passage of the service-pension bill; which were referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented a petition of Grand Army Post 76, of Nebraska; a petition of citizens of Coffey County, Kansas; a petition of Grand Army Post 134, of Kansas; a petition of citizens of Kansas; a petition of citizens of Topeka, Kans.; a petition of Grand Army Post 75, of Crete, Nebr.; a petition of Grand Army Post 136, of Nebraska; a petition of Grand Army Post 118, of Tekamah, Nebr.; a petition of Grand Army Post 91, of Minden, Nebr.; a petition of Grand Army Post 23, of Central City, Nebr., and a petition of McConihie Post No. 45, Grand Army of the Republic, of Nebraska, praying for the passage of Senate bill 496, to remove the limitation in the act granting arrears of pension; which were referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented a petition of citizens of Reno County, Kansas, praying for the passage of the Kansas-Indiana service-pension bill; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented a petition of C. H. Schroeder, principal of the public school at Sligo, Mo., and the petition of M. A. Hang, teacher in the public school at Salem, Mo., praying for the passage of the international copyright bill; which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a memorial of the Friends' Association of Lowell, Kans., remonstrating against increasing appropriations for naval defense; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

He also presented a petition of a mass meeting of colored citizens of Ironton, Ohio, praying for the passage of the Blair educational bill; which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of the Leavenworth County (Kansas) Farmers' Alliance, praying for the passage of the bill to establish national warehouses for the storage of grain; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of Gridley, Kans., praying for the passage of a national Sunday-rest law; which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also presented a petition of the county commissioners of Jewell County, Kansas, and a petition of the county commissioners of Pawnee County, Kansas, praying that an appropriation of $6,200,000 be made for a deep-water harbor at Galveston, Tex.; which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented sundry petitions numerously signed by citizens of the counties of Shannon, Crowley, and Neosho, in the State of Kansas, and a petition of citizens of South Haven, Kans., all praying for the free coinage of silver; which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. STEWART presented nineteen petitions signed by 793 members of the Farmers' Alliance and citizens of Nebraska, praying for the free coinage of silver; which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, presented a memorial of the Monthly Meeting of Friends, of Richmond, Keokuk County, Iowa, consisting of 400 members, remonstrating against appropriations for the construction of a navy; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. HAWLEY presented a memorial of citizens of Hartford, Conn., remonstrating against the passage of a Sunday-rest bill; which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. GORMAN presented the petition of Virginia T. Lewis, of Baltimore, Md., praying Congress to purchase the dress sword of General George Washington; which was referred to the Committee on the Library.

He also presented a petition of 41 citizens of Sparrow's Point, Maryland, praying for the free coinage of silver; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. CULLOM presented a petition of citizens of Illinois, praying that all honorably discharged Union soldiers and sailors who served three months or more in the late war be given a pension from the date of their discharge large enough to keep them from suffering for the comforts of life, except those who have drawn such pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented resolutions adopted by Carrollton Post, No. 442, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Illinois, remonstrating against the passage of the dependent pension bill and praying for the passage of the service-pension bill; which were referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented a petition of the Peoria County Grange, Patrons of Husbandry, of North Peoria, Ill., praying for the passage of the bill introduced by Hon. P. S. Post, providing for the free coinage of silver; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. MANDERSON presented a petition of the county commissioners of Polk County, Nebraska, praying that an appropriation be made to secure a deep water-harbor at Galveston, Tex.; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. MANDERSON. I present a petition of citizens of Antelope County, Nebraska, calling the attention of Congress to the experiments that are being made in the West in the way of producing beet and sorghum-cane sugar, and praying for the retention of the present tariff thereon. I understand that petitions of this character are being referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, and I move that this petition be so referred.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. EVARTS presented a petition of 24 citizens of Woodville, Jefferson County, New York, praying for the free coinage of silver; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. PADDOCK presented resolutions adopted by the Chamber of Commerce of Salt Lake City, Utah, favoring an appropriation for a deep-water harbor at Galveston, Tex.; which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. WALTHALL presented a petition of the Legislature of Mississippi, praying for legislation requiring that all cars used on railroads in the business of interstate commerce shall be equipped with uniform automatic couplers and power automatic brakes to prevent the sacrifice of life and limb; which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. TURPIE, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4840) to increase the pension of William Boone, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. BLACKBURN, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2639) for the relief of Mrs. Selina Bestor, Orson H. Bestor, and E. Francis Riggs, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. COCKRELL, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1757) to apply to commissioned and non-commissioned officers the provisions of the act of Congress entitled "An act for the relief of certain volunteer and regular soldiers of the late war, and the war with Mexico," approved March 2, 1889, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was agreed to, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. FRYE, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2897) to amend an act entitled "An act to amend the statutes in relation to immediate transportation of dutiable goods, and for other purposes," approved June 10, A. D. 1880, reported it without amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3017) to amend chapter 418 of the acts passed at the second session of the Fiftyeth Congress, reported adversely thereon; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

LIFE-SAVING APPLIANCES.

Mr. FRYE. I am instructed by the same committee to report an original bill, and it renders the one just indefinitely postponed unnecessary.

The bill (S. 3091) to repeal chapter 418 of the acts passed at the second session of the Fiftieth Congress was read the first time by its title.

Mr. FRYE. I desire to say a few words in relation to this bill in order that the greed of certain companies may receive the notice required.

In the last Congress there was a proposition before the Senate and before Congress to require all steam-boat companies to carry certain projectiles, guns, and rockets, for the casting of lines in case of distress. The Committee on Commerce considered the bill carefully and had doubts, but gave the security of life the benefit of the doubts and reported the bill favorably; it passed both Houses and became a law.

When that bill became a law the Lyle Gun Company, the Hunt Gun Company, the Cunningham rocket concern furnished to the life-saving stations of the country the rockets for $20 each; the Lyle gun for $87.50; the Hunt gun for $87.25; and, as I understand, they are to-day furnishing the life-saving stations those projectiles at those prices. But when we passed the law requiring steam-boats each to use a projectile of this kind the charges immediately took a leap upward, and to-day the Lyle company is charging for its gun not $87.50, but $100; the Hunt company is charging $250 instead of $87.25, and the Cunningham rocket costs $90 instead of $20.

The committee have considered the matter, and have reported a repeal of the law requiring the projectile—

Mr. COCKRELL. It ought to be passed this morning.

Mr. FRYE. No, I do not care about having the bill passed this morning, but it will be passed without any doubt.

Mr. GORMAN. Let it be acted upon at once.

Mr. COCKRELL. It ought to be acted on at once.

Mr. FRYE. If it is the desire of the Senate that the bill shall be taken up now, I shall be very happy to have it passed now and become a law.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maine asks unanimous consent that a bill be passed the title of which will be read.

The bill was read the second time by its title.

Mr. HOAR. There is no committee for whom I have higher respect than the Committee on Commerce, and no Senator for whose thorough knowledge of this general subject I have so high respect as I have for that of the Senator from Maine. But this is a matter relating to the security of life. It is a matter in regard to which Congress passed a law on full deliberation within a very few years.

Mr. FRYE. Two years ago.

Mr. HOAR. Two years ago. It seems to me, therefore, that as the Senator who reported the bill did not himself originally make a request that it should be considered so urgently, it had better stand on our docket a day or two in order that if there is any statement on the other side which should come it may appear. I ask the Senator to let the bill stand over for a day or two.

Mr. FRYE. I have no desire to have the bill passed this morning.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understands the Senator from Massachusetts to object to the present consideration of the bill.

Mr. HOAR. Yes, sir.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed on the Calendar.

MISSOURI AND COLUMBIA RIVER BRIDGES.

Mr. VEST. I am instructed by the Committee on Commerce to report back with amendments two House bills, House bill 4130 and House bill 7617, and I desire to make a statement, with the permission of the Senate.

These two bills are, with certain amendments, bills which were passed by the Senate and sent to the House of Representatives. Instead of passing upon the Senate bills, the other House has sent us two original House bills. The Committee on Commerce have amended these two bills, and I now report them back and ask that they be considered with a view to a committee of conference.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri reports from the Committee on Commerce a bill, which will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (H. R. 4130) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at the city of Pierre, in South Dakota.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri asks unanimous consent that the bill may now be considered. Is there objection? It will be read at length for information.

The Chief Clerk read the bill, and, by unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendments reported by the Committee on Commerce will be stated in their order.

The first amendment was, in section 1, line 11, before the word "trains," to strike out the word "railway" and insert "railroad," and at the end of the section to add "and approved by the Secretary of War;" so as to make the section read:

That the Pierre Ponton Bridge Company, a corporation duly organized and existing under the laws of the State of South Dakota, its successors, or assigns, be, and are hereby, authorized to construct and maintain a bridge, and approaches thereto, across the Missouri River between the city of Pierre, in the State of South Dakota, and Stanley County, in the State of South Dakota.

Said bridge shall be constructed to provide for the passage of railroad trains, wagons, and vehicles of all kinds, steam and street cars, animals, foot-passengers, and for all road travel, for such reasonable rates of toll and under such reasonable rules and regulations as may be prescribed by said corporation, its successors or assigns, and approved by the Secretary of War.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 2, line 7, to strike out the word "railroads" and insert "railroad," and in the same line to strike out the word "the" before the words "said bridge;" so as to make the section read:

Sec. 2. That any bridge built under this act and subject to its limitations shall be a lawful structure, and shall be recognized and known as a post-route, upon which also no higher charge shall be made for the transmission over the same of the mails, the troops, and the munitions of war of the United States than the rate per mile paid for the transportation over the railroad or public highways leading to said bridge, and it shall enjoy the rights and privileges of other post-roads in the United States; and equal privileges in the use of said bridge shall be granted to all telegraph companies, and the United States shall have the right of way across said bridge, and its approaches, for postal-telegraph purposes.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 3, line 10, before the word "own," to strike out "his" and insert "its;" in line 14, after the word "time," to strike out the words "substantially or materially;" in line 18, after the word "cause," to insert "the entire removal thereof or;" and in line 25, after the word "in," to strike out the word "which" and insert "whose jurisdiction;" so as to make the proviso read:

Provided, That said draw shall be opened promptly by said company or corporation upon reasonable signal for the passage of boats and rafts and said company or corporation shall maintain, at its own expense, from sunset to sunrise, such lights or other signals on said bridge as the Light-House Board shall prescribe. No bridge shall be erected or maintained under the authority of this act which shall at any time obstruct the free navigation of said river, and if any bridge erected under such authority shall, in the opinion of the Secretary of War, obstruct such navigation, he is hereby authorized to cause the entire removal thereof or such change or alteration of such bridge to be made as will effectually obviate such obstruction, and all such alterations shall be made and all such obstructions shall be removed at the expense of the owner or owners of said bridge, and in case of any litigation arising from any obstruction or alleged obstruction to the free navigation of said river, caused or alleged to be caused by said bridge, the case may be brought in the district court of the United States of the State of South Dakota in whose jurisdiction any portion of said obstruction or bridge may be located.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 3, line 39, before the word "railroad," to insert the word "a;" so as to make the additional proviso read:

Provided, That said company may construct a wagon and foot bridge alone, and in case of the construction of a wagon and foot bridge alone the draws shall be of the same length herein provided, and shall be of such construction as shall be approved by the Secretary of War, and shall be subject to all the provisions herein contained in respect to being promptly opened to admit of the unobstructed navigation of said river, and of keeping the same lighted as herein provided in case of a railroad and wagon bridge, and in such case the provisions herein in relation to the use for railroad purposes shall not apply.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 6, line 4, to strike out the words "date thereof: Provided, That Congress reserves the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act" and to insert "time this act takes effect: Provided, That Congress reserves the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act whenever it may think the public interests so require;" so as to make the section read:

Sec. 6. That this act shall be null and void if actual construction of the bridge herein authorized be not commenced within one year and completed within three years from the time this act takes effect: Provided, That Congress reserves the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act whenever it may think the public interests so require.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River between the city of Pierre, in Hughes County, and Stanley County, in the State of South Dakota."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] reports from the Committee on Commerce the bill (H. R. 7617) to authorize the Oregon and Washington Bridge Company to construct and maintain a bridge across the Columbia River between the State of Oregon and the State of Washington, and to establish it as a post-road, and asks that the bill may be now considered.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the amendments of the committee will be acted upon as they are reached in reading the text of the bill, to save time.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read the bill.

The first amendment of the Committee on Commerce was, in section 1, line 6, after the word "maintain," to strike out the words "if in the opinion of the Secretary of War the same be a public necessity;" in line 8, after the word "suitable," to strike out "the interests of;" and insert "commerce and not interfering with;" in line 18, after the word "river," to insert "by reason of the construction of said bridge;" and, in line 21, to strike out the word "touches" and insert "may be;" so as to make the section read:

That the Oregon and Washington Bridge Company, a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of Oregon, its successors and assigns, be, and is hereby, authorized to construct and maintain a bridge across the Columbia River, at a place suitable to commerce and not interfering with navigation at a point at or near La Camas, in the State of Washington, and to lay on or over said bridge a track or tracks for the more perfect connection of any railroad or railroads that are or shall be constructed to said river, on either or both sides thereof, at or opposite said point, under the limitations and conditions hereinafter provided; that said bridge shall not interfere with the free navigation of said river, and in case of any litigation arising from any obstruction or alleged obstruction to the free navigation of said river by reason of the construction of said bridge, the cause may be tried before the circuit court of the United States in and for any district in whose jurisdiction any portion of said obstruction or bridge may be. Said bridge shall be constructed to provide for the passage of railroad trains; and, at the option of the said company or corporation, its successors and assigns, for the safe and convenient passage of wagons and vehicles of all kinds, animals, and foot-passengers, for such reasonable rates of toll as may be fixed from time to time by the Secretary of War.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment was, in section 2, line 17, after the word "if," to insert the words "in the opinion of the Secretary of War;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 2. That said bridge shall be provided with two or more draw-openings, each having not less than 200 feet clear channel way; and in addition to said draw-openings one or more fixed channel spans, each having not less than 350 feet clear channel way; and every part of the superstructure of said bridge shall give a clear head-room of not less than 10 feet above extreme known high-water mark: Provided, That all spans shall be so located as to afford the greatest possible accommodation to the river traffic, and a draw-opening shall, if practicable, be located next or near shore: Provided, also, That if the physical characteristics of the locality so require, and the interests of navigation be not injured thereby, the lengths of the fixed spans or the number of draw-openings may be reduced: Provided, also, That for any two adjacent draw-openings of 200 feet each, one draw-opening of 300 feet may be substituted if, in the opinion of the Secretary of War, the interests of navigation be not injured thereby.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment was, in section 4, line 13, after the word "War," to strike out "or" and insert "and;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 4. That all piers shall be built parallel with the current of the river at that stage of water which is most important for navigation; and the bridge itself shall be built as nearly as may be at right angles thereto; and that riprapping or other protection for imperfect foundations which will lessen the required water way shall not be permitted; and also that piers which will produce cross-currents or bars dangerous to navigation shall not be constructed; and if after construction any piers or accessory works are found to produce the above-mentioned effects, or if any riprapping or other protection prohibited by this section is found to exist, the nuisance shall be abated or corrected under the direction of the Secretary of War and at the expense of the company or persons owning, controlling, or operating said bridge.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment was, in section 7, line 3, before the word "said," to strike out "on" and insert "of;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 7. That the bridge authorized to be constructed by this act shall be located and built under and subject to such regulations for the security of navigation on said river as the Secretary of War shall prescribe; and to secure that object said corporation shall submit for his examination a design and drawings of the bridge, piers, approaches, and accessory works, and a map of the location, giving for a space of at least 3 miles above and 1 mile below the proposed location the topography of the banks of the river and the shore-lines at high and low water. This map shall be accompanied by others, drawn on the scale of 1 inch to 200 feet, giving for a space of one-half a mile above the line of the proposed bridge and one-quarter of a mile below an accurate representation of the bottom of the river, by contour lines 2 feet apart, determined by accurate soundings, and also showing over the whole width of this part of the river the force and directions of the currents at low water, at high water, and at least one intermediate stage, by triangulated observations on suitable floats. The map shall also show the location of other bridges in the vicinity, and shall give such information as the Secretary of War may require for a full and satisfactory understanding of the subject, and the construction of the proposed bridge shall not be commenced until the location and plans thereof are approved by the Secretary of War.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment was in section 8, line 8, after the word "War," to strike out the words "or Congress;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 8. That any bridge constructed under the authority of this act shall be built under the general supervision of the Secretary of War, and no changes or alterations in plans shall be made during the construction of said bridge or after its completion, unless said changes or alterations conform to the provisions of this act and are authorized by the Secretary of War; that such alterations and changes as may be required by the Secretary of War in said bridge so as to preserve free and convenient navigation shall be made under the direction of the Secretary of War at their own expense by the company or persons owning, controlling, or operating said bridge; that during original construction or in carrying out any authorized changes or repairs of said bridge a navigable channel shall be preserved at the site of the bridge at all times, and the water way of the river shall not be obstructed to a greater extent than is absolutely necessary, and such lights and buoys shall be kept on all coffer-dams, piles, etc., as may be necessary for the security of navigation.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment was, in section 9, line 16, after the word "States," to strike out the words "or any State" and insert "in and for the district;" in line 17, to strike out the word "touches" and insert "may be;" in line 18, to strike out the words "the cost thereof" and insert "such expenses," and to strike out the proviso in the following words:

Provided, That in the construction of additional accessory works not contemplated by the approved plan of bridge and accessory works no greater sum than $15,000 shall be required to be expended upon said bridge in a single year: And provided further, That such sum of money as may be necessary to execute the provisions of this section is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, to be paid on requisition of the Secretary of War.

So as to make the section read:

SEC. 9. That whenever the Secretary of War has good reason to believe that any of the provisions of sections 4, 6, and 8 of this act have not been complied with by the company or persons owning, controlling, or operating the bridge authorized under its provisions, it shall be the duty of the Secretary of War, on satisfactory proof thereof, to require the said company or persons to comply with the provisions of said sections; and on failure of said persons or company to comply with said requirements within a reasonable time, the Secretary of War shall proceed to cause the necessary work, in the form of additions, alterations, repairs, or removals of obstructions, to be made at the expense of the United States, and shall refer the matter, without delay, to the Attorney-General of the United States, whose duty it shall be to institute, in the name of the United States, proceedings in the circuit court of the United States in and for the district in which any portion of said obstruction or bridge may be, for the recovery of such expenses; and all moneys accruing from such proceedings shall be covered into the Treasury of the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment was, in section 11, line 7, after the word "for," to insert "the;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 11. That the bridge constructed, maintained, and operated under this act and according to its limitations shall be a lawful structure, and shall be recognized and known as a post-route, upon which also no higher charge shall be made for the transportation over the same of the mails, the troops, and the munitions of war of the United States than the rate per mile paid for the transportation of said mails, troops, and munitions over the railroads and public highways leading to said bridge; and the United States shall have the right of way for postal-telegraph and telephone purposes over said bridge.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment was in section 12, line 4, to strike out the words "passage or" before the word "approval;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 12. That this act shall be null and void if actual construction of the bridge herein authorized be not commenced within two years and completed within four years from the date of approval thereof.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment was, in section 13, line 7, before the word "approval," to strike out the words "passage or;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 13. That all former acts or parts of acts granting authority for the erection of any bridge or bridges over the portion of said Columbia River over which the construction of a bridge is authorized by this act be, and the same are hereby, repealed in each and every case where actual construction of said bridge or bridges be not commenced on or before the date of the approval of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was concluded.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

The preamble was agreed to.

Mr. VEST. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments to these two bills and ask for a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. VEST, Mr. DOLPH, and Mr. CULLOM were appointed.

REPORT OF DISTRICT HEALTH OFFICER.

Mr. MANDERSON. From the Committee on Printing I report back the joint resolution (S. R. 14) authorizing the printing of 2,500 extra copies of the report of the health officer of the District of Columbia adversely, and I ask that it be indefinitely postponed. I report from the Committee on Printing a concurrent resolution to the same effect, which I ask may be now considered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection the joint resolution will be indefinitely postponed, and the concurrent resolution will be read with a view to its present consideration.

The concurrent resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Public Printer be, and he is hereby, authorized to print 2,500 extra copies of the annual report of the health officer of the District of Columbia; 100 for the use of the Senate, 350 for the use of the House of Representatives, and 2,050 for the use of the said health officer of the District.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. HARRIS. I introduce a bill prepared by a committee of the Board of Trade of the city of Washington. I introduce it at their request, and ask its reference to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

The bill (S. 3092) to provide for a permanent system of highways in that part of the District of Columbia not included within the cities of Washington and Georgetown was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. PLATT introduced a bill (S. 3093) granting arrears of pension to Hermann A. Sanford; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. EVARTS introduced a bill (S. 3094) to provide for the payment of the claim of the mayor, aldermen, and commonalty of the city of New York; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. INGALLS introduced a bill (S. 3095) for the relief of Joseph C. Grissom; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. STOCKBRIDGE (by request) introduced a bill (S. 3096) to revise the wages of certain employes in the Government Printing Office; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. HAWLEY introduced a bill (S. 3097) authorizing the appointment of an assistant sword-master at the Military Academy; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also introduced a bill (S. 3098) to amend the Articles of War relative to the punishment of enlisted men for military offenses committed in time of peace; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also introduced a bill (S. 3099) to remove the charge of desertion against Thomas Morrison; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also (by request) introduced a bill (S. 3100) to remove the charge of desertion against Peter J. Soly; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. GRAY introduced a bill (S. 3101) granting a pension to Anne Rodgers Macomb; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 3102) for the relief of John W. Eckles; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. ALLISON introduced a bill (S. 3103) for the erection of a public building at Creston, Iowa; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

He also introduced a bill (S. 3104) granting relief to Samuel D. Harper; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. BLODGETT introduced a bill (S. 3105) for the relief of Edwin M. Hart; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. BARBOUR introduced a bill (S. 3106) appropriating $50,000 for improving the public road in Alexander County, State of Virginia, connecting the Chain, Aqueduct, and Long bridges and running in front of the Arlington national cemetery; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

He also introduced a bill (S. 3107) for the relief of the trustees of St. Paul's Protestant Episcopal Church at Norfolk, Va.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also (by request) introduced a bill (S. 3108) authorizing the Pneumatic Gun Carriage and Power Company to build a siege gun and disappearing siege carriage for the War Department; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. TURPIE introduced a bill (S. 3109) to provide for the erection of a factory for the making, casting, and finishing of field guns and other ordnance at the Government arsenal grounds at Indianapolis, Ind.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. GORMAN introduced a bill (S. 3110) for the relief of Henry W. Freedley, late captain Third Infantry and assistant quartermaster United States Army; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. EVARTS introduced a bill (S. 3111) to permit manufacture and printing of securities for foreign governments, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. MOODY introduced a bill (S. 3112) for the relief of George Falkenburg; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Select Committee on Indian Depredations.

Mr. COCKRELL introduced a bill (S. 3113) for the relief of Henry M. Cannon, administrator of the estate of James Cannon, deceased; which was twice read by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

F. A. PATTERSON.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no further morning business, that order is closed.

Mr. HAWLEY. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill (S. 2644) for the recognition of F. A. Patterson as a captain of the Third West Virginia Cavalry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Calendar under Rule VIII being in order, the Senator from Connecticut moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 2644) for the recognition of F. A. Patterson as captain of the Third West Virginia Cavalry.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It directs the Secretary of War to recognize F. A. Patterson as a captain of the Third West Virginia Cavalry from the 25th of November, 1862, the date of his commission, to the date of muster out of his regiment, and that his name be inscribed and taken up as such captain on the rolls of the regiment.

Mr. HAWLEY. This is the unanimous report of the Committee on Military Affairs. If any one desires it, the report can be read; it is brief.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (H. R. 3732) to accept and ratify an agreement made by the Sisseton and Wahpeton bands of Sioux Indians, and to grant a right of way for the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul Railway through the Lake Traverse reservation, in South Dakota; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolution; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (S. 280) to amend an act to incorporate the Georgetown and Tennytown Railway Company of the District of Columbia, which became a law August 10, A. D. 1888;

A bill (S. 308) to ascertain the amount due the Pottawatomie Indians of Michigan and Indiana;

A bill (S. 1297) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the construction of a wagon and foot-passenger bridge across the Mississippi River at or near Lyons, Iowa;"

A bill (S. 1858) to shorten the terms of imprisonment in the jail and in the work-house of the District of Columbia on account of good conduct during confinement;

A bill (S. 1905) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the building of a railroad bridge at Fort Smith, in the State of Arkansas," approved July 19, 1888;

A bill (H. R. 5682) to amend an act entitled "An act to constitute Columbus, Ohio, a port of delivery, and to extend the provisions of the act of June 10, 1880, entitled 'An act to amend the statutes in relation to the immediate transportation of dutiable goods, and for other purposes,' to said port of Columbus, Ohio," approved February 9, 1889; and

A joint resolution (S. R. 63) providing for taking the census in Alaska.

JOHN N. QUACKENBUSH.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, the other day a bill which was on the Calendar under the eighth rule was passed over without prejudice after debate, on the request of the present occupant of the Chair [Mr. INGALLS] that it should stand over a day or two so that it might be further examined. I think I correctly understood the Senator from Kansas now occupying the Chair afterwards to intimate that he did not desire further to debate the question. It is Order of Business 321. I understand the honorable Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BUTLER], who has charge of that bill, is to be absent after to-day, and I therefore ask that that bill may be taken up now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts calls for the consideration of Order of Business 321. It having been passed over without prejudice under Rule VIII, its consideration is in order. It will be read by its title.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 113) relating to the status of a certain commander in the Navy, and to correct the same.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill has been read as it now stands, the amendments of the Committee on Naval Affairs having been agreed to when the bill was formerly under discussion.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the report be read. My recollection is that that bill has been here before in the Senate.

Mr. BUTLER. I will inform the Senator from Missouri that the bill passed at the last session of Congress.

Mr. COCKRELL. I think it did pass, and I did not know it was to come up this morning. If I am not mistaken it is a bill which I submitted a few feeble remarks upon at that time.

Mr. BUTLER. Very vigorous remarks, Mr. President.

Mr. COCKRELL. If that be so, I would like to submit them again for the consideration of the Senate.

Mr. BUTLER. As far as I am concerned, I should be delighted to hear the Senator.

Mr. COCKRELL. I did not know that the bill was to be called up this morning, and I hope it will be deferred until such time as I can have an opportunity to look up the papers.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill being called up under Rule VIII, it can be passed over if the Senator from Missouri desires.

Mr. BUTLER. The bill was up for consideration on a former occasion, and, as was stated by the Senator from Massachusetts, passed over at the suggestion of the present occupant of the chair. As I understand, the objections which existed at that time have been removed, so far as the Senator from Kansas is concerned. I shall have to leave the Senate Chamber after to-day, to be absent for a week or ten days, and I should be very glad indeed if the bill could be considered and disposed of to-day. The report has been read, and the Senator from Missouri is familiar with the facts.

Mr. COCKRELL. I am not familiar with each case; there are so many of these cases where men are under a cloud for drunkenness and who have been dismissed from the service and are trying to get back into it.

Mr. HOAR. I wish the Senator would allow me to make a practical statement before he makes his objection, and then I think he will waive it.

Mr. COCKRELL. I will hear it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. A Senator is entitled to speak once. Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, this bill has been thoroughly discussed, I think, as many as a half dozen times in the Senate. In every instance after explanation, for there were some things about it which required such explanation, it has been passed by very large majorities. It passed both Houses last year and failed to receive attention of the President in time to be signed.

Mr. COCKRELL. Did it pass the last House? I thought it was reported adversely there.

Mr. HOAR. No, it passed the House and went to the President, as I understand. The Senator from South Carolina knows about that. I understand it passed both Houses and failed to reach the President in time for examination. I ask the Senator from South Carolina if I am not correct in understanding that this bill passed both Houses and failed to reach the President in time for his signature?

Mr. BUTLER. I do not know about that. I know the bill has passed the Senate several times.

Mr. HOAR. It has passed both Houses, I am sure.

Mr. COCKRELL. I am under the impression that it was reported adversely in the House of Representatives.

Mr. HOAR. I am quite sure of my statement.

Mr. BUTLER. I think the Senator is correct.

Mr. HOAR. I am quite sure it passed both Houses, but failed to reach the President in time to be examined and signed.

Mr. President, it is merely to correct a mistake. This man was dismissed from the Navy for six years, and he was entitled to go back under his sentence, but by a mistake another officer was nominated, and by a subsequent decision of the Supreme Court that nomination operated as a removal. President Grant wrote a letter certifying that it was not so intended; the then Secretary of the Navy wrote a letter certifying that it was not so intended; and now, as I understand, this bill merely restores him to his place without any past pay, and puts him merely on the retired-list.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President, let me suggest for the information of the Senator from Missouri that this bill has been before the Committee on Naval Affairs and repeatedly reported favorably by that committee. When the bill first came before the committee it provided for this man's restoration to the active-list of the Navy as a commander. The committee decided that that was not proper in view of the record which he had made, not altogether a very savory one, we all admit; but there were some facts connected with his history during the war which entitled him to certain consideration. I believe it was universally acknowledged that he had a very gallant career in the Navy during the war, and out of consideration for that the committee finally agreed to report this bill, recommending that he be restored to the Navy with the rank of commander, his pay to begin from the date of the approval of the act. That bill has been reported to my knowledge twice from the Committee on Naval Affairs in that shape, so that I think the Senator from Missouri will conclude to let the bill pass. The matter has been considered very fully by the Committee on Naval Affairs, and I believe without dissent this report was made and the passage of the bill recommended.

Mr. HOAR. If the Senator still desires time to look into this matter, I shall not for one move to take the bill up notwithstanding his objection, but agree to let it stand until the return of the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let it be passed over without prejudice, retaining its place, until the return of the Senator from South Carolina, and we can then consider it.

Mr. HOAR. I will waive the request for present consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over without prejudice, retaining its place on the Calendar. The next bill on the Calendar will be reported.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT STOCKTON, CAL.

The bill (S. 1590) to provide for the construction of a public building in the city of Stockton, Cal., was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to acquire, by purchase, condemnation, or otherwise, a site, and cause to be erected thereon a suitable building, including fire-proof vaults, heating and ventilating apparatus, elevators, and approaches, for the use and accommodation of the United States post-office, land office, and other Government offices, in the city of Stockton and State of California, the cost of said site and building, including said vaults, heating and ventilating apparatus, elevators, and approaches, complete, not to exceed the sum of $85,000, which said sum of $85,000 is hereby appropriated for said said purpose, out of any moneys in the United States Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Proposals for the sale of land suitable for said site shall be invited by public advertisement in one or more of the newspapers of said city of largest circulation for at least twenty days prior to the date specified in said advertisement for the opening of said proposals.

Proposals made in response to said advertisement shall be addressed and mailed to the Secretary of the Treasury, who shall then cause the said proposed sites, and such others as he may think proper to designate, to be examined in person by an agent of the Treasury Department, who shall make written report to said Secretary of the results of said examination, and of his recommendation thereon, and the reasons therefor, which shall be accompanied by the original proposals and all maps, plats, and statements which shall have come into his possession relating to the said proposed sites.

If, upon consideration of said report and accompanying papers, the Secretary of the Treasury shall deem further investigation necessary, he may appoint a commission of not more than three persons, one of whom shall be an officer of the Treasury Department, which commission shall also examine the said proposed sites, and such others as the Secretary of the Treasury may designate, and grant such hearings in relation thereto as they shall deem necessary; and said commission shall, within thirty days after such examination, make to the Secretary of the Treasury written report of their conclusion in the premises, accompanied by all statements, maps, plats, or documents taken by or submitted to them, in like manner as hereinbefore provided in regard to the proceedings of said agent of the Treasury Department; and the Secretary of the Treasury shall thereupon finally determine the location of the building to be erected.

The compensation of said commissioners shall be fixed by the Secretary of the Treasury, but the same shall not exceed $6 per day and actual traveling expenses; Provided, however, That the member of said commission appointed from the Treasury Department shall be paid only his actual traveling expenses.

So much of the appropriation herein made as may be necessary to defray the expenses of advertising for proposals, actual traveling expenses of said agent, and the compensation and actual traveling expenses of said commissioners, and other expenses incident to the selection of the site, and for necessary survey thereof shall be immediately available.

So much of said appropriation as may be necessary for the preparation of sketch-plans, drawings, specifications, and detailed estimates for the building by the Supervising Architect of the Treasury Department shall be available immediately upon the approval by the Secretary of the Treasury of such site.

No money appropriated by this act shall be available, except as hereinbefore provided, until a valid title to the site for said building shall be vested in the United States, nor until the State of California shall have ceded to the United States exclusive jurisdiction over the same, during the time the United States shall be or remain the owner thereof, for all purposes except the administration of the criminal laws of said State and the service of civil process therein.

After the said site shall have been paid for and the sketch-plans and detailed estimates for the building shall have been prepared by the Supervising Architect and approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, the Secretary of the Interior, and the Postmaster-General, the balance of said appropriation shall be available for the erection and completion of the building, including fire-proof vaults, heating and ventilating apparatus, elevators, and approaches.

The building shall be unexposed to danger from fire by an open space of at least 40 feet on each side, including streets and alleys.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PUBLIC BUILDING IN YELLOWSTONE NATIONAL PARK.

The bill (S. 488) to provide for the erection of a public building for the use and accommodation of the post-office at Mammoth Hot Springs, in the Yellowstone National Park, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to acquire, by purchase, condemnation, or otherwise, a site, and cause to be erected thereon a suitable building, including fire-proof vaults, heating and ventilating apparatus, elevators and approaches, for the use and accommodation of the United States post-office and other Government offices, at Mammoth Hot Springs, Yellowstone National Park, the cost of said site and building, including said vaults, heating and ventilating apparatus, elevators, and approaches, complete, not to exceed the sum of $10,000, which said sum of $10,000 is hereby appropriated for said purpose, out of any moneys in the United States Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Proposals for the sale of land suitable for said site shall be invited by public advertisement in one or more of the newspapers of said city of largest circulation for at least 20 days prior to the date specified in said advertisement for the opening of said proposals.

Proposals made in response to said advertisement shall be addressed and mailed to the Secretary of the Treasury, who shall then cause the said proposed sites, and such others as he may think proper to designate, to be examined in person by an agent of the Treasury Department, who shall make written report to said Secretary of the results of said examination, and of his recommendation thereon, and the reasons therefor, which shall be accompanied by the original proposals and all maps, plats, and statements which shall have come into his possession relating to the said proposed sites.

If, upon consideration of said report and accompanying papers, the Secretary of the Treasury shall deem further investigation necessary, he may appoint a commission of not more than three persons, one of whom shall be an officer of the Treasury Department, which commission shall also examine the said proposed sites, and such others as the Secretary of the Treasury may designate, and grant such hearings in relation thereto as they shall deem necessary; and said commission shall, within thirty days after such examination, make to the Secretary of the Treasury written report of their conclusions in the premises, accompanied by all statements, maps, plats, or documents taken by or submitted to them, in like manner as hereinbefore provided in regard to the proceedings of said agent of the Treasury Department; and the Secretary of the Treasury shall thereupon finally determine the location of the building to be erected.

The compensation of said commissioners shall be fixed by the Secretary of the Treasury, but the same shall not exceed $6 per day and actual traveling expenses; Provided, however, That the member of said commission appointed from the Treasury Department shall be paid only his actual traveling expenses.

So much of the appropriation herein made as may be necessary to defray the expenses of advertising for proposals, actual traveling expenses of said agent, and the compensation and actual traveling expenses of said commissioners, and other expenses incident to the selection of the site, and for necessary survey thereof shall be immediately available.

So much of said appropriation as may be necessary for the preparation of sketch-plans, drawings, specifications, and detailed estimates for the building by the Supervising Architect of the Treasury Department shall be available immediately upon the approval by the Secretary of the Treasury of such site.

No money appropriated by this act shall be available, except as hereinbefore provided, until a valid title to the site for said building shall be vested in the United States.

After the said site shall have been paid for and the sketch-plans and detailed estimates for the building shall have been prepared by the Supervising Architect and approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, the Secretary of the Interior, and the Postmaster-General, the balance of said appropriation shall be available for the erection and completion of the building, including fire-proof vaults, heating and ventilating apparatus, elevators, and approaches.

The building shall be unexposed to danger from fire by an open space of at least 40 feet on each side, including streets and alleys.

Mr. SHERMAN. There is no city at these springs.

Mr. VEST. That is a mistake.

Mr. SHERMAN. I supposed so. There is no land there but Government land.

Mr. VEST. That is a mistake of the clerk of the committee, and I can very well see how it happened. The clerk of the committee, in adapting the new form of these bills to this measure, overlooked the fact that this is a public reservation. The original bill ought to be passed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Shall the bill be recommitted?

Mr. VEST. No, let the bill as originally introduced be read.

Mr. REAGAN. I inquire how many people are there?

Mr. SHERMAN. I have no doubt a small building is necessary for the postal service there, but it is all a Government reservation.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Shall the amendment of the committee be disagreed to and the bill read in its original form?

Mr. VEST. Yes, sir.

Mr. SHERMAN. Read the original bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read the original bill.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior and the Postmaster-General shall select a suitable site at Mammoth Hot Springs, in the Yellowstone National Park, and shall cause to be erected thereon a suitable building for the use and accommodation of the post-office at that place. The said building shall not exceed in cost the sum of $10,000, and the plans and specifications therefor shall be furnished by the Supervising Architect of the Treasury, and shall be approved by the Secretary of the Interior and the Postmaster-General before the work on said building shall be commenced. The site selected shall leave the building unexposed to danger from fire by an open space of at least 100 feet; and the sum of $10,000 is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this act.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment of the committee to strike out and insert will be disagreed to.

Mr. REAGAN. Is there a report accompanying the bill?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is no report.

Mr. REAGAN. Is any one prepared to tell us how many people live there and what sort of a town this is?

Mr. VEST. I can give the Senator the information. It is no town at all. It is a post-office for the Mammoth Hot Springs in the Yellowstone National Park. There is a large amount of mail received during the summer months by tourists, and there is no building suitable for a post-office. There is a postmaster and has been for some years, but the business has been conducted in a frame shanty where there is no security from fire and no accommodation. This simply provides a small building for the Government to be used as a post-office, which is absolutely necessary.

Mr. REAGAN. I only wish to say that in my opinion this is carrying the public-building business a long way.

Mr. VEST. The building is to cost only $10,000. It could not be built for any less.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT PAWTUCKET, R. I.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1230) for the erection of a public building in the city of Pawtucket, R. I.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to acquire, by purchase, condemnation, or otherwise, a site, and cause to be erected thereon a suitable building, including fire-proof vaults, heating and ventilating apparatus, elevators, and approaches, for the use and accommodation of the United States post-office and other Government offices, in the city of Pawtucket and State of Rhode Island, the cost of said site and building, including said vaults, heating and ventilating apparatus, elevators, and approaches, complete, not to exceed the sum of $100,000, which said sum of $100,000 is hereby appropriated for said purpose, out of any moneys in the United States Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Proposals for the sale of land suitable for said site shall be invited by public advertisement in one or more of the newspapers of said city of largest circulation for at least twenty days prior to the date specified in said advertisement for the opening of said proposals.

Proposals made in response to said advertisement shall be addressed and mailed to the Secretary of the Treasury, who shall then cause the said proposed sites, and such others as he may think proper to designate, to be examined in person by an agent of the Treasury Department, who shall make written report to said Secretary of the results of said examination, and of his recommendation thereon, and the reasons therefor, which shall be accompanied by the original proposals and all maps, plats, and statements which shall have come into his possession relating to the said proposed sites.

If, upon consideration of said report and accompanying papers, the Secretary of the Treasury shall deem further investigation necessary, he may appoint a commission of not more than three persons, one of whom shall be an officer of the Treasury Department, which commission shall also examine the said proposed sites, and such others as the Secretary of the Treasury may designate, and grant such hearings in relation thereto as they shall deem necessary; and said commission shall, within thirty days after such examination, make to the Secretary of the Treasury written report of their conclusion in the premises, accompanied by all statements, maps, plats, or documents taken by or submitted to them, in like manner as hereinbefore provided in regard to the proceedings of said agent of the Treasury Department; and the Secretary of the Treasury shall thereupon finally determine the location of the building to be erected.

The compensation of said commissioners shall be fixed by the Secretary of the Treasury, but the same shall not exceed $6 per day and actual traveling expenses: Provided, however, That the member of said commission appointed from the Treasury Department shall be paid only his actual traveling expenses.

So much of the appropriation herein made as may be necessary to defray the expenses of advertising for proposals, actual traveling expenses of said agent, and the compensation and actual traveling expenses of said commissioners, and other expenses incident to the selection of the site, and for necessary survey thereof shall be immediately available.

So much of said appropriation as may be necessary for the preparation of sketch-plans, drawings, specifications, and detailed estimates for the building by the Supervising Architect of the Treasury Department shall be available immediately upon the approval by the Secretary of the Treasury of such site.

No money appropriated by this act shall be available, except as hereinbefore provided, until a valid title to the site for said building shall be vested in the United States, nor until the State of Rhode Island shall have ceded to the United States exclusive jurisdiction over the same, during the time the United States shall be or remain the owner thereof, for all purposes except the administration of the criminal laws of said State and the service of civil process therein.

After the said site shall have been paid for and the sketch-plans and detailed estimates for the building shall have been prepared by the Supervising Architect and approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, the Secretary of the Interior, and the Postmaster-General, the balance of said appropriation shall be available for the erection and completion of the building, including fire-proof vaults, heating and ventilating apparatus, elevators, and approaches.

The building shall be unexposed to danger from fire by an open space of at least 40 feet on each side, including streets and alleys.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT WOONSOCKET, R. I.

The bill (S. 1231) for the erection of a public building in the city of Woonsocket, R. I., was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to acquire, by purchase, condemnation, or otherwise, a site, and cause to be erected thereon a suitable building, including fire-proof vaults, heating and ventilating apparatus, elevators, and approaches, for the use and accommodation of the United States post-office and other Government offices, in the city of Woonsocket and State of Rhode Island, the cost of said site and building, including said vaults, heating and ventilating apparatus, elevators, and approaches, complete, not to exceed the sum of $100,000, which said sum of $100,000 is hereby appropriated for said purpose, out of any moneys in the United States Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Proposals for the sale of land suitable for said site shall be invited by public advertisement in one or more of the newspapers of said city of largest circulation for at least twenty days prior to the date specified in said advertisement for the opening of said proposals.

Proposals made in response to said advertisement shall be addressed and mailed to the Secretary of the Treasury, who shall then cause the said proposed sites, and such others as he may think proper to designate, to be examined in person by an agent of the Treasury Department, who shall make written report to said Secretary of the results of said examination, and of his recommendation thereon, and the reasons therefor, which shall be accompanied by the original proposals and all maps, plats, and statements which shall have come into his possession relating to the said proposed sites.

If, upon consideration of said report and accompanying papers, the Secretary of the Treasury shall deem further investigation necessary, he may appoint a commission of not more than three persons, one of whom shall be an officer of the Treasury Department, which commission shall also examine the said proposed sites, and such others as the Secretary of the Treasury may designate, and grant such hearings in relation thereto as they shall deem necessary; and said commission shall, within thirty days after such examination, make to the Secretary of the Treasury written report of their conclusion in the premises, accompanied by all statements, maps, plats, or documents taken by or submitted to them, in like manner as hereinbefore provided in regard to the proceedings of said agent of the Treasury Department; and the Secretary of the Treasury shall thereupon finally determine the location of the building to be erected.

The compensation of said commissioners shall be fixed by the Secretary of the Treasury, but the same shall not exceed $6 per day and actual traveling expenses: Provided, however, That the member of said commission appointed from the Treasury Department shall be paid only his actual traveling expenses.

So much of the appropriation herein made as may be necessary to defray the expenses of advertising for proposals, actual traveling expenses of said agent, and the compensation and actual traveling expenses of said commissioners, and other expenses incident to the selection of the site, and for necessary survey thereof shall be immediately available.

So much of said appropriation as may be necessary for the preparation of sketch-plans, drawings, specifications, and detailed estimates for the building by the Supervising Architect of the Treasury Department shall be available immediately upon the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury of such site.

No money appropriated by this act shall be available, except as hereinbefore provided, until a valid title to the site for said building shall be vested in the United States, nor until the State of Rhode Island shall have ceded to the United States exclusive jurisdiction over the same, during the time the United States shall be or remain the owner thereof, for all purposes except the administration of the criminal laws of said State and the service of civil process therein.

After the said site shall have been paid for and the sketch-plans and detailed estimates for the building shall have been prepared by the Supervising Architect and approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, the Secretary of the Interior rior, and the Postmaster-General, the balance of said appropriation shall be available for the erection and completion of the building, including fire-proof vaults, heating and ventilating apparatus, elevators, and approaches.

The building shall be unexposed to danger from fire by an open space of at least 40 feet on each side, including streets and alleys.

The building shall be unexposed to danger from fire by an open space of at least 40 feet on each side, including streets and alleys.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I should like to make one observation upon this bill for the consideration of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds. I do not know whether any of the members of that committee are within hearing; that is, I do not see any. We pass a great number of these bills every year with certain restrictions and conditions and provisions in them. I do not see why there should not be a general law that in all public buildings to be erected by the United States for certain purposes, post-offices and court-houses, these conditions should be applicable to the cases of all public buildings, and then each bill would save several pages and several minutes of time by simply referring to that general law, just as I believe the Committee on Commerce have done in regard to bridge bills, instead of spending a great deal of time in the Senate in reading long bills.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

AID TO COMMON SCHOOLS.

Mr. EUSTIS. As the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] is present, I ask unanimous consent of the Senate at this time to correct a statement which he made yesterday in a debate with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE] when the Blair bill was under consideration. The Senator from Massachusetts used the following language:

In the State of Louisiana and in some of the other States there were laws which made it a penal offense, punishable by imprisonment in the penitentiary, for a white man to associate on terms of equality with a black man.

This is a statement made by a Senator to the Senate and to the country that in the State of Louisiana there is a penal law making it a penitentiary offense for a white man to associate on terms of equality with a black man. I desire to inform the Senator from Massachusetts that so far as the State of Louisiana is concerned there is not the slightest foundation for any such assertion; that there is no necessity, and never has been, why Louisiana should enact such a preposterous law as that. What would such a law as that mean, making it a punishable offense for a white man to associate on terms of equality with a black man? The State of Louisiana does not undertake to regulate the personal and social relations of its citizens. If a white man wants to associate on terms of equality with a black man, even if he should come from Massachusetts, he has a perfect right to do so without incurring the displeasure of the State of Louisiana or without apprehending that he will be furnished with an involuntary residence in the penitentiary.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me to state—
The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will pause one moment. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Senate resumes the consideration of the unfinished business, being the bill (S. 185) to aid in the establishment and temporary support of common schools.

Mr. EUSTIS. The Blair bill was under consideration when the Senator from Massachusetts made the statement to which I am referring.

Mr. BLAIR. I yield to the Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator from Louisiana allow me to state to him that he misunderstood—

Mr. EUSTIS. In one moment.

Mr. HOAR. I made no such statement as the Senator has indicated, if I understand it.

Mr. EUSTIS. I have read the statement as reported as having been made by the Senator. The statement is that—

In the State of Louisiana and in some of the other States there were laws which made it a penal offense, punishable by imprisonment in the penitentiary, for a white man to associate on terms of equality with a black man.

That is the language as I find it in the RECORD.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator stated that I spoke of it in the present tense. I spoke of the laws which were passed about 1867.

Mr. EUSTIS. I say there is not the slightest ground for any assertion that in 1867 or in any other year there ever was such an absurd or preposterous law enacted by the Legislature of Louisiana.

The Senator went on, not satisfied with that extraordinary statement in regard to the statute law of Louisiana, to use the following language:

There was another law, which I remember, which provided that any man of color who was found for a certain time out of work might be sold—

That is the language—

might be sold by a decree of any local magistrate, and that in the sale his former master should have the preference in the purchase; in other words, providing that American citizens, as these men had become by their freedom and by the Constitution, be sold at auction for the crime of being out of work.

Now, Mr. President, I would like to ask the Senator from Massachusetts whether he thinks for a moment that he can discover in the statutes of Massachusetts any such law as he says he remembers to have existed in the State of Louisiana? I could not imagine for a moment to what the Senator alluded. I knew that his criticisms were directed against the Democratic Legislature of Louisiana of 1866 and 1867, of which I was a member, but I have never yet heard a Republican Senator criticize any legislation of the State of Louisiana unless that legislation was enacted by a Democratic Legislature. We have upon the statute-books a compilation of the most infamous laws that have ever disgraced civilization, which were enacted in the State of Louisiana by Republican Legislatures, but I have yet to hear a Republican Senator rise in this Chamber and criticize the legislation of that period.

I say that there is no such law as the Senator undertakes to recite. The law to which the Senator from Massachusetts refers was never in the constitutional sense enacted. I have examined the statutes of Louisiana this morning. I have examined the journals of the house and the senate of that period, and there is no such law upon the statute-book of Louisiana. Therefore, there being no such law, such a law could never be enforced or executed.

We have vagrant laws in the State of Louisiana as they exist in all the other States of the Union. The amendment to the vagrant law which was proposed in 1867 is not, in my judgment, any more severe, any more harsh, than is the existing vagrant law of Massachusetts to-day. Under the law of Massachusetts, a person who has no visible means of support can be arrested as a vagrant, he can be taken before a magistrate, and that magistrate can condemn him to six months' labor, it may be in the jail, or it may be in the work-house, or it may be in some industrial institution, but that is the power which the magistrate in Massachusetts has. The change which was proposed in the vagrant law of the State of Louisiana in 1867 was that if a person had no visible means of support and was in a legal sense a vagrant his services could be hired to a planter for one year or he could be required to labor on the public works, roads, and levees.

It may be simply a difference of opinion; but I know that the negro, accustomed, as he is, to agricultural pursuits—for many a negro statesman has been taken from the plow and elevated to distinction in Louisiana by Republican influences—would much prefer to be condemned to work for a year upon a plantation than to be confined in some institution in the State of Massachusetts for six months. But as to any pretense that any law of Louisiana authorizes the sale of a person, as the Senator from Massachusetts stated yesterday—and I challenge him to produce that law—it only illustrates with what recklessness, with what destitution of sense of responsibility, Republican Senators indulge in statements here when they speak of Southern affairs. They seem to be restrained by nothing, Mr. President, not even by facts; for here are two statements made by the Senator from Massachusetts, a gentleman who generally speaks seriously when he addresses the Senate, that there were two laws in the State of Louisiana, one making it a penitentiary offense for a white man to associate on terms of equality with a negro, the other that a negro is put upon the block and sold as a slave, when there is not the slightest foundation of truthfulness of either assertion.

MR. HOAR. I have sent for the documents which will show whether the statement I made in regard to Louisiana was or was not correct. I think the Senator from Louisiana, probably by an accidental slip of the tongue, stated in the beginning of his speech that I had spoken of the laws to which I referred as present existing laws. He goes on to say there is no such law, and so on, and that I had said there is such a statute. What happened exactly was this: The Senator from Mississippi charged, with expressions of great severity, on the Republicans who were in power in this country in 1870, the imposition of a certain restraint upon the people of his State which he said bound their hands as with manacles, and I stated in reply that that policy was occasioned by certain laws which were passed in several of the Southern States in regard to the relation between white men and negroes, the logical result of which would have been to reduce the negroes to the condition of slaves.

I added, what I presume the Senator from Louisiana did not read, that I mentioned those laws not in the least by way of reproach, that they were passed immediately after the relation of slave and master had ceased to exist, when the passions of the war were still excited, and that I should not think of reciting by way of reproach the condition of slavery itself any more than those laws; but I alluded to them as the exciting cause for the policy which was adopted in Congress, and I said—speaking from memory, of course—that in the State of Louisiana and in several other Southern States these laws had passed, and I shall be able, as soon as I can get the documents from the Library, to state the exact laws which were passed by the Andrew Johnson Legislatures, as we called them in 1867, in the Southern States, and if I erred in anything it was in memory in regard to the particular State where the law was passed, though I think not. I shall have the laws here in a moment. But here is the vagrant act of Mississippi of November 24, 1865. Now, do not let any Senator get up and say I have made any attack on any State this morning; I am simply stating what I spoke of in the way which I stated yesterday.

That all freedmen, free negroes, and mulattoes in this State over the age of eighteen years found on the second Monday in January, 1866, or thereafter, with no lawful employment or business, or found unlawfully assembling themselves together, either in the day or night time, and all white persons so assembling with freedmen, free negroes, or mulattoes, or—

Now, here is the clause to which I specially alluded; this is the Mississippi statute, the Senator will understand—or usually associating with freedmen, free negroes, or mulattoes, on terms of equality, or living in adultery or fornication with a freed woman, free negro, or mulatto, shall be deemed vagrants, and on conviction thereof shall be fined in the sum of not exceeding, in the case of a freedman, free negro, or mulatto, $50, and a white man $200, and imprisoned at the discretion of the court.

There is the exact language; first, that any white man who associates on terms of equality with negroes is to be punished and imprisoned at the discretion of the court; second, that any negro who is without lawful employment or business shall be deemed a vagrant person; and section 3 gives jurisdiction to all justices of the peace, mayors, and aldermen to try this offense.

Section 5 provides:

That all fines and forfeitures collected under the provisions of this act shall be paid into the county treasury for general county purposes; and in case any freedman, free negro, or mulatto shall fail for five days after the imposition of any fine or forfeiture upon him or her for violations of any of the provisions of this act to pay the same, that it shall be, and is hereby made, the duty of the sheriff of the proper county to hire out said freedman, free negro, or mulatto to any person who will for the shortest period of service pay said fine or for elation and all costs: Provided, A preference shall be given to the employer, if there be one, in which case the employer shall be entitled to deduct and retain the amount so paid from the wages of such freedman, free negro, or mulatto then due or to become due.

That is the law to which I referred, and, if my recollection is not at fault, the same law in substance was passed in several States, and I said I did not suppose that anybody in any State would think of passing or voting for such laws now. What I have just read does not relate to the Senator's State. It is possible, in speaking of a matter which I investigated ten or twelve years ago, I may have been at fault in regard to the particular State to which I referred, but I think not. I think the substance of that law will be found in the statutes of Louisiana, but the Senator will see when I get the documents.

MR. BLAIR. While the Senate is waiting for the documents I will occupy the time of the Senate with a remark or two that should be made at some time while this bill is pending.

It will be remembered that during the colloquy between the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE] and the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] last night there was some disagreement between them as to the actual character of the fundamental conditions upon which Mississippi and other Southern States were readmitted to the Union under the process or so-called process of reconstruction. The Senator from Mississippi understands, and I have always understood it to be so, that the Southern States were readmitted to their full practical relations with the Union upon this fundamental condition among others, that manhood suffrage should be forever universal in those States regardless of any educational qualification; that that condition was at the time thought necessary to be imposed, as otherwise, when those States were in the Union and were at full liberty to amend their constitutions and to regulate their domestic affairs like other States, unless this condition existed and bound the constitutions of the States, the action of the States, there might be a disposition, to say the least, to place the colored population in substantially its old position so far as the exercise of the suffrage was concerned.

I have always understood that to be so. It may be that the Senator from Massachusetts is right in his legal construction of those fundamental conditions, but I do not think that public sentiment at the North, if it would indeed at the South, would justify any change in the conditions of suffrage wherever universal or manhood suffrage has been conferred, at all events in those States where the colored population or the unlettered population of any color is numerous. It was, I think, at the time believed to be necessary, in order to insure suffrage to the masses of men of either color that this condition should be imposed. The Southern States were understood to be aristocracies, and not republics, and the masses were unable, as we believed, intelligently to exercise the right of suffrage; and yet, unless universal suffrage was given at the time, there never would be likely to come a period when it would be generally exercised by the volition of what would be the ruling power in those States. Therefore, this condition was made, and along with it, in order to insure the public safety, of necessity went the proposition that the means of education from some source should be furnished to the people at large.

There is no such thing possible as the continuance of Republican Government through the exercise of universal suffrage unless the conditions of intelligence be available to those who are to do the voting. And so the nation, in imposing this condition that suffrage should be universal to the colored man and to the white man in the Southern States, necessarily took upon itself the obligation, if otherwise the voter was not afforded the privilege of making himself intelligent, to furnish those means; and I have always considered that, if there were any other ground upon which this bill failed to rest on an impregnable foundation, yet nevertheless in this act of the nation in the restoration of the Southern States to their normal relation to the Union, in the imposition of this condition of universal suffrage, we necessarily contracted with the individual who is to be the voter to give him the opportunity to qualify himself to exercise the right of suffrage. Otherwise we provided for ignorant suffrage wherever it existed, and in so doing we provided for the destruction, not alone of the States, but of the nation itself as well.

It would have been most grievous and ruinous self-stultification not to have undertaken to guaranty under the provisions of the Constitution intelligence to that suffrage which we made universal. So, then, if the construction of these fundamental conditions contended for by the Senator from Mississippi be the right one, it is impossible to escape from the obligation of the nation to enact this bill into law, for no human being can stand up in the face of these demonstrations of mountain ranges of illiteracy existing all through that portion of the country, and admitted on this floor by her intelligent Senators, and fail to see that the public safety of the whole country demands that from some source there come the means of education to the children of the South. As I have observed before, this is no question of relation between the States, but it is a question of the relation of the National Government and of the people of the whole country to the child of the coming generation, who is to be the republic in the State and the republic in the nation at large.

In regard to the construction suggested by the Senator from Massachusetts, even if it be right in theory, public sentiment will never consent that the suffrage be taken from the negro or from the poor white man, however ignorant he may be, in the Southern States, and I do not believe that the nation would permit the States generally to impose these conditions of educational qualification upon the people of the States. I do not believe in the educational qualification of the State of Massachusetts. It is tolerable there, because along with that qualification she furnishes in the greatest abundance the means of education. But I do not believe that the human being in a Republic can be deprived of the means of asserting his will at the ballot-box simply because he has lacked early opportunities of education or for any reason has failed to acquire the power to read and write.

The public safety requires that the means of education be universally diffused, and if the nation or the State does this, then there can never be any danger from an ignorant suffrage, for ignorant suffrage will either not exist at all or it will be of such an infinitesimal quantity as to produce no appreciable or injurious result in the decision of the people upon public questions.

One thing further should be said with reference to a suggestion made by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER] and by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB] to the effect that the funds proposed to be distributed under the provisions of this bill ought to go to the colored population of the South in the larger proportion of their illiteracy as compared with the white population in the South. All that objection seems to be based upon a misapprehension. Amendments to this bill have been moved in former Congresses based upon that idea. They tell us that we make use of the larger illiteracy of the colored people in order to carry to certain States the larger amount of money, and that then, when this money is in the State, we distribute it to the white child as well as to the colored child in equal proportions, treating every child as being under the equal or equivalent necessity of education. That, sir, is true, but along with that provision it should be remembered that we impose the condition that all the funds of the State be distributed upon the same principle, and that when this money from the national Treasury and the money from the State treasury are united, they are one fund and you can not distinguish the national dollar from the State dollar. It is all one fund and is by virtue of the provisions of this bill so to be treated and to be distributed among the children who are to be educated, giving to all an equality of privilege without regard to color, race, or previous condition of the parent in life.

When this amendment was moved, in the year 1886, of course the friends of the bill as it now stands had occasion to examine and to analyze it, and I desire to read to the Senate and to place upon the records of the Senate at this time, in reply to the suggestions in the speeches of the two gentlemen whom I have named, and I might also include the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. FAULKNER], statements showing the inequality to the child of the country where the two races exist which would result from the adoption of the amendment which was suggested.

When that amendment was under consideration I made a calculation as to these results, which I will now read to the Senate. After describing the provisions of the bill to secure absolute equality in the distribution of State and national funds all as one fund to those who require education, I proceeded to say (and these remarks are to be found on page 1951 of the RECORD, volume 17, part 2, of the Forty-ninth Congress, first session):

With this as the existing status, the amendment comes in and provides that in the State of Alabama this money shall be so distributed as to give as often as there is $1 given to a white child—not to the white race, but to the white child, who is in need of education just like the colored child, no more, no less—as often as $1 is given to him, to give to the colored child $3; in Arkansas as often as the white child will get $1 the colored child will get $3; in Delaware as often as the white child gets $1 the colored child gets $5; in Florida as often as the white child gets $1 the colored child gets $3; in Georgia as often as the white child gets $1 the colored child gets $3; in Kentucky the white child $1 and the colored child $4; in Louisiana the white child $1, the colored child $4; in Maryland the white child $1, the colored child $5; in Mississippi the white child $1, the colored child $4; in Missouri the white child $1, the colored child $5; in North Carolina the white child $1, the colored child $2; in South Carolina the white child $1, the colored child $3; in Tennessee the white child $1, the colored child $4; in Texas the white child $1, the colored child $4; in Virginia the white child $1, the colored child $4, and in West Virginia the white child $1, and the colored child $3, thus establishing by the terms of the bill a most apparent and, as I think, a most hurtful discrimination, and a discrimination especially hurtful to the colored race themselves.

Its inevitable tendency must be to excite prejudices toward them on the part of their white associates, people double their own in number, owning already at least nine-tenths, probably ninety-five-one-hundredths, I presume even more than 95 per cent. of the property, and a prejudice exceedingly hurtful to them during the period of the administration of the bill. Then, further, we should instruct them by this national action that the negro is our special ward, and relieve them from the pressure of the duty upon their consciences to take care of the colored men who are with them, who are their laborers and their producers.

We make them the wards of the nation in a more complete sense than is the Indian to-day, and when, at the end of eight years, this bill ceases to operate, the appropriations under it having run down to a merely nominal sum when we consider the increase of population, so that its failure to be distributed the year following will be felt as inconsiderable, the school system meanwhile having improved, wealth increased, and the States become more able to bear taxation—at that period of time we should leave this colored race entirely dependent, while of property they would have made themselves comparatively no large increase. At present they are wholly unable to bear taxation and do not bear the taxation which affords them anything like a twentieth of the school facilities which they enjoy. Where then would be the colored race; and shall we not have instructed the white race that they have no interest in them?

In this connection I desire to insert the table which is to be found on page 1952 of the same volume, "Distribution in the States where there are white and colored schools."

Distribution in the States where there are white and colored schools of their proportion of $7,000,000 to white and colored children of school age in such States, in the proportion that the number of white and colored persons ten years of age and upward who can not write bear to each other by the census of 1880.

Some question has arisen as to the position of the President of the United States with reference to this bill. The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER] stated, in substance, that his approval was somewhat perfunctory and really amounted to but a casual and unemphatic utterance. When this bill was under discussion in 1886, the last time when it was discussed during the term of the President as a member of the Senate, he made a very emphatic speech of about two pages of the RECORD, which commences on page 1989 of the same volume from which I have been reading, and I desire to read a few extracts from these utterances of the President as bearing upon this bill as it stands, as it was then voted for, and as it then passed, and every provision of which has been the subject-matter of discussion in the Senate during the present session:

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, as I said yesterday, it is not my purpose to enter upon a general discussion of this bill. It is unusual legislation. It is suggested and defended upon the ground that in some of the States of the Union there is a dangerous degree of illiteracy. It is agreed on all hands that the great bulk of that illiteracy is found in the colored race of the South, a race that recently came out of a condition of slavery.

The fact that this race was so long held under slavery, a condition of which ignorance was an incident, appeals strongly to the philanthropy and patriotism of the people of all the States to assist in relieving it from that weight of inherited ignorance. It is agreed that in all the old free States the people have both the ability and the disposition to provide for every child of school age a suitable common-school education. If all the States were now in the condition in which the free States are such legislation as this could not be justified.

Some portions of what the President then said I desire to call to the attention of the Senate now. He says, referring to the bill:

It was understood then in framing this legislation that it should be so framed that the bulk of the money would go to the Southern States. It was not thought best to make an arbitrary assignment of so much to each State. At the last Congress it was concluded that it was not best to put this apportionment upon a basis, suggested I believe by myself, that its distribution should be limited to those States that had 10 per cent. or more of illiteracy in their population.

That suggestion was made, that amendment was moved. It was unanimously opposed by many of the States because it seemed to be in-vidious and wholly unnecessary, when illiteracy was to be found everywhere and is equally evil in itself wherever it exists, and ought to be removed, to select particular States because they were more unfortunate than others and to place them in that condition permanently upon the statute-books of the country. That was almost by pretty general consent the view then taken in the Senate, and the amendment was rejected.

The committee and those who were friendly to this measure therefore sought some general expression as to the division which would accomplish the purpose of giving the larger part of this donation to the Southern States, and yet would seem to be general in its application. After much discussion the basis of this bill was agreed upon, that this fund should be distributed to the States in the proportion that the illiterates in the several States over ten years of age bore to the whole number of such illiterates in the United States. Mr. President, no one supposed that this would be a just basis of distribution in the State to the respective school districts. It was not suggested as a just basis for such distribution. It was suggested wholly for the purpose which I have mentioned.

Now, sir, for one I do not believe in making this legislation a subject of jugglery. I do not believe that we should attempt any tricks for political advantage. I do not believe that we should so legislate as to hold out to our colored friends in the South a promise of substantial aid in the way of education and yet cumber the bill with such unjust limitations as will make its defeat certain, or if it should ever become a law that its kindly execution in the States would be impossible. If we are unfriendly to this general system let us frankly and openly say so, let us kill this bill in an open way; but I object to any suggestion that shall tend to so cumber the bill with conditions as that its kindly and efficient operation in the States shall be absolutely prevented.

Mr. President, I am one of those who feel that the colored race in the South since the war has been subjected to indignities, cruelties, outrages, and a repression of rights such as find no parallel in the history of civilization. I have read with horror the authenticated stories of the cruelties which have been visited upon this docile, kindly, and inoffensive race. I have looked hopefully in the old times to the forcible intervention of the General Government in their defense. I have thought that it might be possible under that stringent legislation which Congress adopted, by the forcible intervention of the Federal authority to protect them in those rights of which they were so cruelly deprived. But I have ceased to have faith in the possibility of that intervention in their behalf, constituted as this Government is with its complex organization of Federal and State governments, independent within certain limitations. In the States and in the tribunals which they establish and in the venue where the offenses are committed, crimes against the colored people must be tried. Of necessity the successful vindication of the rights of these people falls unless there is a sentiment in the locality where the offenses are to be examined into and punished that reprobates and condemns them.

Mr. President, for one I believe there exists to-day in the Southern States a condition of things that sadly needs to be remedied. I do not see how it can be remedied by the intervention of the Federal authority. I look to two great agencies alone to elevate the colored race to an equality with their white brethren who dwell with them, to secure them in their just rights and to equip them properly, as we must admit they have not hitherto been equipped, to understand the duties of citizenship and to discharge those duties intelligently: I look to two great agencies, the force of public opinion and education within the States. I believe there are no other efficient agencies. I believe the only method by which the colored man can be led up to a manhood which will claim and which will not be denied full and equal rights as a citizen in all the Southern States is this process of education.

Holding these views, Mr. President, I am sincerely solicitous that Federal aid shall be extended to the States in such a way that the kindly impulses of that increasing body of Southern men who show a kindly disposition toward the elevation of the colored man shall be recognized and encouraged.

In attempting to extend this aid there were just two methods open to us. One was to have the General Government administer its own fund in the States—that is, to set up a Federal system of common schools in the States, to appoint the teachers and superintendents and pay them, and to bring into those schools the colored population of the States. But this process is not now advocated by any one here. I do not think there is a Senator on either side of this Chamber who suggests that course as a solution of this trouble.

Then what was the other method? That we should use the State governments and the institutions which they have established and the officers they have selected as the instrumentalities for the distribution and application of this gift from the General Government. It is agreed, I believe, on all hands that this is the course we must pursue. It is the most promising course. It is a course that makes these Southern States and their officers the instruments of this work, that brings them into kindly relations with the race that is to be educated, that stimulates and suggests and promotes the best impulses of their own heart, and is calculated to develop a like kindly feeling in the race in whose behalf their efforts are expended.

These things settled, that we are to use the States as the agency of this distribution, what follows? The fundamental mistake that has run through the arguments of the Senator from Iowa and the Senator from Maine is this: They speak of this question as if we were dealing alone with that fund which is contributed by the General Government. That is the error. All of their arguments are upon the idea that we are simply dealing with our own fund and directing its application. That is a mistake. By the conditions of this bill imposed upon the States we deal with the State revenue; we say, "You shall have no benefit of this bill unless you do thus and so with your own revenue."

I agree, if we were dealing simply with our own fund, and if we were leaving the States perfectly free to deal with theirs as they chose, then it is a matter entirely within our own discretion as to how we will have this fund expended. But why have we dealt or assumed to deal with State school funds and taxes by imposing conditions upon their use? Simply because we desire not to make this an independent system, but to ingraft it upon or rather to use it as a stimulus to the school systems of the several States. We say to every State that gets the benefit of it, "You shall distribute the fund you raise for education equally without any discrimination between the white and black children of your State who are of school age." That is the limitation we put upon them. That is asserted in the bill over and over again. I happen to know with what carelessness and with what pains and after what consultations these stringent provisions were inserted in this bill. As the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Hoar] suggests to me, we require a system that shall offer school advantages to all the children, and that shall offer those advantages equally to every child without reference to race or color.

When we require that of a State, have we not solemnly declared that that is the true basis upon which to put education in the State? If that confession is not involved, why that requirement? I say it is our proclamation that the ideal school system, the ideal and perfect relation between the white and black races of the South is to be sought and is to be attained when every man, black and white, is secured in the full and equal enjoyment of equal civil rights, and as to education when every child, black and white, of the school age is secured equal privileges in the common schools of the State. These provisions are our declaration that that is the ideal and perfect relation of the races; and it is. Who will ask more?

Mr. President, I have been always the friend of the colored man. I have received him into my camp when a fugitive from his master he sought liberty under the flag; I have fed him; and in a very humble way under the greater instrumentalities that were over me and under God, whose guiding hand was over all, have in small measure contributed to his emancipation; and no one anywhere rejoiced in it more than I. I have seen some illustrations of his hungering for education that touched my heart deeply and filled my eyes with tears. In the camps of the war I have seen an aged colored man who had fled from slavery to the safe refuge of a Union camp, who had toiled all day in the employment to which he was assigned, and when the camp was left in silence and soldiers slept, when only the tread of the sentinel broke the stillness of the night, I have seen that poor colored man, past three-score, prone upon the ground with his head toward a camp-fire and the spelling-book that he had gotten from the chaplain before him, toilsomely learning the lessons of childhood. I know his eagerness to be taught; and his need is too serious and too important a question to be the subject of legislative jugglery.

Now, Mr. President, having admitted by the bill that this condition of equality which the bill requires as a condition before the State can receive any benefit in the ideal condition, shall we incorporate in this bill any amendment that disturbs that condition and that equality?

Alluding to the inequality in the division of the money, giving a colored child so much more of this specific money coming from the national Treasury than the white child gets, the present President said:

Mr. President, when we say to the State "you shall thus equally, per capita"—for that is what it amounts to—"distribute your revenue among the children of the State of school age without reference to race or color," we come under a most solemn obligation to use ours in the same way.

He was speaking upon this same proposed amendment, and he said in conclusion:

Let me say, in conclusion, that if we accept the States in the South as the agencies through which this benefaction is to be distributed, then we must put our gift upon that basis that will secure, as I have said before, the co-operation, the hearty and kindly co-operation of the people of those States in executing it; and if they shall fail of this high trust, if being put upon trial before this nation and the world in dealing as trustees with the most sacred trust that ever was confided to a people—if they shall fail to respond faithfully to the trust, then if I shall remain in this Senate Chamber the moment that is developed, for one, I shall vote to withhold any further appropriation. If they discharge the high trust with fidelity and enthusiasm, then I believe we shall have entered upon a peaceful and a magnificent solution of the gravest problem that confronts us to-day.

I desire to place these sentiments of the President on record in this debate and to say that I believe he holds them with the same earnestness to-day as when he uttered them here in the Senate Chamber.

I desire to make a part of the record certain citations contrasting the influence of intelligence and ignorance upon society. They have been collected with a great deal of care, published on a former occasion, but not as yet made available in this debate. They are carefully elaborated facts exhibiting the effect of education upon society in almost all its great elements and interests. I will ask that they be inserted.

The citations are as follows:

CITATIONS CONTRASTING THE INFLUENCE OF INTELLIGENCE AND IGNORANCE UPON SOCIETY.

I have collected citations from high authorities, and historical illustrations, bearing upon the necessity of education, especially in a republic. They are from authors of other nations as well as our own. Many of them are of high literary merit. They are good reading. I will read a few of them. Before proceeding to do so, I wish to make one statement as bearing on the interests of education in our Southern States by reason of the liberation of the colored people. The historical example nearest our shores, that of the liberation of the blacks in the British West India colonies, might well be adduced, and should be instructive to us. There the British Government, more considerate, perhaps, than our own, gave pecuniary compensation to the extent of about $10,000,000, if I remember correctly, to the owners of the emancipated slaves. No provision, however, was made for the education and the elevation of the colored people. They have had freedom so far as it could exist under the British constitution, and they have had degeneracy and demoralization accompanying it. Without wasting time to depict the causes of the social condition and industrial condition of those people, I will state one fact which is significant of almost everything else that could be said, that such is the social degradation of that people that most social ties are disregarded, poverty is universal, and over 60 per cent. of the annual income of the population is illegitimate. Let me quote from the American Cyclopaedia, volume 15, page 17:

"The government measure was brought forward April 23, 1833. It proposed an apprenticeship of twelve years for the slaves, and to pay out of their earnings to the masters the sum of £15,000,000. The friends of emancipation remonstrated against these features of the plan, and it was finally modified by a reduction of the term of apprenticeship to six years and a provision to pay the masters £20,000,000 out of the national treasury. The bill passed the House of Commons August 7, the House of Lords August 29, and received the royal assent August 28, 1833. The day fixed for emancipation was August 1, 1834, and it was left optional with the local legislatures respectively to adopt or reject the system of apprenticeship. Antigua and Bermuda rejected, while the other islands adopted the system. The apprenticeship system did not work well."

It ought to be known and is known that like causes produce like effects. It is well known to those who have taken pains to be informed by evidence coming to them, though they may never have been in the Southern States themselves, and I have some personal observation that has instructed me, so that I am convinced of the fact, that the general condition of the colored population in a large geographic proportion of the South is growing worse rather than better. The colored population when disciplined by their former legal status were more industriously inclined than the youthful colored population that is now growing up. The colored youths are now not so quiet and good-natured and easily managed and tractable a race of men as the Northern people are inclined to think. I believe that they are becoming demoralized, an idle, thriftless population, with a tendency to violence, and likely to become a source of as much danger to the United States as a population like this described in Jamaica can be. They increase more rapidly from natural causes than does the white population, and there is danger if they be neglected.

By the last census it is shown that they increase 7 per cent. more rapidly than does the white population of the whole country from immigration and births combined. While increasing in numbers, in my belief they are not improving in condition. In twenty-five years from now this Southern colored population, unless something is done to restrain, improve, and elevate them, are quite likely to be a source of violence and of turmoil in this country. Those who think otherwise, I imagine will find themselves profoundly mistaken, and it is well enough to be instructed by historical examples when they exist.

I can not take the time of the Senate a great length in reading the citations from eminent men which I have made; but I will read a few in regard to national education. Macaulay in his speech on education uses this language:

NATIONAL EDUCATION.

"This, then, in my argument. It is the duty of government to protect our persons and property from danger. The gross ignorance of the common people is a principal cause of danger to our persons and property. Therefore it is the duty of the government to take care that the common people shall not be grossly ignorant."—Macaulay's Speech on Education.

"The education of the people is not only a means, but the best means, of obtaining that which all allow to be a chief end of government."—Ibid.

Another great authority says:

"When we see government measures, which are excellent in themselves, fail from the opposition of an ignorant people, we at first feel irritated against the senseless multitude; but when we come to reflect, when we observe that this opposition might have been easily foreseen, and that the government, in proud exercise of authority, has taken no steps to prepare the minds of the people, to dissipate their prejudices, to conciliate their confidence—our indignation is transferred from the ignorant and deceived people to its disdainful leaders."—Jeremy Bentham's Works, volume 1, page 568.

Let me give further citations:

Ignorance causes poverty—

By diminishing productive capacity, and therefore wealth.

"Intelligence is a most powerful factor in industrial efficiency. The intelligent is more useful than the unintelligent laborer: (a) Because he requires a far shorter apprenticeship. * * * (b) Because he can do his work with little or no superintendence. * * * (c) Because he is less wasteful of materials. * * * (d) Because he readily learns to use machinery, however delicate or intricate."—Walker's Political Economy, pages 52, 53.

By hindering improvement.

"In some parts of the country the ignorance of the people of almost everything beyond their huts and potatoes and pigs, their entire lack of practical sense and judgment, and of that energetic and progressive spirit which advancement in education is apt to bring, has hitherto been one of the greatest hindrances to the progress of the country. With this ignorance there has often been coupled superstition, and a tendency to indolence, increasing poverty, distress, and discontent."—The Irish Question, by King, pages 283, 284.

II. Ignorance causes poverty.

Illustration from Scotland and Ireland in 1800-1810:

"I am persuaded that the extreme profligacy, improvidence, and misery which are so prevalent among the laboring classes in many countries are chiefly to be ascribed to the want of education. In proof of this we need only cast our eyes on the condition of the Irish, compared with that of the peasantry in Scotland. Among the former you behold nothing but beggary, wretchedness, and sloth; in Scotland, on the contrary, under the disadvantages of a worse climate and more unproductive soil, a degree of decency and comfort, the fruit of sobriety and industry, are conspicuous among the lower classes. And to what is this disparity in their situation to be ascribed, except to the influence of education? In Ireland the education of the poor is miserably neglected; very few of them can read, and they grow up in a total ignorance of what it most befits a rational creature to understand; while in Scotland the establishment of free schools in every parish, an essential branch of the ecclesiastical constitution of the country, brings the means of instruction within the reach of the poorest, who are there inured to decency, industry, and order."—Robert Hall's Works, I, 201, 202. (1810.)

II. Ignorance causes demoralization.

Illustration from Rome:

"But we must look beyond the political institutions of Rome, and seek in her social condition the primary causes of the fall of the republic. * * * There was no union of the different classes of society in common interests and sympathies, nor any adequate gradation of classes to balance their relative forces. Without a middle class, industrious, orderly, progressive, and contented, society was [divided] broadly into the rich and the poor. And in the later days of the republic both were corrupted. The rich became more covetous and grasping."

"The poorer classes were no less demoralized as citizens and depositaries of political power. Pauperized by bounties of grain; corrupted by bribery; debased by barbarous and brutal entertainments; tainted with the vices of slavery; without regulating industry; disunited by the confusion of many nationalities; and unsettled by incessant wars and revolutions, they were wanting in all the elements of a sound democracy."—May's Democracy in Europe, I, pages 225, 226, 227.

Illustration from France:

"The peasants, suffering from want and resenting the oppression of the feudal lords, rose in great numbers in different parts of France (in 1353); they burned many castles, murdered the owners, and committed the most frightful outrages upon women and children. * * * and in later times the like passions were to be revealed in excess no less monstrous and unnatural."—May's Democracy in Europe, II, pages 91, 92. See also Taine's Ancient Regime, pages 374-380.

II. 4. Poverty causes demoralization.

Illustration from Rome:

"The mind itself can scarcely comprehend the wide range of the mischief—how constant poverty and insult long endured, as the natural portion of a degraded caste, bear with them to the sufferers something yet worse than pain, whether of the body or the feelings; how they dull the understanding and poison the morals; how ignorance and ill-treatment combined are the parents of universal suspicion; how from oppression is produced habitual cowardice, breaking out when occasion offers into merciless cruelty; how slaves become naturally liars; how they, whose condition denies them all noble enjoyments, and to whom looking forward is only despair, plunge themselves with a brute's recklessness, into the lowest sensual pleasures; how the domestic circle itself, the last sanctuary of human virtue, becomes at length corrupted, and in the place of natural affection and parental care there is to be seen only selfishness and unkindness, and no other anxiety on the part of parents for their children than that they may, by fraud or by violence, prey in their turn upon that society which they have found their bitterest enemy. Evils like these long working in the heart of a nation render their own cure impossible; a revolution may execute judgment on one generation, and that perhaps the very one which was beginning to see and to repent of its inherited sins, but it can not restore life to the morally dead; and its ill success, as if in this line of evils no curse should be wanting, is pleaded by other oppressors as a defense of their own iniquity and a reason for perpetuating it forever."—Arnold's Rome, Volume II, page 19.

Illustration from the No-Popery Riots of 1780:

"I do not know that I could find in all history a stronger proof [than the No-Popery Riots of 1780] of the proposition that the ignorance of the common people makes the property, the limbs, the lives of all classes insecure. Without the shadow of a grievance, at the summons of a madman, a hundred thousand people rise in insurrection. During a whole week there is anarchy in the greatest and wealthiest of European cities, etc."

"The cause was the ignorance of a population which had been suffered, in the neighborhood of palaces, theaters, temples, to grow up as rude and stupid as any tribe of tattooed cannibals in New Zealand—I might say as any drove of beasts in Smithfield market."—Macaulay's Speech on Education.

II c. A discouraged person is useless and may become desperate.

His industrial power is small.

"A fifth reason for the higher efficiency of the laborers of one class or nation than of another is found in greater cheerfulness and hopefulness, growing out of higher self-respect and social ambition and a more direct and certain interest in the product of industry."—Walker's Political Economy, page 54.

"Fear is far less potent than hope in evoking the energies of mind or body, while efforts made under the influence of the former passion are far more exhausting than those made under the influence of the latter."—Ibid.

Discouragement may result in desperation [French revolution].

"The feeling of hatred [in the French peasant at the time of the revolution, 1791] was become too strong to be appeased, because here too it was mixed with intense suspicion, the result inevitably of suffering and ignorance, and nothing but the overthrow of those against whom it was directed could have satisfied it."—Arnold's Lectures on Modern History, page 390.

III. Ignorance causes immorality—

Because its opposite, knowledge, elevates.

"But to return to the moral good which results from the acquisition of knowledge; it is chiefly this, that by multiplying the mental resources it has a tendency to exalt the character, and in some measure to correct and subdue the taste for gross sensuality."—Hall's Works, I, 200.

Results of ignorance.

"Where education has been entirely neglected or improperly managed, we see the worst passions ruling with uncontrolled and incessant sway. Good sense degenerates into craft, and anger rankles into malignity. Restraint, which is thought most salutary, comes too late, and the most judicious admonitions are urged in vain."—Dr. S. Parr.

III. Ignorance causes immorality.

Ignorance vs. Education in Switzerland.

"Neither in Switzerland nor in other countries do we find ignorance and poverty united with high moral qualities. In some of the cantons, however, where education is diffused and industry and commerce have become sources of wealth, the people are contented and happy."—Dean's History of Civilization, VI, 108, 109.

Injuries from ignorance.

"The laboring class, for instance, will have no mobility [if uneducated], will be in the power of the employer, will have no hope of bettering its condition of life by change of place, will be given to low pleasures. Crime and ignorance go together, and the prospect for the children of such a class is dark indeed. For the industry, morals, loyalty, and quiet of this class, for the safety of all classes some kind of education is necessary."—Woolsey's Political Science, I, page 227.

III. 2. Immorality causes degeneration. National degeneration comes from loss of character.

"But this political ruin [of the Roman Empire] was an effect of a moral ruin, not a first cause; and a nation that has lost its character must decay politically until some new condition of the world quickens it again into life."—Woolsey's Political Science, II, page 601.

Fruits of long-continued moral advance.

"There are certain moral fruits so conspicuous in the history of civilization that no pessimist can dispute them. That the long, slow movements in society which have been tending with steady purpose and sure result to establish order and the reign of equal laws; to extinguish slavery; to break oppression of every form; to mitigate the barbarities of war, and to put restraints upon it; to diminish human suffering; to help the unfortunate, and to lift the debased; to cultivate the cosmopolitan sentiment and the spirit of co-operation among men—that the movements which bear this ripening fruitage are moral movements, it is impossible to deny."—J. N. Leonard, in Popular Science Monthly, XI, 549.

IV. Ignorance causes error in judgment and conduct—

By opening the people to evil influences.

"Nothing in reality renders legitimate government so insecure as extreme ignorance in the people. It is this which yields them an easy prey to seduction, makes them the victims of prejudices and false alarms, and so ferocious withal that their interference in a time of public commotion is more to be dreaded than the eruption of a volcano."—Robert Hall's Works, Volume I, page 203.

By deceiving him as to his interest in his neighbor.

"The less instructed a man is the more he is led to separate his interests from those of his fellows. The more enlightened he is the more distinctly will he perceive the union of his personal with the general interest."—Jeremy Bentham's Works, Volume I, page 537.

ILLUSTRATIONS OF BENEFITS FROM EDUCATION.

Athenian intelligence.

"Mitford was right enough when he assumed that an English county meeting reached the very height of political ignorance, only he should not have thence leaped to a similar conclusion as to the assembled people of Athens. We suspect that the average Athenian citizen was in political intelligence, above the average English member of Parliament. It was this concentration of all power in an aggregate of which every citizen formed a part which is the distinguishing characteristic of true Greek democracy."—Freeman's Athenian Democracy, pages 146, 147.

The education of a lower class in Turkey.

"In the vigorous age of the Ottoman Government the Turks were themselves excluded from all civil and military honors, and a servile class, an artificial people, was raised by the discipline of education to obey, to conquer, and to command."—Gibbon's Rome, chapter LXV.

Scotland vs. Ireland.

"We have two nations closely connected, inhabiting the same island, sprung from the same blood, speaking the same language, governed by the same sovereign and the same legislature, holding essentially the same religious faith, having the same allies and the same enemies. Of these two nations one was, a hundred and fifty years ago, as respects opulence and civilization, in the highest rank among European communities; the other in the lowest rank. The opulent and highly civilized nation leaves the education of the people to free competition. In the poor and half-barbarous nation the education of the people is undertaken by the state. The result is that the first are last and the last first. The common people of Scotland—it is in vain to disguise the truth—have passed the common people of England. Free competition, tried with every advantage, has produced effects of which, as the Congressional Union tells us, we ought to be ashamed, and which must lower us in the opinion of every intelligent foreigner. State education, tried under every disadvantage, has produced an improvement to which it would be difficult to find a parallel in any age or country."—Macaulay's Speech on Education.

WASHINGTON'S VIEWS.

Some views of education entertained by Washington are indicated by provisions inserted in his last will; e. g., he provided that the slaves who had not attained their majority at the time when they were to receive their freedom, in accordance with his direction, should be taught to read and write and be brought up to some useful occupation. He bequeathed $4,000 for the education of orphans and the children of the poor in the academy at Alexandria. He gave property for the endowment of a university which should draw to it the youth of all sections, thus preventing their being sent abroad to their injury, and reconciling local prejudices and antagonisms through friendly associations.

What I have read from Robert Hall was written at the beginning of the present century in reference to a status then existing in Ireland; but it is proper to say that of late years the educational privileges of Ireland have been very greatly improved, as in fact they have been in every European country, until to-day the truth is that many of them are passing our own country in the vigilance and intensity of the effort which they are making to educate their own people. Indeed, there is great danger that they will pass us, and pass us before a great while, in the matter of industrial skill, because of the greater attention they are giving to the matter, perhaps growing out of the fact that they have recently discovered the great need of the education which they want, and are making correspondingly vigorous efforts to overcome the prevailing ignorance. They also find that American production paying higher wages is nevertheless competing with them in their own markets, and likely to do so more extensively hereafter in all the markets of the world, and unless their people become educated they will soon be without employment or that form of employment giving productions for exportation to the other and increasing markets of the world.

In other words, the skilled labor of Europe, based upon general education, is coming more and more in competition with the skilled labor of America, and our superior intelligence will not much longer tell to our advantage in this direction.

I close my citations from the writings of eminent men and illustrations drawn from the history of the race by quotations from two remarkable addresses delivered before the National Education Assembly, held at Ocean Grove, from the 9th to the 12th, four days, inclusive, in August, 1885.

Over sixty addresses were delivered on that occasion by American educators and some others interested in the subject. Thousands of people were in attendance, and all religious denominations nearly were represented.

Rev. J. C. Hartzell, D. D., who was the active organizer of the great work, has published the proceedings in a volume, which I hesitate not to say is of greater practical value than any other work upon the subject of education and its cognate problems as they exist and require to be dealt with to-day than any, and I had almost said all, other sources of information accessible of which I have knowledge. The book is an encyclopedia in one volume, carefully indexed, and treats exhaustively of the following topics: Education and man's improvement; Illiteracy in the United States; National aid to common schools; The negro in America; Illiteracy, wealth, pauperism, and crime; The American Indian problem; The American Mormon problem; Education in the South since the war; Christ in American education; Tables; Illiterate and educational status United States, 1880.

On that occasion, among the sixty, Hon. John Eaton, Commissioner of Education, delivered an address, which was full of meat, and of good meat, too. I wish to read a little from it, not his comments and philosophy, but statements of fact. I read from page 49:

"But we must not pause here; we must look at the reverse side. New England to-day has but 1 college student, male and female, to every 107 families; whereas at the end of the first twenty-three years of New England history, or when there were 20,000 souls in the settlements, there was 1 university graduate to every 40 families. May we not say that hence came such wisdom in laying the foundation of those States? When will the educated classes anywhere attain the same relation to the whole body of the people?"

"But against this attendance upon the public schools there is the non-attendance of 5,754,750. Allowing that these odd hundred thousand are in private schools that are not reported, there remain 5,000,000 of children of school age untaught. To furnish these sittings in buildings, at the usual average of $20 per sitting, would cost a hundred million in money; to furnish them teachers would require an increase of 30,000 to the teaching corps, and a single year's preparation of these teachers at the average rate in New York would cost $10,000,000.

"The pay of these 30,000 additional teachers for one year of ten months, at the rate of $32 a month, which is about the average throughout the country, would amount to $9,600,000. Add to this the items for preparation and school-house sittings necessary for these non-attending school children, and you have the grand total required for the first year of $12,000,000.

"There has been an attempt to raise a laugh at the proposition of the honorable Senator Logan to appropriate $60,000,000 in aid of education, but I give you here figures which can not be invalidated, showing that his proposition falls $60,000,000 short of the sum which would be required to furnish for a single year all our school children now without school sittings and teachers."

Referring to myself he says:

"Mr. Senator BLAIR, in his examination of this point in his recent speech, considering that Texas has a school period of only six years, states that if the school life were properly lengthened in that and other States the number reported without school accommodations and without teachers would be increased by three millions.

"In our cities we are accustomed to expect the best teachers, best school-houses, best methods, and best supervision; but laws making attendance obligatory are wanting in more than half of the States, and, on an average, two-fifths of the children are not enrolled in the schools. Here are forced upon us the terrible problems encountered in older civilizations and more dense populations."

"The fifteen States and the District of Columbia where slavery prevailed, having a legal white school population of 3,399,961, had 2,215,674 enrolled in schools, and with a colored school population of 1,893,357 had 784,900 enrolled, and expended $12,475,044. This money, it should be remembered, is divided pro rata, without distinction of color, in all States excepting Kentucky and Delaware. In the former State the colored people have had for educational purposes the benefit only of the income of the tax upon their own property and polls and specified fines and forfeitures. By an act of the last Legislature, however, provision was made for submitting to the people the question of adding a two-mill tax upon property for educational purposes, uniting this and the amount from the previous provisions for education, and distributing the whole pro rata per capita. In Delaware, $2,500 are now appropriated for the colored schools. What has thus been accomplished in these States for education may be taken as a pledge of what they will do."

"To which great agency can you assign the additional burden of educating these illiterates? To the family? How many families of the most cultured and best conditioned are unable to educate their children as in former times or as they desire; and among those colored people the least supplied with schools, how widely is the family a minus quantity as a factor in promoting the improvement of the young? Shall we then look to the church for the light to overcome the darkness? How inadequate are the resources of the church in the South to supply sittings and preachers for the special function of declaring the gospel! How generally are they in debt! What appeals are they compelled to make to their friends in other quarters! Shall we turn, then, thirdly, to the States, already impoverished and loaded with taxes and embarrassed by questions of repudiation? In reply, let me invite attention to the fact that the taxable real and personal property reported for assessment in those States is given in round numbers as $3,379,000,000, while the real and personal property in New York and New Jersey alone is worth nearly an equal amount, or $3,292,000,000.

"What would the people of these two States say to an additional assessment on their property sufficient to erect all the additional school-houses and supply all the teachers for the instruction of the millions of illiterates in the South? All are familiar with the sensitiveness in the several Northern States to the assessment of any additional tax for education or any other purpose, and there the total wealth as assessed is reported as $13,065,000,000 or nearly ten billions more than in the South.

"It should be remembered, in addition to the short period in which schools are already taught in the South, that there are 2,702,835 children of age not enrolled for instruction. Take another comparison: Charleston, S. C., now levies a tax of 3 mills on a dollar; but to furnish the children of that State a fair approach to the instruction given those in Massachusetts would require a tax on the property of the State of nearly 3 cents on the dollar. This the friends of education in Massachusetts or any other State would hesitate to propose in their own case.

"I must not pause to elaborate these points; but supposing (1) that the labor of an illiterate is increased in value 25 per cent. by teaching him to read and write, 50 per cent. by fairly educating him, and 75 per cent. by giving him a thorough training, and (2) that the average value of the labor of illiterates is the same as the average wages paid employees in manufacturing, then the following computations give sound conclusions.

"By the census of 1880, the number of persons of twenty-one years and upward in the Southern States who were unable to write was 2,984,387. If 75 per cent. of them should be taught to read and write, it would increase the value of the labor of 2,238,290 persons 25 per cent. The present value of their labor is, approximately, $248 a year each. The increase of value would be $62 a year per capita, a total of $138,773,980. If 15 per cent. of the illiterates should be fairly educated, it would increase the value of the labor of 447,658 persons 50 per cent., or from $248 to $372 a year each. The total of this annual increase would be $55,509,592. If the remaining 10 per cent. of illiterates should have the value of their labor increased 75 per cent. by being thoroughly trained, the industrial value of 298,439 persons would be raised from $248 to $434 a year each, a total of $55,509,554. By adding the three totals just given, it is seen that the increase which would come to the industrial value of illiterates in the Southern States would be, were they educated as indicated, $241,792,220 a year.

"A regular computation may be made for the entire country. The average annual wages paid by manufacturers is $345. The number of persons twenty-one and over unable to write is 4,204,263. By teaching 75 per cent. of these to read and write, the labor of 3,153,227 individuals is increased in value from $345 to $434 a year, a total gain of $271,181,302 each year. The gain which would come from educating 15 per cent. (630,654) of the illiterates so that their labor would be increased 50 per cent. in value would be $108,787,815. The same amount would be gained by so training the remaining 10 per cent. of illiterates that their labor would be of 75 per cent. more value; and the total annual profit to the country by the conversion of illiterate into educated labor would be, according to the premises assumed as a basis of computation, $488,757,022 a year.

"Need I go further to indicate that education is a most profitable investment for both labor and capital?"

"Omitting any reference to the influence of illiteracy during minority or any bearing of the illiteracy of the female adults, the late census shows us that there is a great army of 1,870,216 adult males or voters who can not write, an army nearly double that ever in the field during the late deplorable civil war. You will certainly excuse me from any delineation of the horrors of the devastation that might follow their united and concentrated efforts against the peace and order of society.

"I simply call your attention to what may be the injurious effect of their silent action at the polls. The members of our respective political parties believe in the rightness of their principles and seek to make their appeal to the reason and consciences of the people; but the figures disclose the alarming fact that in eleven States these illiterate voters outnumbered the votes cast in the last Presidential election by either of the political parties. Thus, should they unite under any strong, impassioned, successful leader, they would have absolute control of legislation and offices in those States and of the election of twenty-two members of the United States Senate."

I turn now to the address of Col. Dexter A. Hawkins, of New York City, a prominent lawyer and publicist, as undoubtedly members of the Senate are aware now deceased, after a life of honor to his country and of usefulness to the world. His address was upon the relations of education to wealth and morality, pauperism and crime. I read only the most pertinent extracts, and would refer any one interested to the entire address.

"In 1870 the Commissioner of Education at Washington sent out a series of carefully drawn, comprehensive, and searching questions to the great centers of labor in all parts of the United States. These centers were so selected as to represent every kind of labor, from the rudest and simplest up to the most skilled. The object of the questions was to determine the relative productiveness of literate and illiterate labor. I have tabulated, reduced, and generalized the answers so as to get at what seems to me to be the average result over the whole country. This investigation—one of the most interesting ever made—brought clearly to light the following facts:

"1. That an average free common-school education, such as is provided in all the States where the free common school has become a permanent institution, adds 50 per cent. to the productive power of the laborer considered as a mere productive machine.

"2. That the average academical education adds 100 per cent.

"3. That the average collegiate or university education adds from 200 to 300 per cent. to his average annual productive capacity, to say nothing of the vast increase to his manliness, to his godlikeness.

"By the census of 1880 we had in the United State 4,204,262 illiterate adults—white and colored."

I read his computation in order to show that independent and most intelligent observers and thinkers arrive at substantially the same conclusion:

"Now, putting their labor at the minimum annual value of $100 each (which is far below the average even for farm labor, while the wages of manufacturing operatives, including 15 per cent. of women and children, as shown by the census of 1880, average in the whole country $345 each per year), and the annual loss to these persons from the lack of at least a common-school education would be $50 each. This, for the whole number of 4,211,362, is $210,000,000 per year—a sum twice as large as the entire annual expenditure for public education in the whole country. This sum—$210,000,000—is a clear annual loss, not only to these illiterates, but to the community, by reason of their illiteracy."

"The late slave States complain of their inability to pay the expenses of free common schools, and they raised for public education in 1880 only $10,883,104. The amount of the annual loss in these same States from their labor being illiterate is at least $150,000,000. The extra productiveness of their laborers over what it is now would—had they been educated, as in Maine and New Hampshire—establish and support free common schools nine months in the year for every child of the school age within their borders, and leave a surplus sufficient to support a free academy in every county and a free college in every State."

A supposition of that kind is very well, but it must be remembered that an existing state of things, where it is the status of human beings, can be changed but by long and expensive processes, and that to change the actual condition in these Southern States to the degree of literacy which exists in the ones referred to must necessarily be the work of ten or fifteen or twenty years.

A careful examination of the census of England, Scotland, Ireland, and of the several countries on the continent of Europe indicates that, other things being equal, pauperism is in the inverse ratio of the education of the mass of the people; that is, as education increases pauperism decreases, and as education decreases pauperism increases.

In the Grand Duchy of Baden they put into operation in 1854 a rigorous system of universal compulsory education in the elementary branches. The effect in seven years upon pauperism was to reduce it 25 per cent. It has been calculated by statisticians and students of social science that 95 per cent. of pauperism could be exterminated by universal compulsory education in the elementary branches of knowledge and industry.

"In Pennsylvania, Ohio, and Illinois, three great central States where self-support is not difficult, one in ten of the illiterates is a pauper, while of the rest of the population only one in three hundred is a pauper. In other words, in those three great central States a given number of children suffered to grow up in ignorance produce thirty times as many paupers as when given an average common-school education.

"In 1870 a special investigation was made, in fifteen States, of the inmates, to the number of 7,388, of almshouses and infirmaries. Of these, 4,327, or nearly 59 per cent., could not read and write; while in those fifteen States the average percentage of illiterates was only 6 per cent. of the whole population. From this 6 per cent. came that 59 per cent. of the paupers; or, to express it in another form, a given number of children in those fifteen States, suffered to grow up in ignorance, produced twenty-two times as many paupers as the same number of children would if given a fair common-school education.

"Similar results may be obtained from the census of almost every country in Europe or America.

"We may safely say, then, that it is a general law of modern civilization that an illiterate person is from twenty to thirty times as liable to become a pauper and a charge upon the public as is one with an average common-school education; and that the annual loss to the community, in the United States, in the productive power of the illiterates, and in the support of paupers made such by illiteracy, is nearly, if not quite, equal to the amount that would be required to establish and maintain a free common school the year round in every State in the Union, amply sufficient for the whole fifteen millions of the children of the school age in the United States.

"The annual expense of maintaining paupers—96 per cent. of whom have become such through lack of proper training while young—is at least ten times as great as would have been the expense to the public of securing an education while young to each of these paupers sufficient to have enabled 96 per cent. of them to support themselves instead of being a charge upon the public.

"Education leads naturally to industry, sobriety, and economy; hence it makes one conscious of the benefits resulting from these habits.

"Statistics proclaim in no uncertain voice that education is the surest preventive of pauperism and that the expense of providing and applying in season this preventive would not be one-tenth that now brought upon society by pauperism.

"The first incentive to action is self-support—gaining a livelihood. This is the very basis of personal independence, of individual character, respectability, and influence. The key to self-support is education. Money and labor invested in education are capital invested in such a manner that the principal is absolutely safe and the income large, sure, and promptly paid. The States should see to it that a reasonable investment of this kind is made in and for every child as it grows up.

"In France, in 1868, one-half of the inhabitants could not read nor write. From this half came 95 per cent. of the persons arrested for crime. From the other, the educated half, came only 5 per cent. In other words, a given number of children suffered to grow up illiterate produced nineteen times as many persons arrested for crime as the same number would if educated, at least to the extent of the elementary branches.

"In the Grand Duchy of Baden, from 1854 to 1861—seven years—the government, by a rigorous system of universal compulsory elementary education, reduced the number of prisoners actually arrested 51 per cent. and the number of crimes committed 54 per cent.

"In the six New England States, in 1870, 7 per cent. only of the inhabitants above ten years of age were unable to read and write; and yet this 7 per cent. produced 80 per cent. of the criminals. Or, in other words, a given number of children in New England at that time suffered to grow up illiterate produced fifty-three times as many criminals as the same number would if educated to the extent of the curriculum of the public schools. This fact is a complete vindication of the moral effect of the New England system of public education, Cardinal Antonelli to the contrary notwithstanding.

"In the State of New York, in 1880, the illiterates produced eight times their pro rata proportion of the criminals in that State; that is, a given number of children brought up illiterate, on the average, produced eight times as many criminals as the same children would have produced if educated to the extent of the curriculum of the public schools.

"In the city of New York, in 1870, among the illiterates, one crime was committed for every 3 persons; while among the literates there was only one crime to every 27 persons. Or, in other words, the ignorant class in that city furnishes nine times the criminals they would if educated in the public schools.

"In the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, in 1870, the illiterates, according to their numbers, committed seven times as many crimes as the literate class.

"In Pennsylvania, Ohio, and Illinois, taken together, the illiterates committed ten times as many crimes, according to their numbers, as the literate class.

"Take the whole of the United States together, according to the census of 1870, the illiterates committed ten times their pro rata proportion of crimes.

"In Pennsylvania, in the years 1879 and 1880, one-thirtieth of the population above ten years of age could neither read nor write, and this one-thirtieth committed one-sixth part of the crimes, or nearly six times its proper proportion. But if we class with the illiterates the criminals who could barely read and write, but who had no education beyond bare reading and writing, it will then appear that the one-thirtieth of the population of Pennsylvania that is illiterate commits one-third of the crime, or more than fourteen times its legitimate proportion.

"A careful examination of the statistics of twenty States shows the following average results:

"First. That one-sixth of all the crime in the country is committed by persons wholly illiterate.

"Second. That one-third of the crime in the country is committed by persons wholly or substantially illiterate.

"Third. That the proportion of criminals among the illiterate class is, on the average, ten times as great as it is among those who have been instructed in the elements of a common-school education or beyond.

"Fourth. That the expense imposed upon society to protect itself against a few thousand criminals, most of whom were made such through the neglect of society to take care of their education when young, is one of the heaviest of the public burdens. In the city of New York it is 50 per cent. more than the whole cost of the public schools.

"In that city the annual appropriation for police, criminal courts, reformatories, jails, and penitentiaries is over five millions of dollars; while that for the training of the 385,000 school children in the city is only $3,500,000.

"The average attendance at the schools in 1880 was 138,329. The 'compulsory school age'—that is, the age within which all children are required by law in the State of New York to attend school—is eight to fourteen years. The number of children of this age in the city of New York in June, 1880, was 141,474; while the average attendance on the public schools of children of all ages from five to twenty-one in that year in the city was only 133,090. As a logical consequence of this neglect of education the city jails and almshouses are crammed and taxes are high.

"The city, in its meager provision for education and its enormous taxation for criminals (to use an old but expressive adage), 'saves at the spigot, but loses at the bung.'

"What is true of the metropolis of the country is equally true of every city, town, village, and neighborhood.

"These facts could be multiplied almost without limit.

"The examination of the statistics of criminality and illiteracy in the census of any civilized state or country will give results substantially in harmony with the above.

"Carlyle says that—

"If the devil were passing through my country and he applied to me for instruction on any truth or fact of this universe, I should wish to give it to him. He is less a devil knowing that three and three are six than if he didn't know it; a light spark, though of the faintest, is in this fact; if he knew facts enough, continuous light would dawn on him; he would (to his amazement) understand what this universe is, on what principles it conducts itself, and would cease to be a devil."

Mr. BLAIR. Now, if the Senator from Massachusetts is ready to proceed, I will give way.

Mr. CALL. Will the Senator from New Hampshire allow me a moment?

Mr. BLAIR. Certainly.

Mr. CALL. I desire to offer a resolution, and I ask that it be read. The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. DAWES in the chair). Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. BLAIR. Certainly.

Mr. CALL. I offer a resolution to be read and printed. It will necessarily lie over until to-morrow under the rules.

Mr. BLAIR. I give way subject to objection. I do not know what the Senator from Florida proposes.

Mr. CALL. I simply offer a resolution, and I only ask that it be read.

Mr. CULLOM. Is all that manuscript a resolution?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield for the purpose indicated?

Mr. BLAIR. I yield simply for a resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair hears no objection, and the resolution submitted by the Senator from Florida will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Whereas the newspapers contain charges that Charles Swayne, nominated to be district judge of the United States for the northern district of Florida, has been guilty of being privy to and responsible for the selection of a grand jury and a petit jury of persons selected because of their political and party affiliations for the purpose of indicting and trying citizens of the United States, by and before a jury organized and selected for their indictment and conviction; and

Whereas the newspapers contain statements that the said Swayne and Joseph N. Stripling, district attorney of the United States, acted in concert and with an understanding to this end; and

Whereas it is stated in the newspapers and by citizens of Florida that the said Swayne has been a resident of the State of Florida for only two years, or about that time, and that he is a bitter and vindictive partisan, with intense prejudice against the people of the State of Florida; and

Whereas it is further stated in the newspapers that the said Swayne has never had any considerable practice or experience as a lawyer, and that his only recommendation for this high office is that he is a bitter and vindictive partisan with a feeling of hatred to the people of the Southern States: Therefore, it is

Resolved—

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I object to that if it comes in by unanimous consent.

Mr. CULLOM. It is not in by unanimous consent except to be read, and I certainly object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Unanimous consent has been given for the reading of the resolution.

Mr. HOAR. Very well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Massachusetts raise a question of order?

Mr. HOAR. Not if unanimous consent has been given.

Mr. CULLOM. It was simply asked that it be read.

Mr. BLAIR. It was simply asked to be read, but it is a good deal longer than I supposed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The reading of the resolution will be continued.

The Chief Clerk resumed the reading of the resolution, as follows:

Therefore, it is

Resolved, That the consideration of the nominations of Charles Swayne for district judge of the United States for the northern district of Florida and Joseph N. Stripling for the office of district attorney of the United States for the northern district of Florida—

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, I rise to a question of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Hampshire will state his question of order.

Mr. CHANDLER. It is that the resolution is not in order in open session, but relates wholly to a matter of executive session.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. CALL. I appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Florida appeals from the decision of the Chair, and the question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the Senate?

Mr. BLAIR. I hope the Senator from Florida will not press the matter.

Mr. CALL. I do not desire to trespass upon the time of the Senator from New Hampshire, and I will not do so in the face of his objection. I will allow the matter to go over.

Mr. BLAIR. The Senator will see that his resolution is quite lengthy and it might consume the afternoon.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the Senate?

Mr. CALL. Until the resolution is read it can not be acted upon, and in the presence of the objection of the Senator from New Hampshire, by whose courtesy I was occupying the floor, I withdraw the resolution for the time being.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, the Senator from Florida withdraws the resolution.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I have not yet been able to obtain the statutes of the State of Louisiana for 1867 or of the period from 1865 to 1868, whenever it was, when the Provisional Legislature was in force. It was during that period that the statute to which I have referred was enacted. I sent to the Senate Library for the volume, but it is not there. I have now sent to the Law Library, and I hope to obtain it very soon. But I find the Mississippi statute, which in both respects bears out the statement I made, as I understand it. However, in a volume, entitled "History of the Reconstruction," a book by Mr. McPherson, the Clerk of the House of Representatives, I find what purports to be the Louisiana law of December, 1865. It is thus described:

An "Act to provide for and regulate labor contracts for agricultural pursuit" requires all such laborers to make labor contracts for the next year within the first ten days of January, the contracts to be in writing, to be with heads of families, to embrace the labor of all the members, and be binding on all minors thereof. Each laborer, after choosing his employer, "shall not be allowed to leave his place of employment until the fulfillment of his contract." * * * Employers failing to comply are to be fined.

The amount of the fine is not given in the abstract of the law. Then it provides that if the laborer refuse to work—beyond three days, the offender shall be reported to a justice of the peace, and he shall be forced to labor on roads, levees, and other public works, without pay, until the offender consents to return to his labor.

He is required when in health to—work ten hours during the day in summer and nine hours during the day in winter. * * * Failing to obey reasonable orders * * * will be deemed disobedience; * * * and all fines imposed and collected under this section shall be deducted from the wages due, and shall be placed in a common fund, to be divided among the other laborers.

Then it goes on to state that the new vagrant act is thus condensed in the New Orleans Picayune, which says:

It adopts the same definition of vagrancy as in the act of 1855.

Whether that be a misprint for the act of 1865 I do not know or whether it refers to some act passed by the State before the war. It does not appear from this statement.

Mr. EUSTIS. The Statutes of 1855?

Mr. HOAR. It provides—

That any person charged with vagrancy shall be arrested on the warrant of any judge or justice of the peace.

One of the definitions of vagrancy, I presume, if it is like the Mississippi statute, is that it is the having no employment, but that does not appear here. There is nothing of the kind which shows that here. Then it provides that the party shall enter into bond, give security. Failing to give bond and security "for his good behavior and future industry for the period of one year," the justice or other officer shall issue his warrant to the sheriff, "directing him to detain and to hire out such vagrant for a period not exceeding twelve months," and "if the accused be a person who has abandoned his employer before his contract expired the preference shall be given to such employer of hiring the accused."

That is Mr. McPherson's statement.

Mr. CHANDLER. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. HOAR. Wait one moment. I ought to say in justice to myself and to the Senator from Louisiana that there is nothing in either of these publications which I have found of Louisiana which warrants the statement that in Louisiana the provision sentencing white men as vagrants to the penitentiary or to be imprisoned at the discretion of the justice for associating on terms of equality with blacks is found. I will speak on the subject again when I have examined these volumes, which have just arrived, but I presume my memory was at fault in ascribing that part of the law to the State of Louisiana. But the Senator will see that there was no attempt to make any reproach on his people or any other when he remembers what laws were passed in several of the Southern States, and that I stated in my original remarks that the fact that these laws were passed was what seemed to me to have occasioned the legislation of 1870.

In Massachusetts Governor Andrew, who was our leader more than any other man within its limits, even more than Mr. Sumner himself, whom all the loyalty of the State venerated, came out in his valedictory address to the Legislature at the close of the year 1865 (I think it was; I do not remember the date) urging that the matter of reconstructing the Southern communities should be left to the intelligence and influence of those States; that is, that the white men who had gone into the rebellion, and had been the leaders then, should be the persons upon whom the duty of adjusting their States to the new order of things should be imposed. Mr. Morton, of Indiana, took the same ground in a passage which has often been quoted. I believe now that if it had not been for the laws the character of which I have adverted to, which were passed in so many of the Southern States, without going into particulars, the whole matter of the government of those communities would have been remanded by the victors of the North to the men who had been their rulers and governors before the war, saving, of course, to the colored man his constitutional rights of citizenship, including the right to hold property and the right to trial by jury, but not including the matter of suffrage, unless those communities should confer it.

I do not wish to be betrayed into an angry controversy here. I think the Senator from Louisiana knows that I would not purposely, and I hope he will believe I would not carelessly, make any statement injurious to his State.

Mr. EUSTIS. The Senator will allow me to say that I never intended to intimate that he had any intention whatever to misrepresent the laws of the State of Louisiana.

Mr. HOAR. In a debate with the Senator from Mississippi, in which he complained very bitterly of a law that he deemed harsh to that State I cited from memory—from the memory of now over twenty years—the provisions of certain laws which did in fact exist in Mississippi and which I thought existed also in Louisiana; and I accompanied the citation with a statement that under the circumstances the conduct of the white people of those States at that time seemed to me to be not only natural but inevitable, and by the statement at the time that I did not make this citation by way of reproach to anybody any more than I should allude to the history of thirty years ago in the time of slavery as a reproach, but only as an historical explanation of the statute of 1870.

Mr. EUSTIS. Then, Mr. President, I understand—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield?

Mr. HOAR. I merely wish to add that I shall examine the volume which has arrived.

Mr. EUSTIS. I understand the Senator from Massachusetts to admit that his statement to the Senate, that in the State of Louisiana there is a law making it "a penal offense, punishable by imprisonment in the penitentiary, for a white man to associate on terms of equality with a black man," is incorrect.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator now reads that in the present tense. There is no such thing in my speech. If there is, it is a misprint.

Mr. EUSTIS. "There were laws."

Mr. HOAR. That is a very different thing.

Mr. EUSTIS. The language is, "there were laws."

Mr. HOAR. That is a very different thing.

Mr. EUSTIS. Then I understand the Senator from Massachusetts to admit that there was not such a law in the State of Louisiana.

Mr. HOAR. What I have to say is that I suppose, without having yet examined the authentic edition of the statutes, so far as that part of the statement is concerned, my memory was at fault, and that it was in Mississippi, and not in Louisiana.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, I only rise to read an ordinance of the parish of St. Landry, Louisiana, which I find in volume 3 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, Forty-third Congress, second session, page 745, to which probably the attention of the Senator from Louisiana has not been called recently. It is "An ordinance relative to the police of negroes recently emancipated within the parish of St. Landry."

Whereas it was formerly made the duty of the police jury to make suitable regulations for the police of slaves within the limits of the parish; and whereas slaves have become emancipated by action of the ruling powers; and whereas it is necessary, for public order as well as for the comfort and correct deportment of said freedmen, that suitable regulations should be established for their government in their changed condition, the following ordinances are adopted:

SECTION 1. Be it ordained by the police jury of the parish of St. Landry. That no negro shall be allowed to pass within the limits of said parish without a special permit in writing from his employer. Whoever shall violate this provision shall pay a fine of $2.50, or in default thereof shall be forced to work four days on the public roads or suffer corporal punishment, as provided hereinafter.

SEC. 2. Be it further ordained. That every negro who shall be found absent from the residence of his employer after 10 o'clock at night, without a written permit from his employer, shall pay a fine of $5, or in default thereof shall be compelled to work five days on the public road, or suffer corporal punishment, as hereinafter provided.

SEC. 3. Be it further ordained. That no negro shall be permitted to rent or keep a house within said parish. Any negro violating this provision shall be immediately ejected and compelled to find an employer; and any person who shall rent or give the use of any house to any negro in violation of this section shall pay a fine of $5 for each offense.

SEC. 4. Be it further ordained. That every negro is required to be in the regular service of some white person or former owner. But said employer or former owner may permit said negro to hire his own time by special permission in writing, which permission shall not extend over seven days at any one time. Any negro violating the provisions of this section shall be fined $5 for each offense, or in default of the payment thereof shall be forced to work five days on the public road, or suffer corporal punishment as hereinafter provided.

SEC. 5. Be it further ordained. That no public meetings or congregations of negroes shall be allowed within said parish after sunset; but such public meetings and congregations may be held between the hours of sunrise and sunset, by the special permission in writing of the captain of patrol within whose beat such meetings shall take place. This prohibition, however, is not intended to prevent negroes from attending the usual church services conducted by white ministers and priests. Every negro violating the provisions of this section shall pay a fine of $5, or in default thereof shall be compelled to work five days on the public road, or suffer corporal punishment as hereinafter provided.

Mr. HOAR. What is the date of that?

Mr. CHANDLER. It is given in a speech delivered in 1875. The date of the ordinance is not given.

Mr. EUSTIS. I will ask the Senator from New Hampshire to state what possible application all that has to the question which we are discussing.

Mr. CHANDLER. If the Senator does not perceive it I shall not undertake to enlighten him.

Mr. EUSTIS. I acknowledge that I do not perceive it.

Mr. CHANDLER. I should not like to instruct the Senator, who is so able and learned generally, and so acute. If he does not perceive the bearing of it upon the question as to what kind of laws the State of Louisiana passed in the days of reconstruction, I leave him to think it over and see if he can not find out by reflection.

Mr. EUSTIS. I utterly fail to discover the application. The question before the Senate, and the question in discussion between the Senator from Massachusetts and myself, is whether a statement he had made, which appeared in the RECORD, was correct or incorrect. That was the only question. Whether the ordinances of the police jury of the parish of St. Landry were wise or unwise legislation, necessary or unnecessary, and so on, I utterly fail to discover that that question has any possible application to the issue which was presented by myself this morning. I will merely inform the Senator from New Hampshire that whenever the general question comes up I may have something to say on that subject, and that then possibly those old stories from St. Landry may have some application.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, unless I am interfering, I should like to ask the Senator from Louisiana a question. Does he not know that the fifteenth amendment of the Constitution would never have been adopted but for the fact that the laws of the Southern States, then lately in rebellion, practically deprived the negro, in the opinion of the Congress of the United States at that time, of his rights of citizenship, and but for the passage of those laws, which were quoted at large and spread broadcast all over the Northern States, the whole basis of reconstruction would have rested upon the fourteenth amendment? I presume he was familiar with the facts at the time. If he does not know that, I can assure him that such is the fact.

Mr. EUSTIS. Mr. President, I am glad that the Senator from Ohio has asked me the question which he has propounded. It has been my honest conviction that all the reconstruction measures, all the Federal legislation, and the constitutional amendments were adopted by the Republican party with the single object of africanizing the South and maintaining and preserving their political supremacy. That is my opinion. What I consider the greatest crime which has ever been committed against civilized communities has been committed by the Republican party in this country; and if you to-day stand aghast and appalled, as I know you do, at the results of your work, and feel like apologizing to the country and to yourselves for having committed such a monstrous crime against the civilization of the South, I assure the Senator from Ohio that I will not by any answer to that question help him out of any such difficulty as that.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, I have always thought it idle and worthless for us to discuss the historical events growing out of the war; but the Senator from Louisiana is much less observant and much more ignorant of the motives of the Republican party and of the men associated with that party, comprising at that time more than three-fourths or four-fifths of the people of the Northern States, if he does not appreciate the magnitude of the fact that I state to him.

When the civil war closed there was a feeling universal in the Northern States, represented in every organ of opinion, that the best way to solve the difficulty was to restore to the people of the Southern States their State governments with all the original powers attached thereto, with only such limitations and qualifications as would enable the people of the United States to secure the results of the war, that is, the equal rights of citizens, black and white, to wipe out the distinction that had been made in our Government growing out of the institution of slavery in the South. Recalling the events as they occurred, I say that in the sessions of 1866 and 1867 the first act that was passed to provide for the reconstruction of the Southern States was framed by a committee of as conservative Senators as ever participated in the formation of a law. Among them were Reverdy Johnson, and such men as Morton, men who were moderate in their opinions, who desired to restore the status as far as was consistent with the changed condition of affairs.

I was chairman of a committee appointed here to frame out of the various bills that were then pending in the Senate a law to provide for the reconstruction of the Southern States, and that law was based upon the restoration of the States to their practical position before the war, only subject to such changes as were made necessary by the abolition of slavery as the result of the war.

There was at that time no feeling of hostility against the people of the South. Indeed, I never in my life, in those times after the war, heard any expression of opinion except of kindness to the people of the South. There was a universal appreciation of the fact that while they were wrong, radically wrong, as we thought, in waging a useless and bloody war against the Union of this country, yet they were honest in their convictions; they believed that the doctrines they fought for were the doctrines of the Constitution; and there was therefore a spirit of generosity, of forbearance, of kindness to those people, and everything that they asked in reason would have been granted to them.

At that time it was not contemplated to arm the negro with suffrage. It was not proposed except by one or two Senators, and the proposition was scouted and laid aside. You may go back to the records and you will see (I can produce, if necessary, the evidence of those records to show it) that the laws passed by the various Southern States when they first assumed to act after the close of hostilities were so cruel, so unjust, so wrong in our view of the rights of the colored people of the South, so unjust in our view of the rights of the white Republicans of the South, of whom there were thousands during the war and since the war, that those laws burned like coals of fire in the Northern heart. They were felt to be unjust, and the belief grew stronger and stronger that the people who had waged war to break up the Union intended to over-throw the results of the war and to deprive those who were made free by the policy of that war of all the rights of citizenship.

That was the feeling. It was a feeling in which I participated. All I said at that time and all I did at that time was guided by that one generous feeling, that all the results of the war should be blotted out, except only those results that grew out of the abolition of slavery. That was the feeling; and the law was passed. It may be read now. It was the first law providing for reconstruction. Then the acts passed by the Southern Legislatures commenced and continued from that time on until the feeling deepened in the Northern States; and it was not until the people of the North felt that there was no way whatever left to protect the acknowledged rights of the colored men of the South except to arm them with suffrage, that we approached it; and we did so with great difficulty and with much delay. Two years and more elapsed after the first act was passed before Congress was brought to vote upon the fifteenth amendment. The fourteenth amendment was framed by Trumbull and Doolittle, and by other men of the most conservative character—men who had formerly been Democrats.

Mr. CHANDLER. And Fessenden.

Mr. SHERMAN. And Fessenden; men of that type, the most moderate and conservative men of the Republican party, largely then represented by men who had been brought up in the school of Democracy.

But, sir, when the time came that we saw there was no protection for the people of the Southern States, and especially for those who had been emancipated, except to arm them with the suffrage, we reluctantly, slowly, deliberately, adopted that remedy, and the only remedy fit for the case. There was no feeling of passion about it. There was no feeling of hatred about it. There was no such ungenerous sentiment as that typed by the speech of my friend from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE] yesterday. There was nothing of the kind. But when we came to the conclusion that there was no remedy left except to arm the negroes with suffrage, it was adopted in the form of a constitutional amendment and voted for by such men as I have named—Fessenden and Trumbull and Doolittle and Mr. Cox, who has recently died, lately a member from New York, then a member from Ohio. It was adopted by them as the last resort.

Sometimes I have thought, in view of all the events which transpired at that time, that perhaps it would have been better not to adopt that amendment, because the rights conferred by the fifteenth amendment to the Constitution have been nullified and uprooted. Those rights do not now exist wherever the franchise is valuable to those people for whom it was meant. No man can question, in view even of the admissions made on this floor, that practically the result of the fifteenth amendment is to give to the Southern States increased representation in the House of Representatives, to give them increased power in the Electoral College. Although it was known that would be the result of that amendment, yet it was the extreme remedy to which we were compelled to resort.

Mr. President, this is all that I need say. If there is anything wrong in the situation of Southern affairs, in every case they have brought it upon themselves. When the Senator from Mississippi yesterday spoke of the feeling of hate that exists in the Northern States, he described what is only to be seen in his own imagination. There is no such feeling of hate at this moment, and if we could now secure by any sacrifice the equal rights of all citizens in this country, without respect to color, we would be satisfied, whatever might be the result of the elections hereafter.

That is the universal feeling of the North. In my travel and intercourse with the Northern people I have never heard in any State of the Union any violent denunciation of the Southern people, nor observed any evidence of hate. Our people do not like the course that has been adopted in the South; they do not believe in the lawless acts of violence which have been paraded in the newspapers and have been proven over and over again by examinations before committees of Congress. All they want is that the Southern people, now having the power in their hands, shall secure to the emancipated slaves all the rights granted to them by the Constitution.

We perceive the difficulty of their situation. We know how difficult it is sometimes to reconcile the prejudices of opposing races. But we hoped that that would be a measure of time, and that time would heal all these things. That it has not done so is not our fault. We have committed no act of oppression or wrong to the South. We have confiscated no property. We have destroyed no life. We have not impaired or weakened in the slightest degree the rights of the people of the South. They now enjoy more rights than the people of the North, because they now hold an unnatural representation in Congress made by treading down under their feet with lawless violence or with fraud or wrong the privileges granted to the colored race by the fifteenth constitutional amendment.

That is the true statement in regard to this matter; and for one, in the name of the people of Ohio, without respect to party, I disclaim and deny any such feeling of hostility. On the other hand, men of my State have gone down South, and with their wealth and energy they are now developing large portions of the Southern States, and if left alone, if protected by the laws of those States, they will develop them and make them rich and boundless in their prosperity.

Sir, the wealth, the prosperity of the South to-day, of which they boast and in which I take pride, is the result of the incorporation into their midst of some of the energy and strength and free ideas and free notions of the North. At first they did not welcome the emigrants from the North, this increase of capital, this importation of energy to their faded system of slave domination; but now they do, and I believe the time is not far distant when every Southern State, feeling the force and vital energy that have been grafted upon their system, will take pride in this development of their resources.

But, sir, there is no feeling of unkindness in this matter. It is only an open door for their energy. Our citizens go there to improve their condition; they go there to develop the resources of the South; they go there, if you please, to make money; but they do not go there with hatred in their hearts, or violence, or a desire to at all intrench upon the rights of the people of the South.

Mr. President, I trust that hereafter when statements are made with regard to the Republicans of the North or their feelings towards the South gentlemen will understand that that charge has been denied, as I do here to-day deny it, and if they insist upon repeating it over and over again as a justification for any wrongs that have been committed in the South, they plead what ought not to be pleaded in any court of justice, especially in this high tribunal of the Senate of the United States.

I can see the difficulties that surround the South. I would be glad to aid them in any way. I voted once or twice for the pending bill in order to relieve them from the burdens thrown upon them by ingrafting in their body politic a great mass of ignorance among the blacks. That is the only equitable ground upon which the bill can be placed. If it is rejected by the South, well and good; it is not for us to complain. It is the payment of Northern money to aid them to educate their ignorant people in the South. There is no ground whatever of claim against us that we should aid to educate the ruling classes in the South. There is a ground of equity that we should aid them to educate and dissipate the mass of ignorance contained in that large body of their population which has been emancipated by our policy. That is the equitable ground upon which this bill can be placed and no other. If that fails, or if that is denied, or if it is not fairly apportioned and applied to its proper use, then all the merits of this bill fall, and ought to fall, to the ground.

This, sir, is all that I deem it necessary to say, and I only say it in response to the complaints which have been made. If there are any ills in the South they have been brought upon them by themselves. If they complain of the fifteenth amendment, which enfranchises an ignorant race, they compelled us to pass it, in the judgment of the most conservative men of the Northern States, not of the extreme men, not of Mr. Sumner or a few others who might be picked out, but the conservative classes of the Northern States, including, as I believe, a great mass of the Democrats of the North, who felt that there was no other way, that there was no stopping short of arming the negroes with the right of suffrage.

It is true it has not turned out as we expected, because no man then dreamed that such measures would be resorted to as have been resorted to in order to deprive the negro of his rights. No man then dreamed of ku klux klans and of the savage machinery by which this exclusion has been perfected. No man then dreamed that in a district where there were two blacks to one white the blacks should be excluded from the count or if counted should be counted as voting with the whites. No man dreamed then that a state of society could exist where a majority in the South should not rule in the particular locality.

It is true we felt and appreciated the dangers of conferring this power, but, as I said before, we were compelled to resort to it. There was nothing else left. Step by step this action was taken; and it was taken deliberately. It was not until General Grant became President of the United States, in 1869, that the fifteenth amendment to the Constitution was proposed as part of the law of the land. But during the four years that intervened between the close of the war and the inauguration of President Grant we had gone through the history that I have depicted. We had witnessed the mode and manner adopted by the Southern people in dealing with the negroes of the South. We were therefore induced and compelled by our sense of what was right and just to them to do what we did.

We have no apologies to offer. The apologies, if any, ought to come from the other side. The Senator from Mississippi ought to apologize here to the Senate for the manner in which the negroes have been deprived of their rights in Mississippi. No Northern man and no Northern constituency has ever deprived any man, black or white, in the South of any rights. You can not point to a single act of injustice done by the Northern people against the Southern people. All we did that you now think was so wrong was simply to avoid the laws that you passed during this time of trial, when the Southern people, it seems to me, ought to have been actuated by a different feeling.

Nowhere in the history of the world was such a spectacle of magnanimity shown as was shown by the people of the North in their dealings with the South. When the war closed no life was taken, no property was taken, no right was deprived. You were still armed with all your rights. All we asked and all we aimed at was, first, that you would be willing to do justice, because we left it to you at first, and when we found you were unwilling to do justice to these emancipated masses we felt that it was our duty by the constitutional amendment to compel you as far as we could do it to deal justly with them. If we have failed in this it has not been our fault, but yours.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. SHERMAN. Certainly.

Mr. BUTLER. May I interrupt the Senator from Ohio for one moment?

Mr. SHERMAN. Certainly.

Mr. BUTLER. I wish to call to his attention a fact which appears to have escaped him. I have no disposition to enter into this debate, but some statements made by the Senator from Ohio, I think, deserve attention.

Mr. SHERMAN. If the Senator will ask his question I shall try to answer it.

Mr. BUTLER. I will come to the question in a moment. The Senator has made the statement that whatever evils have overtaken the South the South is responsible for; that the Southern white people refused to do justice to the negro; and that therefore the fourteenth and fifteenth amendments were adopted, and the suffrage was put in the hands of the negroes as a means of protecting them.

The question I wanted to ask the Senator from Ohio as one of common justice to the people of the South is, if in his judgment as a statesman and as a citizen he does not think that the conduct of Andrew Johnson when he was President of the United States had as much to do with the condition of things in the South as the conduct of the Southern people themselves?

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes; when Andrew Johnson left the Republican party and joined the Democratic party he then did do more, he was able to do more, than anybody else—

Mr. BUTLER. That is not exactly my question, Mr. President. Whether Mr. Andrew Johnson was a Democrat or a Republican, he was the President of the United States—he represented the executive department of the United States—and in dealing with the South he had one policy and the Republican party which he had left had another. I ask the Senator if Mr. Johnson is not responsible as much as any other one influence in this country for the condition of things there.

Mr. SHERMAN. I say that Andrew Johnson is more responsible for the evils that have been brought upon this country by the treatment of the negroes than anybody else. He was elected by the Republicans as a part of the generous treatment they have always extended to the people of the South. They took Johnson in 1864, and put him on the ticket. They took him as a Southern Democrat, and when he came into power he deserted the Republican party; he turned his back upon that party, and joined the Democrats of the South in this system of measures that I have complained of, and our fight was against Johnson as well as against the extreme men of the South.

Mr. BUTLER. Very well. I am glad to hear that admission.

Mr. SHERMAN. Our fight was against Johnson because he had left us and joined them. That shows the unanimity of sentiment of the Northern people. Although he was armed with all the executive power of President, with all the offices in the gift of the President, we did tie his hands and prevent him from carrying out his policy, which in my judgment was wrong, and which we then thought was wrong—a judgment that was supported and sustained by the whole North.

Mr. BUTLER. Then I understand the Senator from Ohio practically to admit that the Southern people were not alone responsible for the condition of things which was brought upon them, but that Mr. Andrew Johnson, his President, was in a measure responsible for his policy and the enforcement of his policy in the South, to which the people of the South acceded when they surrendered their arms; and I was one of them, sir. So, I think when the Senator brings the wholesale charge upon the white people of the South that they are responsible, and that they alone are responsible, he does a grave injustice to the people of the South.

Mr. SHERMAN. I look upon Andrew Johnson as one of the white men of the South. He was born there, raised there.

Mr. BUTLER. But he was a Republican Vice-President, and the Southern people had no other authority to look to except the Executive in dealing with them after they surrendered their arms.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Southern people had a right to look to the Congress of the United States as the governing power of this country. They knew as well as I know that Andrew Johnson deserted the party that elected him and joined the party of the South, which he had fought against and abused as loudly as anybody.

Mr. BUTLER. If the Senator will pardon me, how were we to know that?

Mr. SHERMAN. Oh, well, the sagacious men of the South do not need to have me answer that question.

Mr. BUTLER. If the Senator will pardon me for refreshing his memory, he can not fail to recall the fact that every influential man in the South was disfranchised; he was not allowed to utter his sentiments; he was not allowed to cast a ballot. How were we, with our hands tied, to come to the Congress of the United States and go around the Executive and say to the Congress, "Give us your terms?"

Mr. SHERMAN. Let me first answer the statement the Senator makes. No Southern man was disfranchised. From the time the Senator from South Carolina laid down his arms until this moment he has been a free citizen with the right to vote. It is true that for a time he could not hold office.

Mr. BUTLER. I was not allowed to vote in South Carolina.

Mr. SHERMAN. That was by your own law.

Mr. BUTLER. No, sir.

Mr. SHERMAN. No act of the United States deprived the Senator of his right to vote. No act of Congress ever looked to such a thing as that. Every one of them had the right to vote. But in the fourteenth amendment (which was the framework, as I said, of the conservative men of the North, which was made more by the three men I have already named here, especially by Mr. Fessenden and Mr. Trumbull, than any others; they were the leading actors in the matter) no man in the South was deprived of his right.

They did say that those who had taken the oath of office before the war, and, as we thought, had violated that oath by entering into an armed rebellion, should be deprived of the right to hold office until a majority of Congress should relieve them from that disability. It must be marked as one of the evidences that no unkind feeling was ever entertained in the North, that there never was a bill offered in the Senate to relieve any man from this disability of holding office which was not passed by a unanimous vote. There never was a question about it. I think that the case never occurred when it was not done, until finally by a general law, made under the provisions of the 14th amendment, all were relieved from even this disability.

Mr. BUTLER. If the Senator will pardon me, I think there is a law upon the statute book now, of which I do not complain, which deprives any man who held a commission in the Confederate army from holding a commission in the United States Army to-day.

Mr. SHERMAN. On the contrary, that disability has been removed. I believe there was but one exception, and that man is now answering before a higher power than this.

Mr. BUTLER. Oh, no; the Senator is mistaken. No ex-Confederate officer can enter the Army.

Mr. SHERMAN. What, he can not enter the United States Army?

Mr. BUTLER. He can not enter the United States Army or Navy. I do not complain of this. I do not expect to hold any position, and I do not know that anybody else does. But the Senator says that all disabilities were removed, and I remind him that that is one which has not been removed. I care nothing about it.

Mr. SHERMAN. If that is the case it is so unimportant that it has escaped my attention, and I think that of everybody else. Certain it is that the sons of the Confederate soldiers, bright young men, from the very day of the close of the war entered into the Military Academy at West Point and were there educated, and I have no doubt they make as true, loyal, brave, and patriotic soldiers as any other portion of the Army of the United States. But, sir, practically all the disabilities that affected you were removed, and if the matter had stood upon the fourteenth amendment of the Constitution and the Southern people had performed one-half of their duty, yea, if they had shown a disposition to perform their duty, there would have been the end of the controversy, and it would have been a happy end. But it was not so; and whether you blame it on Andrew Johnson or somebody else, certain it is that after the adoption of the fourteenth amendment, until the time the fifteenth amendment was adopted, there were a series of laws and regulations, local and State, one after another, coming in a deluge, aimed and designed and intended to secure the practical enslavement of the colored race.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. SHERMAN. Certainly.

Mr. GEORGE. Does the Senator wish to be understood as saying that after the adoption of the fourteenth amendment any of those objectionable laws were enacted by Southern States?

Mr. SHERMAN. Before and after, both.

Mr. GEORGE. Not a single Legislature ever met in a Southern State after the passage of the first reconstruction law on the 2d of March, 1867.

Mr. SHERMAN. During the whole consideration of the fourteenth amendment, during the whole consideration of the process of reconstruction, while this was going on and popular opinion was forming in the North, these laws were being passed, printed in every paper in Northern States and read by every man, woman, and child there. It was in consequence of those laws, in consequence of the hostile attitude of the Southern people to the plain and manifest policy of the Government, which was leaving the power in the hands of the States and of the very men who had been engaged in the war, not even securing to the negro the right to vote, but only the simple, common rights of citizenship—it was after and during the consideration of those measures that the laws I complain of were passed. No one can question that. As a matter of course, I am not prepared now to quote them, nor do I care to do it, because it would only tend to engender the old feeling.

Sir, they are there of record; they were spread upon our records here at the time. That was the reason why the fifteenth amendment came and that was the reason of the acts of which the Senator from Mississippi complains. There can be no question about that. But so far as I am concerned I never have, I believe, to this hour sought to revive or renew or even repeat this history, or to revive the incidents of those times, because they are past and gone. They are part of the history of the country. I believe the time will come, as it has come in old England, when there is no longer the controversy between the Round-head and the Cavalier, and such as existed in our own country where there is no longer a controversy between the descendants of the Tory and the Patriot of the Revolution. All these feuds ought to be like passing dreams, to disappear into history, to be recorded there by the cold pen as facts accomplished, not as things to affect us in the future.

Let me say to Senators on the other side, in all seriousness, that the feeling in the North is that injustice has grown out of the fifteenth amendment, not only to the negroes of the South, but injustice has grown out of it by your deprivation of the negroes of their right to vote, and that you now openly enjoy larger political power than the same number of people in the North. You have thirty-odd members in the House of Representatives as the result of the fifteenth amendment. There are a few Republicans there left. Nearly all of them, however, are Democrats, and their representation is based upon negro suffrage.

Mr. DAVIS. And disfranchisement.

Mr. SHERMAN. And the disfranchisement of the negro. Now, let the South do what they ought to do. Let them observe and obey the constitutional amendments. Let them give to the negro his vote and allow him to vote as he will. We are not there to protect him; we are not there to control him; we are not there to guide him; and I would not care if the whole of them should vote the Democratic ticket.

Mr. BUTLER. May I ask the Senator a question there?

Mr. SHERMAN. Let me go on. I will give way to the Senator in a moment. This feeling of injustice does prevail in the North, that by your own act in depriving these people of their representation you yourselves exercise an undue power in this Government, a power that is not exercised by the people of the North. Until that is remedied in some way, either by the negro voting or the negro being excluded from the basis of representation, you never will have a feeling of content and equality among the people of the Northern States. It is not a feeling of hate; it is not a feeling of anger; but it is a sense of injustice, a sense of wrong of which I now speak, not only for the Republicans of the North, but for the Democrats of the North, in a power which gives you unduly a control over their organization, a power which enables you to wield a greater influence over the destinies of this country than any equal number in the North. That is the result of your policy in regard to the fifteenth amendment, not of our fault or of our wrong.

Now, to sum it all up, we gave you the fourteenth amendment, the most liberal basis of compromise and settlement that ever was offered by a conquering foe to one that had been defeated. Then when we found that you would not acquiesce in the results of the war, including the emancipation of the slaves, we undertook perhaps to do what has turned out to be impossible, to secure to the blacks the right to protect themselves by their ballot. You have overthrown that right and you now enjoy increased political power by your own wrong. Yet you complain of us. You complain of us of what? Of injustice, or wrong, or violence, or bloodshed? No; you complain of us that we hate you. We deny the hatred, but we demand justice, and until the Southern States are prepared in their own way (for they have now the power complete and absolute as ever was exercised by a despot or a tyrant anywhere; they have the power over these five, six, or seven millions, whatever the number is, of free people) to give those people their rights under the Constitution, a Constitution that you and I have sworn to support and maintain, there will be disquiet, discontent, a feeling of injustice.

I trust that good time may come when even this will disappear, when this question shall be settled upon the basis of the Constitution, when every man shall have a right to vote. I now say that far above and far beyond the bill which is now pending or any other measure now before Congress is an act of Congress in pursuance of its plain power to secure to every man in the United States entitled to vote one free, honest vote, and to have that vote counted. Whenever Congress shall rise to the dignity of its power and pass a law uniform throughout the United States, affecting Massachusetts and Ohio as well as South Carolina and Mississippi, a law that will enable everybody having a right to vote to vote, and have it so guarded, so worded, that every man will feel that it is a just and fair law, when members of Congress can be elected by the voice of a free people, then there will be no further ground of complaint. You can arrange your matters as you please in your own States. Congress can exercise no authority in your local matters. It does not claim to exercise any; but it does claim the right to demand and insist upon, and to secure, if we have the majority, a law so fair in its character that it will not blush with shame anywhere; a law so powerfully executed that no man will dare to undergo its penalties, a law so just that the humblest negro armed by the Constitution with a vote may go to the ballot-box as freely as the proudest and haughtiest man in our country.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President, if this debate has accomplished nothing else, I think one thing has been ascertained which I have never heard admitted before by Senators so prominent as the Senator from Ohio and the Senator from Massachusetts; and it is this, that the right of suffrage was conferred upon the negro in the South, not because he was entitled to it, not because he was qualified to exercise it properly, but because of certain laws passed by certain Southern States immediately after the war, the black code, for instance, in my own State, which I am very glad to be able to say I voted against in the Legislature of 1866 because I thought it was unwise. I have no vindication or justification of those laws to-day. I think they were as unwise as the laws of Massachusetts and Connecticut were unwise which carried people to the stake because of their religious belief and for witchcraft.

Mr. HOAR. Not quite so bad as that.

Mr. BUTLER. They were dragged at the tail of a cart through the streets and towns of Massachusetts because they entertained certain opinions upon certain questions. I think that one perhaps was as unwise as the other, and I am inclined to think that we can properly plead the statute of limitations upon all of them. But, as I said, we have had an admission from the Senator from Ohio which will go a long way in throwing light upon any future discussion which may arise in this body or elsewhere upon the question of the right of the negro to vote in the South.

I am not going into the history of events in my State immediately following the war, further than to say this, and I think it is due to myself and due to those who agree with me that I should say it. When we surrendered our arms we did so with the full assurance and knowledge that the victorious party had the right to dictate its terms, and we had nothing to do except to comply with them. That was the sentiment and feeling which actuated every man who bore arms in the South. So, when Mr. Andrew Johnson sent his messengers to the South and said, "You have failed, and here are the terms upon which you shall be restored to your rights in the Union; among them are that you shall convene in convention, rescind and revoke the ordinance of secession, recognize the emancipation and freedom of your slaves, and you shall come back into the Union," so far as my own State is concerned I know that that was done, and done freely and willingly and honestly; and I know that the Legislature which followed in 1866, of which I was a member, was influenced by no other consideration than that of conforming to the letter to whatever terms the victorious North might have imposed upon us. If expatriation, if execution had followed, I should have expected and submitted to it without a murmur. I say that was the feeling of every man who had the interests of his country at heart, who acknowledged that he had failed, who felt that he had failed, and now he must conform to what was dictated to him by the conquering power.

That was the attitude. Mr. Andrew Johnson, a Republican Vice-President, succeeded to the Presidency by a crime which sent a thrill of horror through the South. When Mr. Andrew Johnson, occupying that attitude, Commander-in-Chief of the Army and Navy of the United States, said to the disbanded military of the Confederate States, "You must do so and so and you shall be recognized as equals," then, I insist, one of the most unfortunate days that ever came over this country, North or South, was that which brought about a conflict between the Chief Executive and the legislative department of the United States, Mr. Andrew Johnson insisting that "my policy" shall be carried out in the South, saying to us, "This is my policy; I say as Commander-in-Chief of the United States that this shall be the settlement upon which you are to return." When I acquiesced in that I was met by a conflict between himself and the legislative department of the Government, which had in the mean time inaugurated another policy for the settlement of the issues growing out of the war, and between the upper and the nether millstone of Executive policies on one side and legislative policies on the other the South was ground to powder.

The reconstruction followed; the fourteenth and fifteenth amendments followed. Mr. President, I should not have had the slightest trouble, and I do not believe any man in the South would have had the slightest trouble, in conforming to the requirements of those two amendments but for the fact that we were admonished and enjoined and besought by the President of the United States not to accept them. "My policy shall prevail." As I said, we were ground between these two conflicting powers.

Then comes the Senator from Ohio and says that because under Johnson's system of reconstruction you passed certain laws which practically put the negroes back into slavery, which Mr. Johnson approved in effect, if not in terms, we were compelled to give to the negro the franchise, the suffrage, not because he was entitled to it, not because he deserved it, not because he was qualified for it, but because, forsooth, you passed certain laws which infringed his rights, you people of the South, situated as I have described, are responsible for all the evils of which you complain; the class of people whom we, in effect, admit were not fit to exercise the right of suffrage are not allowed now to exercise that right; you deprive them of the right to vote by fraud and intimidation, and yet you have all the power which the increased representation gives you in the national councils.

Without meaning to recriminate upon anybody, it seems to me that those positions are inconsistent the one with the other. Let me say to the Senator from Ohio that when you people of the North give the negro all the rights that he is entitled to under the law you will find the South alongside of you. The Senator from Massachusetts smiles.

Mr. HOAR. I beg your pardon.

Mr. BUTLER. He smiles; and yet in the State of Massachusetts, where, I forget how many there are, perhaps there are 20,000 colored people, there is not a member of the colored race in any office of profit or trust within that State, to my knowledge. There is not a colored man in the State of Ohio occupying a position of profit and trust that I now recall.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Senator is mistaken about that.

Mr. BUTLER. The Senator from Ohio says I am mistaken. I am delighted, Mr. President, to hear him say so.

Mr. SHERMAN. I feel bound to say to the Senator that in Ohio there is no restriction whatever upon the right of any negro to vote, and we have had, and have now, a negro representing the second wealthiest city of our State in the Legislature.

Mr. BUTLER. I am delighted to hear it.

Mr. SHERMAN. And we have them holding office there.

Mr. BUTLER. I am delighted to hear that Ohio is making progress. [Laughter and applause in the galleries.] I am delighted, Mr. President, to hear it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will pause.

Mr. BUTLER. I am delighted to hear that a State which voted 50,000 majority against the right of the negro to vote is making progress and recognizing his right to hold office in that State.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will pause one moment. The Chair takes this occasion to admonish the galleries that demonstrations of applause or disapproval are violations of the rules of the Senate. The Chair is confident that this suggestion will be sufficient to prevent a repetition of the disorder that has just occurred. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. BUTLER. For one moment.

Mr. HOAR. I wish to correct the statement the Senator made about Massachusetts, if he will permit me.

Mr. BUTLER. Yes, sir.

Mr. HOAR. There is no restriction in Massachusetts, either in the constitution or in the legislation of her people, upon placing colored persons in important positions. We have had many excellent colored people in important offices, one of them lately, still, I have no doubt, a judge of an important court in Charlestown, several of them members of the Legislature, one of them a delegate-at-large to our national Republican convention; and they stand on their merits like other men.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President, I am delighted to hear it. I am delighted to congratulate Massachusetts upon having made progress.

Mr. HOAR. I rose, if the Senator will pardon me, that he might make progress himself.

Mr. BUTLER. I am making progress in a direction which perhaps may not be entirely agreeable to the Senator from Massachusetts. I congratulate Massachusetts that she is making progress.

The Senator from Ohio says and the Senator from Massachusetts says that there is no law of those respective States which discriminates against a man on account of color.

Mr. SHERMAN. They all vote freely.

Mr. BUTLER. They all vote freely, but by some curious hocuspocus mighty few of them hold office. How is that? There is no law of South Carolina, or of Mississippi, or of Louisiana, or of Georgia which discriminates against a man on account of his race, color, or previous condition of servitude, and yet in those States quite a number of the colored race are holding offices to-day, and one of the Southern States, North Carolina, is represented in the Congress of the United States by a colored man. So, when the Senator from Ohio and other Senators, rather in the style of lecture, say it is the duty of the South to do so and so, and then in a patronizing attitude say: "If you will do right towards the colored people all the friction will disappear between the sections," let me say to those Senators, if they will do right to the colored people a great deal of the friction will have disappeared.

This very day and this very hour and for the last week the newspapers have been teeming with accounts of white men in the Territory of Oklahoma, and Republicans among them, announcing to the world that if the colored people dared assert their rights to control that country by reason of their superiority in number they would be driven out at the point of the bayonet. In the State of Ohio and in the State of Indiana I have seen within the last month accounts of outrages upon colored people, pursuing them to the death by white mobs, and yet, Mr. President, I have not heard one syllable of protest, one word of inquiry from the Senators from those States calling upon Congress to ascertain whether or not the rights of American citizens have not been infringed. And when in conversation they are reminded of such occurrences they respond by saying: "Oh, these disturbances are not political; they are not on account of politics; they are personal."

Mr. President, conflicts between the two races occur in the North as they occur in the South. The white man, I care not whether he is in Massachusetts or in South Carolina, is going to assert his right to dominate the colored man in Ohio and Massachusetts as well as anywhere else. I say this is deplorable. I join the Senator from Ohio and the Senator from Massachusetts in the prayer, I was about to say, that the time will come, and may not be long postponed, when this feeling shall die out, and when the poor negro, who has been made the football of politicians long enough, may be left alone to work out his own career and fate.

The Senator from Ohio can not, with justice and with propriety, if he will pardon me for saying so, in view of the history of the past, charge upon the people of the South that they have intentionally and wantonly and disloyally nullified or abrogated or defied any law of Congress which the Supreme Court of the United States has admitted to be constitutional; and if the Senator had said, what I expected from one of his position and influence in the country, that our troubles result from errors on both sides, if he had admitted, which I think his position would have justified him in admitting, that whatever evils beset us now are the results of errors and mistakes on both sides, I should not have risen to say a word.

I admit, and I have no hesitation in admitting, that we have made mistakes in the South, but the Senator from Ohio would have the country believe that he and those who have been instrumental in bringing this condition of things upon the country are infallible, and have made no mistakes, have committed no errors, and they have not made allowances, and he does not make them now for the difficulties which surround the people in the South, although he has said so. He has put the suffrage (the ballot) in the hands of those who, he himself practically admits, were not fit to exercise it, and then complains that the South has not dealt with it as he thinks it ought to have dealt with it.

I have not referred to these things in any spirit of acrimony, I have not referred to them with a view of reviving any spirit of recrimination or animosity. I will join with the Senator from Ohio in saying that I believe the great body of the people of the North are kindly disposed to the people of the South, and I believe that that kindness has been very much stimulated, if I may use that expression, by the fact that they are sending their millions of treasure into that section for investment. And I will tell the Senator from Ohio another thing: whenever he carries out his threat, which I understood to be a threat, of another crusade upon the South through United States supervisors and United States marshals to dominate elections in that region, he will hear a fire in his rear from those very men from the North who have carried their money and invested it there, for there is no nerve so sensitive as the pocket nerve, and, if he will allow me to make a prediction, whenever he does enter upon that crusade he will find that the very men to whom he has referred will be arrayed side by side, shoulder to shoulder, through evil and good report, in preserving in the Southern States the same character of governments that exist there to-day, and why? Because they understand and know that it will be by the power and influence of just such governments as those that their investments in that section can be preserved.

He will find that whenever he attempts, if he shall do so, to re-establish the governments in the South which sprang from reconstruction, which left in their train a black mark of spoliation, of disgrace, of humiliation, which will always be a reproach upon the history of this country—whenever he attempts to resurrect and re-establish those governments in the South, as he seems anxious to do, those governments which brought so much humiliation upon his own party, those governments which were a disgrace to that era of our history, he will find a protest in his own State and in his own country which will cause him to hesitate before he carries it to its fullest extent.

I am not apologizing for, I am not now intending to approve or vindicate or sustain any acts of violence in the South. I deplore and deprecate them, as does every man who loves his country for the sake of its institutions. I would to God that we had such a condition of things that they would never occur again. But I think I am justified in saying that the more the solution of these questions is left to the people of that section the less they will recur.

I speak the sentiment, I believe, of every honorable man and woman in that country when I say that we are far more concerned and interested in the preservation of order and law in our midst than you can possibly be. I would not exchange the good order of society in the South for one day for all the political power that your negro suffrage has given us; I would not exchange one hour of composure in that country for a century of political power which the suffrage of the negro gave us in the South, and if I had the power to-morrow, speaking for myself, I would transfer every atom of it to you and wish you God-speed in the solution and management of it. But I do appeal to Senators and I do appeal to the people in the North to believe us when we say that we are far more interested in an orderly, humane, honest settlement of this question than you can possibly be.

The principle of justice has been suggested as one of the solutions. I do not know that any Senator can go further than myself in wishing justice to be done. We have tried to do justice to the negro as well as to the white man. We have tried sincerely and honestly to deal with this new condition of things and at the same time preserve our civilization and our property and our rights, but we found that the unbridled license of the reconstruction governments entailed upon us by negro suffrage jeopardized, threatened, and well-nigh destroyed the peace and quiet and order of the South.

So when we talk about justice we must not forget that there are two scales. The balance has two scales or two sides of the same scale, and we must always be careful in the administration of law that one side is not overloaded and burdened to raise the other out of existence and to destruction.

It is the most difficult and delicate of all duties of life to balance those scales equally. I repeat that we have tried to do it, and I therefore can not sit and patiently hear the Senator from Ohio charge the people of the section from which I come as entirely responsible for whatever there has been of friction between the sections, and I repeat now that we have every disposition to see that every man has his rights, and that time will come if left to the solution of the people who are interested in it.

I want to see the day when, as a Senator from Massachusetts said, the humblest citizen, whether he be white or mulatto or black, may enjoy his rights and freedom in his humble cot as unmolested as the most influential citizen of the country, and I want to see the time when the white laborer of the North may be relieved of the domination and power and control of the corporate and wealthy and influential employers of the North.

Mr. President, I really have been betrayed into saying a great deal more than I expected to say when I rose. I simply desired in a brief manner as I could—and I regret very much that I have detained the Senate as long as I have—to repel as well as I could some of the charges made by the Senator from Ohio, as I think, unjust to the people of the South. I have not gone into a great many questions which, perhaps, might have been discussed in connection with this subject. I did not propose to do so and do not care to do so now, but I repeat that a great many acts were done by the people of the South soon after the war which can not be justified. I repeat that I think they were unwise, that they were perhaps the incidents of the condition of things which surrounded us. I may say with equal truth, without being actuated by a spirit of reproach, that a great many things were done by the people of the North which could not be justified, but which were likewise the incidents of the passions which grew out of that great struggle.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Are there amendments in Committee of the Whole to the bill? If there are none, the bill will be reported to the Senate.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President—

Mr. CALL. Does the Senator from Massachusetts desire to take the floor?

Mr. HOAR. I rose to move an executive session unless some Senator wishes to pursue this discussion.

Mr. CALL. Before that is done—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Florida rise to the pending bill?

Mr. CALL. I ask the Senator from New Hampshire to yield to allow me to present a resolution.

Mr. BLAIR. I only want to observe that all this seems to prove the absolute necessity for establishing these schools [laughter], but to begin with the babies and build up new communities all the way through. I do this simply to suggest that the matter before the Senate is the education bill. These old folks can fight it out together. I hope they will have good fortune. We are dealing with the babies, the rising generation of the future.

Mr. CALL. Will the Senator from New Hampshire allow the pending bill to be laid aside informally?

Mr. BLAIR. What does the Senator desire?

Mr. CALL. I wish to present a resolution, and I ask the Senator to allow me to do so.

Mr. BLAIR. I have no objection if the education bill is not to be further discussed now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from New Hampshire claim the floor in his own right?

Mr. BLAIR. I do not care to hold the floor now.

Mr. HOAR. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. CALL. I ask the Senator to allow me to offer a resolution, in order that it may be printed and lie upon the table.

Mr. HOAR. If the Senator means to offer the same resolution which was partially read some time ago, I can not yield for that purpose, as I deem it out of order in open session.

Mr. CALL. I wish to have read from the table a notice of an amendment to the rules. I ask the Senator to allow that to be presented.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts moves that the Senate do now proceed to the consideration of executive business. Does he yield further to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. HOAR. I do not.

Mr. HAMPTON. May I ask the Senator from Massachusetts to withhold his motion for a moment for the purpose of allowing me to make a motion to reconsider the vote by which a bill reported from the Military Committee by me a few days ago was indefinitely postponed and have it placed upon the Calendar?

Mr. HOAR. I make no objection.

WILLIAM W. WEBB.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The title of the bill will be reported.

Mr. HAMPTON. It is the bill (S. 1808) for the relief of William W. Webb. I have been requested to have that bill placed upon the Calendar and let the report be printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The vote by which the bill was indefinitely postponed will be reconsidered and the bill placed on the Calendar with the adverse report of the committee, if there be no objection. The Chair hears none.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts moves that the Senate do now proceed to the consideration of executive business.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, March 13, 1890.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

The SPEAKER. The Chair wishes to present the following correction of reference. The bill (H. R. 3889) to restrict the sale of convict-made goods was referred to the Committee on Labor, and by that committee reported back for reference to the Committee on Commerce. In the absence of objection, the change of reference will be made.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT SACRAMENTO, CAL.

Mr. McKENNA. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to discharge the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union from the further consideration of the bill (S. 1477) to increase the appropriation for the erection of a public building at Sacramento, Cal., and put the same upon its passage.

The SPEAKER. The bill be read, subject to the right of objection. The bill was read at length.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I ask the regular order.

Mr. McKENNA. Will the gentleman consent to withhold his demand for the regular order and allow me to make a statement showing the necessity for this action?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Reserving the right, I have no objection.

Mr. McKENNA. Mr. Speaker, the first appropriation for this building was made in the Forty-eighth Congress and amounted to $100,000, of which amount $30,000 was expended in the purchase of a site. The site was insufficient, however, because of the fact that it left the building exposed to fire from adjacent buildings and did not accommodate the approaches to it. It was necessary, therefore, to expend a further sum for the purchase of the site. An opportunity was given to the Government to purchase cheaply, and the citizens of the city stepped forward and purchased the land themselves, holding it for the Government, the Government being allowed to purchase it at the same price.

In the last Congress $50,000 extra was appropriated, of which $10,000 was used for the purchase of the extra site. Now, in the plans of the Architect there was a mistake made which did not provide for a foundation. Further than that it was discovered that an old slough had passed diagonally across the site, and it was necessary to go below the slough in order to secure a proper foundation. This required the expenditure of $18,000 more.

The Architect reports that he can not erect a proper building there for this sum; and I hope, sincerely, that the gentleman from Kentucky will withdraw his objection and allow the bill to be considered at this time. If there is any amendment which the gentleman deems necessary to protect the interests of the Government I hope he will present it. I will state that this is identically the same as the House bill.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I do not know of anybody I would like to gratify more than my friend from California; but inasmuch as this day has been set apart for a particular order, a special work, I feel that we ought not to devote it to the consideration of any other propositions.

Mr. McKENNA. But if this encroaches in the least degree upon the time fixed for the consideration of that measure to which the gentleman refers I will withdraw it.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. But the trouble is if that bill is allowed to go in by unanimous consent, another from this side of the House will necessarily come up, and I think, therefore, these had better go over until some time when the House is not engaged in a special order.

Mr. McKENNA. As I understand, then, the objection of the gentleman is only temporary, and that this afternoon he will not insist upon it.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I should not like to commit myself to such an agreement as that, for I do not know what a day or an hour may bring forth.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made.

PACIFIC RAILROAD SECURITIES HELD BY THE GOVERNMENT.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, I am instructed by the Committee on Pacific Railroads to submit the following resolution and ask its immediate consideration.

The SPEAKER. The resolution will be read, subject to the right of objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby requested, if not incompatible with the public interest, to inform the House of Representatives, at as early a date as practicable, whether the Government of the United States is the owner or holder of any of the first-mortgage securities of any of the Pacific railroad companies which were aided by the Government, and, if so, the amount of such securities held or owned by the Government, when, and in what manner, and by what authority the same were acquired.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. HOLMAN. I do not object to the consideration of the resolution, but suggest to the gentleman that when calling upon the head of a Department for information it is not customary to employ the words "if not incompatible with the public interest." It is for the House to determine whether it is proper that such information should be furnished or not. In requesting information from the President it is entirely proper that these words should be incorporated, but when calling for such information from the head of a Department they should be omitted. I refer to the words "if not incompatible with the public interest."

Mr. DALZELL. I have no objection to striking them out.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. ROGERS. Is that the regular order?

The SPEAKER. It is not.

Mr. ROGERS. The regular order has been called for.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman call for the regular order?

Mr. ROGERS. I demand the regular order.

DENISON AND WASHITA VALLEY RAILROAD.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the morning hour, which begins at 12 o'clock and 20 minutes, and the call rests with the Committee on Indian Affairs. When the hour expired on yesterday the House was dividing on the demand for the previous question on the bill (H. R. 856) to amend section 1 and section 9 of an act entitled "An act to authorize the Denison and Washita Valley Railway Company to construct and operate a railway through the Indian Territory, and for other purposes," approved July 1, 1886, and the question recurs on the demand for the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANDERSON].

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by striking out the word "own" in the twelfth line of the bill.

The amendment was adopted.

The SPEAKER. The question is on ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time.

Mr. PERKINS. I believe there is a committee amendment.

The SPEAKER. That has been already adopted.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. PERKINS moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

RIGHT OF WAY ACROSS MILLE LACS INDIAN RESERVATION.

Mr. PERKINS. I call up for consideration the bill which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The bill was read, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 7754) granting right of way to Little Falls, Mille Lacs and Lake Superior Railroad across Mille Lacs Indian reservation.

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby granted to the Little Falls, Mille Lacs and Lake Superior Railway Company, a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of Minnesota, and its assigns, the right of way for the construction of a railroad through the Mille Lacs Indian reservation in said State. Such right of way shall be 75 feet in width on each side of the central line of said railroad, and said company shall also have the right to take, from the lands adjacent to the line of said road, material, stones, and earth necessary for the construction of said railroad; also grounds adjacent to such right of way for station buildings, depots, machine-shops, side-tracks, turnouts, and water-stations, not to exceed in amount 300 feet in width and 3,000 feet in length for each station to the extent of two stations within the limits of said reservation.

SEC. 2. That before said railroad shall be constructed through any land, claim, or improvement held by individual occupants, according to any treaties or laws of the United States, compensation shall be made to such occupant or claimant for all property to be taken or damage done by reason of the construction of said railroad. In case of failure to make satisfactory settlement with any such claimant the just compensation shall be determined as provided for by the laws of Minnesota enacted for the settlement of like controversies in such cases. The amount of damage resulting to the Mille Lacs Indians in their tribal capacity, by reason of the construction of said railroad through such lands of the reservation as are not occupied in severally, shall be ascertained in such manner as the Secretary of the Interior may direct and be subject to his final approval; but no right of any kind shall vest in said railway company in or to any part of the right of way herein provided for until plat thereof, made upon actual survey for the definite location of such railroad, and including grounds for station buildings, depots, machine-shops, side-tracks, turnouts, and water-stations, shall have been approved by the Secretary of the Interior, and until the compensation aforesaid shall have been fixed and paid and the consent of the Indians on said reservation as to the amount of said compensation shall have been first obtained in a manner satisfactory to the Secretary of the Interior. Said company is hereby authorized to enter upon such reservation for the purpose of surveying and locating its line of railroad: Provided, That said railroad shall be located, constructed, and operated with due regard to the rights of the Indians, and under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior shall prescribe: Provided, That no part of the lands herein authorized to be taken shall be leased or sold by the company and they shall not be used except in such manner and for such purposes only as shall be necessary for the construction and convenient operation of said railway, telegraph, and telephone lines, and when any portion thereof shall cease to be used, such portion shall revert to the nation or tribe of Indians from which the same shall have been taken.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. PERKINS moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

SALE OF CROW INDIAN RESERVATION, MONTANA.

Mr. PERKINS. I now call up the following bill.

The bill was read, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 526) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to procure and submit to Congress a proposal for the sale to the United States of the western part of the Crow Indian reservation, in Montana.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to proceed forthwith, by such agents or commissioners as he may appoint, not to exceed three in number, at a reasonable compensation to be fixed by him, to negotiate with the Crow tribe of Indians, in the State of Montana, for the purchase from them by the United States of all that portion of their reservation lying south of the Yellowstone River and west of the summit of the divide between Prior Creek and Clark's Fork River, in said State, and to procure the most favorable proposition at which the said Crow Indians will sell the lands aforesaid to the United States, and submit the same to Congress at the earliest practicable moment in the form of an agreement, subject to ratification by Congress.

SEC. 2. That such sum of money as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this act, not to exceed $5,000, is hereby appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, and the same shall be disbursed, upon the order of the Secretary of the Interior, for the purposes aforesaid.

Mr. KILGORE. Mr. Speaker, that bill can not be on the House Calendar.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not understand how it can be there either.

Mr. KILGORE. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that this is improperly on the House Calendar, and can not properly be considered in the morning hour.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is informed from the Clerk's desk that the bill has already been transferred to the Union Calendar, and was therefore not properly on the House Calendar.

Mr. PERKINS. I had overlooked the fact that it makes an appropriation.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered at this time.

The SPEAKER. The only way in which unanimous consent can be obtained would be for the gentleman from Texas to withdraw the point of order.

Mr. CARTER. I ask the gentleman from Texas to withdraw his point of order, so that this bill may be considered; and I will make a statement which I believe will prove satisfactory to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. KILGORE. While the committee have the right of way, I do not think they ought to interfere with the business that would properly come up for consideration in the morning hour.

Mr. CARTER. This will not require any debate, I will state to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. KILGORE. But it will interfere with the business that should be considered in the morning hour.

Mr. CARTER. I will state to the gentleman from Texas that it has been favorably reported by the committee.

Mr. KILGORE. It will necessitate going into Committee of the Whole, and that will involve the consumption of more time. I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas declines to withdraw his point of order.

RIGHT OF WAY THROUGH THE INDIAN TERRITORY.

Mr. PERKINS. I call up now the bill (H. R. 347) to grant the right of way to the Galena, Guthrie and Western Railway Company through the Indian Territory, and for other purposes.

The title of the bill was read, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 347) to grant the right of way to the Galena, Guthrie and Western Railway Company through the Indian Territory, and for other purposes.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, that bill is very long, as all these bills pertaining to granting right of way through the Indian Territory are, because of the many provisions in them for the purpose of protecting the rights of the Indians and all others, and providing for forfeitures. I therefore ask unanimous consent to dispense with the reading of the bill. It is unanimously reported by the committee, and has every safeguard in it that we have heretofore incorporated in these bills.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I would like to ask my colleague whether this bill makes any grants of ownership.

Mr. MCCREARY. I ask for the reading of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will proceed to read the bill.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Galena, Guthrie and Western Railway Company, a corporation created under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Kansas, be, and the same is hereby, invested and empowered with the right of locating, constructing, owning, equipping, operating, using, and maintaining a railway, telegraph, and telephone line through the Indian Territory, beginning at any point to be selected by said railway company on the south line of the State of Kansas, in the county of Cherokee, at or near the southwest corner of lot numbered 3, section numbered 14, township number 35, range number 21 east of the sixth principal meridian, and running thence by the most practicable route through the Indian Territory to the west line thereof, via, at or near Guthrie and Kingfisher or Lisbon, Indian Territory, with the right to construct, use, and maintain such tracks, turn-outs, sidings, and extensions as said company may deem to their interest to construct along and upon the right of way and depot grounds herein provided for.

SEC. 2. That said company is authorized to take and use, for all purposes of a railway and for no other purpose, a right of way 100 feet in width through said Territory, and to take and use a strip of land 200 feet in width, with a length of 3,000 feet in addition to right of way, for stations, for every 10 miles of the road, with the right to use additional ground where there are heavy cuts or fills as may be necessary for the construction and maintenance of the road-bed, not exceeding 100 feet in width on each side of said right of way, or as much thereof as may be included in said cut or fill: Provided, That no more than said addition of land shall be taken for any one station: And provided further, That no part of the lands herein authorized to be taken shall be leased or sold by the company; and they shall not be used except in such manner and for such purposes as shall be necessary for the construction and convenient operation of said railway, telegraph, and telephone lines, and when any portion thereof shall cease to be used, such portion shall revert to the nation or tribe of Indians from which the same shall have been taken.

SEC. 3. That before said railway shall be constructed through any lands held by individual occupants according to the laws, customs, and usages of any tribe of the Indians, nations, or tribes through which it may be constructed, full and complete compensation shall be made to such occupant for all property to be taken or damage done by reason of the construction of said railway. In case of failure to make amicable settlement with any occupant, such compensation shall be determined by the appointment of three disinterested referees, to be appointed, one (who shall act as chairman) by the President of the United States, one by the chief of the nation to which such occupant belongs, and one by said railway company, who, before entering upon the duties of their appointment, shall take and subscribe, before a district judge, clerk of a court, or United States commissioner, an oath that they will faithfully and impartially discharge the duties of their appointment, which oaths duly certified shall be returned with their award to, and filed with, the Secretary of the Interior within sixty days from the completion thereof, and a majority of said referees shall be competent to act in case of the absence of a member, after due notice; and upon the failure of either party to make such appointment within thirty days after the appointment made by the President, the vacancy shall be filled by the judge of the United States court of the district of Muscogee; upon the application of the other party the chairman of said board shall appoint the time and place for all hearings within the nation to which said occupant belongs. Each of said referees shall receive for his services the sum of $4 per day for each day they are engaged in the trial of any case submitted to them under this act, with mileage at five cents per mile. Witnesses shall receive the usual fees allowed by the courts of said nation; costs, including compensation of the referees, shall be made a part of the award and be paid by said railway company. In case the referees can not agree, then any two of them are authorized to make the award; either party being dissatisfied with the finding of the referees shall have the right, within ninety days after making of the award and notice of the same, to appeal by original petition to the courts of the Indian Territory at Muscogee, which court shall have jurisdiction to hear and determine the subject-matter of said petition according to the laws of the State of Kansas, providing for determining the damage when property is taken for railroad purposes. If upon the hearing of said appeal the judgment of the court shall be for a larger sum than the award of the referees, the costs of said appeal shall be adjudged against the railroad company. If the judgment of the court shall be for the same sum or less than the award of the referees, then the cost shall be adjudged against the appellant; when proceedings have been commenced in court the railway company shall pay double the amount of the award into court to abide the judgment thereof, and then have the right to enter upon the property sought to be condemned and proceed with the construction of the railroad.

Sec. 4. That said railway company shall not charge the inhabitants of said Territory a greater rate of freight than the rates authorized by laws of Kansas for services or transportation of the same kind: Provided, That passenger rates on said railway shall not exceed 3 cents per mile, Congress reserving the right to regulate the charges for freight and passengers on said railway and messages on said telegraph and telephone lines until a State government shall be authorized to fix and regulate the cost of transportation of persons and freight within its respective limits by said railway company, but Congress expressly reserves the right to fix and regulate at all times the cost of such transportation by said railway company whenever such transportation shall extend from one State into another, or shall extend into more than one State: Provided, however, That the rate of such transportation of passengers, local or interstate, shall not exceed the rates above expressed: And provided further, That said railway company shall carry the mail at such prices as Congress may by law provide, and until such rate is fixed by law the Postmaster-General may fix the rate of compensation.

Sec. 5. That said railway company shall pay to the Secretary of the Interior, for the benefit of the particular nation or tribe through whose lands said line may be located, the sum of $50, in addition to compensation provided for in this act, for property taken and damages done to individual occupants by the construction of the railway for each mile of railway that it may construct in said Territory: said payment to be made in installments of $1,250 as each working section of 25 miles of road is graded: Provided, That if the general council of either of the nations or tribes through whose lands said railway may be located shall, within four months after filing of the maps of definite location as set forth in section 6 of this act, dissent from the allowance provided for in this section, and shall certify the same to the Secretary of the Interior, then all compensation to be paid to such dissenting nation or tribe under the provision of this act shall be determined as provided for in section 3 for the determination of the compensation to be paid to the individual occupants of the lands, with the right of appeal to the courts upon the same conditions, terms, and requirements as therein provided: Provided further, That the amount of the award adjudged to be paid by said railway company for dissenting nation or tribe shall be in lieu of the compensation that said nation or tribe would be entitled to receive under the foregoing provisions; said company shall also pay, so long as said Territory is owned or occupied by the Indians, to the Secretary of the Interior the sum of $15 per annum for each mile of railway it shall construct in the said Territory. The money paid to the Secretary of the Interior under the provisions of this act shall be apportioned by him in accordance with the laws and treaties now in force among the different nations and tribes, according to the number of miles of railway that may be constructed by said railway company through their lands: Provided, That Congress shall have the right, as long as said lands are occupied and possessed by said nations or tribes, to impose such additional taxes upon said railway as it may deem just and proper for their benefit, and any Territory or State hereafter formed through which said railway shall have been established may exercise the like powers as to such part of said railway as may be within its limits. Said railway company shall have the right to survey and locate its railway immediately after the passage of this act.

Sec. 6. That said company shall cause maps, showing the route of its located line through said Territory, to be filed in the office of the Secretary of the Interior, and also to be filed in the office of the principal chief of the nations or tribes through whose lands said railway may be located, and after filing said maps no claim for a subsequent settlement and improvement upon the right of way shown by said maps shall be valid as against said company: Provided, That when a map showing any portion of said railway company's located line is filed, as herein provided for, said company shall commence grading said located line within one year thereafter or said location shall be void, and said location shall be approved by the Secretary of the Interior in sections of 25 miles before construction of any such section shall be begun.

Sec. 7. That the officers, servants, and employes of said company necessary to the construction and management of said road shall be allowed to reside, while so engaged, upon said right of way, but subject to the provisions of the Indian intercourse laws and such rules and regulations as may be established by the Secretary of the Interior in accordance with said intercourse laws.

Sec. 8. That the United States circuit and district courts for the Indian Territory, and such other courts as may be authorized by Congress, shall have, without reference to the amount in controversy, concurrent jurisdiction over all controversies arising between said Galena, Guthrie and Western Railway Company and the nations or tribes through whose territory said railway company shall construct its lines; said court shall have like jurisdiction, without reference to the amount in controversy, over all controversies arising between the inhabitants of said nation or tribe and said railway company, and the civil jurisdiction of said courts is hereby extended within the limits of said Indian Territory, without distinction as to citizenship of the parties, so far as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this act.

Sec. 9. That the said railway company shall build at least 100 miles of its railway in said Territory within three years after the passage of this act, and complete main line of the same within one year thereafter, or the right herein granted shall be forfeited as to that portion not built. That said railway company shall construct and maintain continually all fences, roads, and highway crossings, and necessary bridges over said railway wherever said roads and highways do now or may hereafter cross said railway's right of way, or may be by the proper authorities laid out across the same.

Sec. 10. That the said Galena, Guthrie and Western Railway Company shall accept this right of way upon the express condition, binding upon itself, its successors and its signs, that they will neither aid, advise, nor assist in any effort looking toward the changing or extinguishing the present tenure of the Indians in their lands, and will not attempt to secure from the Indian Nation any further grant of lands or its occupancy than is hereinbefore provided: Provided, That any violation of the conditions mentioned in this section shall operate as a forfeiture of all rights and privileges of said railway company under this act.

Sec. 11. That all mortgages executed by said company conveying any portion of its railway, with the franchises, that may be constructed in said Indian Territory, shall be recorded in the Department of the Interior, and the record thereof shall be evidence and notice of their execution, and shall convey all rights and properties of said company as therein expressed.

Sec. 12. That Congress may at any time amend, alter, or repeal this act, and the right of way herein and hereby granted shall not be assigned or transferred in any way or form whatever prior to the construction and completion of the road, except as to mortgages or other liens that may be given or secured thereon to aid in the construction thereof.

The SPEAKER. The question is upon the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I desire to offer the following amendments.

The Clerk read as follows:

In section 1, line 6, strike out the word "owning;" and in section 2, line 1, strike out "two" and insert the word "one."

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. On the first amendment, if the gentleman in charge of the bill is willing to accept it, I have nothing to say; otherwise I wish to discuss the matter.

Mr. PERKINS. I think, Mr. Speaker, that the amendment ought not to prevail, and for that reason I yield to the gentleman that he may debate it.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, the first amendment is as to the power conferred upon these corporations by Congress. There has, in this bill and the one that was considered yesterday, been introduced an entirely new proposition so far as I know anything about grants made by Congress to railroad companies, namely, the proposition of expressly giving to them ownership of the railways. In the acts of 1862-1864, the Pacific railway acts, in the Northern Pacific acts, in any acts that Congress has passed unless it may be within the last year or so, there never yet has been any railway company which has proposed a bill to Congress asking Congress to grant it the ownership of the highway. The reason for all that is this: A railway can only be built by the exercise of eminent domain. Domain is the high power of the sovereign alone, and can only be used upon the property of an individual for the acquisition of private property for public use. It has been held long ago in England that the king could not exercise eminent domain for the purpose of acquiring property for his own use. It must be for the use of the state; and if private property be not acquired for the use of the state, then it can not be acquired at all under eminent domain, for the reason that the state can not take the property of a private individual and give that property to another private person. The whole philosophy of the acquisition of property for public needs rests upon the theory of eminent domain; that the property taken is taken for a public use; and it has always been held that a railroad is and must be a public highway, because the Government can not take the property of a private individual and give it to some other private individual to be used as private property.

If you will consult Redfield on Railway Law, or Pierce or Schouler or, I think, Cooley, I risk the statement that you will everywhere find it held that a railway company does not acquire the ownership of the highway, because it is a public highway, but that it does acquire two franchises: First, the franchise of collecting tolls for the use of a public road, and, second, the franchise of collecting reasonable rates where the company acts as the carrier over that public highway. Now, this bill proposes to wipe out all of the land-marks as to public highways and as to the exercise of eminent domain, and it does it by inserting this word "owning." The grant to this company is in the following language:

And the same is hereby invested and empowered with the right of locating, constructing, owning, etc.

Now, there is no old grant of this kind which contains that word "owning," and if it be omitted, then the clause will read:

And the same is hereby invested and empowered with the right of locating, constructing, equipping, operating, using, and maintaining a railway, telegraph and telephone line through the Indian Territory.

How much more power can you give them than that? Wherein lies the necessity for giving them also the ownership of that which in law has always been recognized as a public highway, as public property, in which the company merely has certain franchises, namely, the franchise to collect toll and the franchise to operate. But it is proposed here to go beyond all that and to give this corporation expressly the ownership of the public highway.

Now, I suggest to the gentleman that this is a step which ought to be scrutinized very carefully. If Congress proposes at this time that the legal status of railways shall no longer be that of public highways, but that they shall become the private property of the men who own the stock, in the same sense that a farm is private property, if that status be established as the law, then the score of men who to-day own the stocks of the great railways of the United States will, under such a provision, become the owners of the highways just exactly as they own houses on Fifth avenue. That is the legal effect of the insertion of this word "owning" in the bill; and it is in order to prevent such legislation, to prevent such a precedent, and to preserve the rights of the people to the public highways that I move to strike out the word "owning."

The SPEAKER. The question is upon agreeing to the amendment of the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, I have not examined the act granting powers to the Union Pacific or the Northern Pacific Railroad Company, but the language employed in this bill is the language employed in every bill of this character that has been reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs giving to railway companies the right of way through the Indian Territory. We simply grant to this company the right to build, equip, maintain, and own a railway through that Territory, with a telegraph and telephone line, and we do not grant to them any other rights or privileges than we have granted under all similar acts; and, if my friend will examine this bill further, he will find in it provisions which expressly reserve to Congress beyond question the right to regulate and restrain this corporation as Congress may from time to time think it should be regulated and restrained. Every single right is reserved to the Government and we simply grant the company the right to maintain, equip, and own this railway, telegraph and telephone line through the Territory.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, in granting to this company the right to "own" this railway Congress establishes with the company a contract. Now, suppose that ten years hence you undertake to repeal this act, then the company will set up in court the claim that this is a contract and that it passed to the company certain contract rights so that Congress can not do anything even though it does repeal the act.

I do not know what the committee of which my friend speaks may have done as to other bills. The first of these bills that attracted my attention was the one we had up yesterday, but if the committee have presented bills here granting in express terms the ownership of public highways to corporations, then in my humble judgment they have done what Congress heretofore has never done or undertaken to do. I am positive in my recollection as to the language of the Pacific railway act, and will embody it in my remarks. It goes on as this bill does up to the point where "owning" would naturally come in, but there it stops.

Congress never gave the ownership of the public highway to anyone of these corporations that to-day are drawing the life-blood out of the people by extortionate freight rates, and if under this act or any similar act ownership is to be given to adventurers, to merciless speculators, then I would like to know upon what legal ground or upon what other ground the state may step in to regulate the rates. Under such legislation the railroad is no longer a public highway. It is private property. This bill is a ruthless exercise of the power of the state to take the property of John Jones or James Smith from him and give it to a corporation. That is the effect of it in law, and in my judgment it is an outrage.

The language of the Pacific railroad act touching the grant of power to the corporation is as follows:

And the said corporation is hereby authorized and empowered to lay out, construct, furnish, maintain, and enjoy a continuous railroad and telegraph line, etc.

So far from "ownership" being granted to the company, it is reserved to the Government by virtue of not being specified when all other items are specified. The ownership of the Pacific roads remains in the Government, because the company has no rights except those given by the charter, and ownership of the road is not one of them.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I would like to have the amendment reported.

The SPEAKER. It has been reported twice, but it will be again read.

The Clerk again read the amendment.

The question was taken upon the amendment of Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas, and the Speaker declared that the ayes seemed to have it.

Several MEMBERS. Division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 73, noes 19.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I call the attention of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. PERKINS] in charge of this bill to the provision in section 11 where this language is used:

And the record thereof shall be evidence and notice of their execution, and shall convey all rights and properties of said company as therein expressed.

That is, the record of the mortgage or mortgages that may be executed by the company. Now, I suggest to my friend that there should be added after the words "therein expressed" the words "subject to the provisions of this act." Otherwise you may confer upon the mortgages rights beyond those proposed to be created in the corporation.

The SPEAKER. There is an amendment pending, which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend section 2, line 4, by striking out "two" and inserting in lieu thereof "one."

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. That amendment is in section 2. I do not know that it is a matter of very great importance, but I want to call the attention of the chairman of the committee [Mr. PERKINS] to it. The bill proposes that there shall be a right of way 100 feet in width through said territory, and to take and use a strip of land 200 in width, with a length of 3,000 feet, in addition to right of way, for stations." As I understand it, that makes the grant at a station 300 feet wide and 3,000 feet long. Is that correct?

Mr. PERKINS. Yes; at stations.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. My amendment is to strike out "two" and insert "one;" so as to give the company its right of way 100 feet wide, and at stations an additional 100 feet; in other words, 200 feet wide by 3,000 feet long, and it seems to me that is enough.

Mr. PERKINS. The provision of the bill to which my friend refers is one that has been incorporated in all these bills. The right of way granted to this company is 100 feet in width except at stations.

The bill provides that there may be stations, one for each 10 miles; and where these stations are established or located it gives for depot purposes and right-of-way purposes an additional grant—a grant 200 feet in width and not to exceed 3,000 feet in length. The bill further provides that no one except operatives of the railroad company shall be permitted to reside upon or use the land thus given.

I have no interest in this matter other than to secure such legislation as may be fair and proper. If in the judgment of the House the bill grants too much, let it be amended. But the bill proposes simply to give in this case what we have given to every other company in this particular; and I see no reason why this company should be discriminated against by this House.

Mr. HARE. As has been remarked by the gentleman from Kansas, the bill proposes to give to this company only what has been granted in similar cases to other companies. If the amendment now offered be adopted a discrimination will be made, and this company will receive a less privilege than has heretofore been granted to other companies. I submit that in order to be fair the amendment ought to be rejected.

The question being taken on the amendment, it was rejected.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move to amend by adding to section 11 the words "subject to the provisions of this act."

Mr. PERKINS. There is no objection to that amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. PERKINS moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PALOUSE AND SPOKANE RAILWAY.

The next business in order, reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs, was the bill (H. R. 7509) granting to the Palouse and Spokane Railway a right of way through the Nez Percé Indian reservation in Idaho.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the right of way is hereby granted, as hereinafter set forth, to the Spokane and Palouse Railway Company, a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of Washington, for the extension of its railroad through the Nez Percé Indian reservation from a point on the northern boundary of said reservation on the Potlatch Creek, in section 16, township 37 north, range 3 west of the Boise meridian, in Nez Percé County, in the Territory of Idaho; thence extending in a southerly and southwesterly direction, following the valley of said Potlatch Creek to the Clear Water River; thence following the valley of said Clear Water River in a southwesterly direction to the western boundary of said reservation.

Sec. 2. That the right of way hereby granted to said company shall be 75 feet in width on each side of the central line of said railroad as aforesaid; and said company shall also have the right to take from said lands adjacent to the line of said road material, stone, earth, and timber necessary for the construction of said railroad; also ground adjacent to such right of way for station buildings, depots, machine-shops, side-tracks, turn-outs, and water-stations, not to exceed in amount 200 feet in width and 3,000 feet in length for each station, to the extent of one station for each 10 miles of road.

Sec. 3. That it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Interior to fix the amount of compensation to be paid the Indians for such right of way, and provide the time and manner for the payment thereof, and also to ascertain and fix the amount of compensation to be made individual members of the tribe for damages sustained by them by reason of the construction of said road; but no right of any kind shall vest in said railway company in or to any part of the right of way herein provided for until plats thereof, made upon actual survey for the definite location of such railroad, and including the points for station buildings, depots, machine-shops, side-tracks, turn-outs, and water-stations, shall be filed with and approved by the Secretary of the Interior, which approval shall be made in writing and be open for the inspection of any party interested therein, and until the compensation aforesaid has been fixed and paid; and the surveys, construction, and operation of such railroad, including charges of transportation, shall be conducted with due regard for the rights of the Indians and in accordance with such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may make to carry out this provision: Provided, That the consent of the Indians to said right of way shall be obtained by said railroad company in such a manner as the Secretary of the Interior shall prescribe before any right under this act shall accrue to said company.

Sec. 4. That said company shall not assign or transfer or mortgage this right of way for any purpose whatever until said road shall be completed: Provided, That the company may mortgage said franchise, together with the rolling stock, for money to construct and complete said road: And provided further, That the right granted herein shall be lost and forfeited by said company unless the road is constructed and in running order across said reservation within —from the passage of this act.

Sec. 5. That said railway company shall accept this right of way upon the expressed condition, binding upon itself, its successors and assigns, that they will neither aid, advise, nor assist in any effort looking towards the changing or extinguishing the present tenure of the Indians in their land, and will not attempt to secure from the Indian tribes any further grant of land or its occupancy than is hereinbefore provided: Provided, That any violation of the condition mentioned in this section shall operate as a forfeiture of all the rights and privileges of said railway company under this act.

SEC. 6. That Congress may at any time amend, add to, alter, or repeal this act.

Mr. PERKINS. I move to amend by striking out, in line 9 of section 2, the word "three" and inserting "two," so as to vest in this company for depot purposes a right of way of 200 feet in width instead of 300 feet. I think 200 feet will be sufficient; and with this amendment the bill will correspond with other bills which have been reported by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PERKINS. I move further to amend by inserting, in the blank in the eighth line of section 4, the words "two years."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOLMAN. I suggest to the gentleman from Kansas that this bill makes a larger grant of right of way than is common. It grants 75 feet on each side of the track of the road. I think that in general the amount granted for right of way has been 100 feet in all. I suggest that this bill be made to conform to our ordinary legislation in that respect.

Mr. PERKINS. I yield to the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. DUBOIS], who introduced this bill. He may be able to state some special reasons why the amendment should not be adopted.

Mr. HOLMAN. Before the gentleman from Idaho proceeds, I move to amend by striking out "seventy-five" and inserting "fifty" in the second line of section 2.

Mr. DUBOIS. Mr. Speaker, the country through which this road is to run is in many places rolling and mountainous, and for that reason the right of way was made a little larger than usual. The peculiar character of the country was taken into consideration in framing the bill. I do not think that a right of way 150 feet in width would be too large.

The amendment of Mr. HOLMAN was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. PERKINS moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. PERKINS. This concludes the business which our committee has the right to call up under the rule; but if there is no objection I would like to call up the bill which I brought to the attention of the House a few moments ago—the bill introduced by the gentleman from Montana [Mr. CARTER]. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of that bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not think it proper during this hour to submit requests for unanimous consent. The next committee in order is the Committee on Territories.

Mr. BAKER. On behalf of the Committee on Territories, I send to the desk several bills which the committee desire to have considered. They are all short.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York must submit the bills one at a time. The Clerk will read the first bill submitted by the gentleman.

WAGON-ROAD IN IDAHO TERRITORY.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 1590) to ratify an act entitled "An act to provide for a wagon-road between Mount Idaho, in Idaho County, and Little Salmon Meadows, in Washington County," in Idaho Territory.

Be it enacted, etc., That the act of the Legislative Assembly of the Territory of Idaho, passed February 2, 1889, entitled "An act to provide for a wagon-road between Mount Idaho, in Idaho County, and Little Salmon Meadows, in Washington County," be, and the same is hereby, ratified and confirmed. The time for the completion of said road shall be extended one year.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BAKER moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

FEES IN TERRITORIES OF NEW MEXICO AND ARIZONA.

Mr. BAKER. I am directed by the Committee on Territories to call up from the House Calendar for consideration at this time the bill (H. R. 3940) to amend an act entitled "An act to extend the fees of certain officers over the Territories of New Mexico and Arizona."

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act of the Congress of the United States entitled "An act to regulate the fees and costs to be allowed clerks, marshals, and attorneys of the circuit and district courts of the United States, and for other purposes," approved February 26, 1853, and section 837 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, is extended to the Territories of New Mexico and Arizona, and shall apply to the fees of all officers in such Territories, but the district attorney shall not, by fees and salary together, receive more than $5,000 per year, and all fees or moneys received by him above said amount shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. HOLMAN. I should like to inquire of the gentleman from New York whether the effect of this bill is to increase the fees and salaries of these officers. Before we are called upon to vote on it we should know what the effect of the measure is.

Mr. BAKER. I will yield the floor to the gentleman from Arizona or to the Delegate from New Mexico to explain the bill. If they are not present, I will yield to the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. DUBOIS].

Mr. DUBOIS. The other States and Territories provide that the attorneys' fees shall be $5,000 a year, as the maximum, but in Arizona and New Mexico they are limited to $3,500 a year. There is no reason why the exception should be made, as there is just as much business done there as in the other States and Territories. This bill merely provides that the maximum shall be the same in Arizona and New Mexico. The bill was introduced by the Delegate from New Mexico [Mr. JOSEPH], and has been reported back from the Committee on Territories.

Mr. HOLMAN. Are those the only two exceptions—Idaho and Arizona?

Mr. DUBOIS. Not Idaho, but Arizona and New Mexico.

Mr. HOLMAN. Those are the only two exceptions?

Mr. DUBOIS. I think so.

Mr. HOLMAN. It is proposed to fix the fees as in the other Territories. It proposes to limit the maximum to $5,000 a year.

Mr. McMILLIN. The effect will be to allow the fees to reach that amount. The bill does not make an appropriation out of the Treasury.

Mr. DUBOIS. It does not, but merely limits the fees to be charged. The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BAKER moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

OKLAHOMA.

The SPEAKER. Sixty minutes having elapsed, in accordance with the provisions of the resolution adopted by the House yesterday, the House will now resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering the Oklahoma bill, and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PAYSON] will take the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole, and will resume consideration of the bill (S. 895) to provide a temporary government for the Territory of Oklahoma, and the Clerk will read the pending amendment, moved by the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. PEEL].

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 37, after the word "act," insert the following: "Provided, That nothing herein contained shall in any way change the possession, legal or equitable title to that part of the Indian Territory known as the Cherokee Outlet, and."

The CHAIRMAN put the question and said: The yeas seem to have it. Mr. PEEL demanded a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 44, noes 70.

Mr. HOOKER demanded tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and Mr. HOOKER and Mr. PERKINS were appointed.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 38, noes 77.

So the amendment was disagreed to.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask, by unanimous consent, to make a correction in the amendment I offered yesterday. It will be found on page 3233 of the RECORD. I have submitted it to the gentleman in charge of the bill.

Mr. PERKINS. There is no objection to it.

The CHAIRMAN. Unanimous consent is asked by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] to move the following amendment, to correct an error in an amendment previously offered by him and adopted by the committee.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert, after the words "Indian Territory" the words "or Territory created by this act" and strike out the words "said Territory" and insert the words "either of said Territories."

Mr. McRAE. What section?

Mr. HOLMAN. The tenth.

The CHAIRMAN. So as to make the amendment read as follows:

Provided, however, That no part of the land embraced within the Territory hereby created shall inure to the use or benefit of any railroad corporation (except the rights of way and land for stations heretofore granted to certain railroad corporations), nor shall any provision of this act or any act of any officer of the United States done or performed under the provisions of this act or otherwise invest any corporation owning or operating any railroad in the Indian Territory, or Territory created by this act, with any land or right to any land in either of said Territories, and this act shall not apply to or affect any lands which, upon any condition, on becoming a part of the public domain, would inure to the benefit of or become the property of any railroad corporation.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move the following amendment, to come in at the end of the section.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add the following:

"And any question which shall arise under this provision shall be referred by the Secretary of the Interior to the Attorney-General with his opinion thereon."

Mr. McRAE. What section is that?

Mr. HOLMAN. Section 10.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STONE, of Missouri. I move after the word "said," in the eighth line of section 10, to insert "except section 2301 of the Revised Statutes, which shall not apply." Also insert the same after the word "States" in the thirty-fourth line.

I ask the gentleman from Kansas in charge of the bill whether he has any objection to the exception of the commutation clause of the homestead law.

Mr. PERKINS. I do not know there is any objection to that.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TARSNEY. I move the following amendment:

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend section 10 by adding thereto the following proviso:
"Provided further, That the lands in this section declared a part of the public domain of the United States and hereby opened to settlement are hereby created into a public land district, and the President is hereby empowered and directed to locate land offices for the same in said district, and to appoint, in conformity with existing law, a register and receiver for said land office; and for the purpose of carrying out this provision the sum of $2,500, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated."

Mr. PERKINS. If the gentleman will permit me to suggest to him, I think we have already in the bill such a provision; but if as we proceed we find there is no such provision I am perfectly willing that he shall have permission to return to this portion of the bill and offer it.

The CHAIRMAN. If, then, the gentleman will withhold his amendment for the present with that understanding—

Mr. PICKLER. Let me ask, is this for the establishment of a land office in No Man's Land?

Mr. TARSNEY. Yes. I will withhold it for the present.

Mr. BARNES. Mr. Chairman, I have certain amendments which I would like to offer to this bill, and which relate to the sections towards the close of the bill, namely, sections 29, 30, 36, and 37. I would like to have the consent of the committee to present these amendments now, have them read for information, and considered as pending, so that when the committee rises they may be reported to the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent to have the amendments which he suggests read, first for information, and then considered as pending in case the sections of the bill to which they are applicable shall not be reached for discussion and amendment before the hour fixed by the House for the committee to rise is reached. They will be read subject to the right of objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend section 29 by inserting in line 18, after the word "Congress," the following words:

"Provided, however, That the judicial tribunals of the Indian Nation shall retain exclusive jurisdiction in the civil and criminal cases arising within their country in which members of the nations, by nativity or adoption, shall be the only parties, or when the cause of action shall arise in the Cherokee Nation."

Amend section 30, line 73, of the bill by inserting, after the word "Territory," the following:

"Provided, however, That the members of the five civilized nations of Indians shall not be subject to the said laws."

Amend section 30 by adding, after the word "corporations," in line 77, the words "other than members of either of the civilized nations of Indians." On line 93, after the word "the," insert "courts of the," and after the word "nations," in the same line, insert the word "exclusive;" so as to make the sentence read:

"But nothing in this act shall be so construed as to deprive any of the courts of the civilized nations of exclusive jurisdiction over all cases."

Also amend by striking out sections 36 and 37 of the bill.

Mr. CULBERSON, of Texas. If, as I understand the request of the gentleman, that these be considered as pending amendments, I ask to have the first one read again.

The CHAIRMAN. They are reported now only for the information of the House, and the gentleman asks unanimous consent that they may be considered as pending.

Mr. CULBERSON, of Texas. I ask for the reading of the first amendment again.

The amendment was again read.

Mr. CULBERSON, of Texas. I will have to object to that unless the privilege is given to discuss it when it is considered. That is a far-reaching amendment to this bill, and I would like it to be withdrawn, or else I shall feel compelled to withhold consent to the other amendments being offered.

The CHAIRMAN. It is a matter for the committee to determine. Unanimous consent is asked. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

Mr. PERKINS. I did not understand that the consent was asked for present consideration.

The CHAIRMAN. It was not.

Mr. BARNES. I will withdraw the amendment just read for the present.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will then regard unanimous consent as having been given to the pendency of the other amendments in the absence of objection, the first amendment read being withdrawn.

The Chair hears no objection.

The Clerk read section 11 of the bill, as follows:

Sec. 11. That the procedure in applications, entries, contests, and adjudications in the Territory of Oklahoma shall be in form and manner prescribed under the homestead laws of the United States, and the general principles and provisions of the homestead laws, except as modified by the provisions of this act and the acts of Congress approved March 1 and 2, 1889, heretofore mentioned in this act, shall be applicable to all entries made in said Territory, and no patent shall be issued to any person who is not a citizen of the United States at the time he makes final proof. Provided, That where the final decision of the Secretary of the Interior in any land contest arising in the Territory of Oklahoma will, in his opinion, affect a class of cases, or furnish a precedent for the future action of the register and receiver of any land office therein, or of the Commissioner of the General Land Office, or of the Secretary of the Interior in relation thereto, the Secretary of the Interior shall, on application of the Attorney-General, on behalf of the United States, or of any party to such contest, if made within sixty days after the rendition of such decision, cause such case, with all the papers, proofs, and documents pertaining thereto, to be transmitted to the supreme court of the District of Columbia, and the case shall there be tried de novo on the record thus furnished as if originally commenced therein, with the right of appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States as in other cases, without regard to the value of the land in controversy.

Mr. McRAE. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend section 11 by striking out all after the word "proof" in the eleventh line.

Mr. PICKLER. That is the same as my amendment.

Mr. TARSNEY. And mine.

Mr. McRAE. The proviso to this section ought not to be adopted, and hence I have made the motion to strike it out. It is enough, I think, to require the settlers to satisfy the Department, without permitting the Department after years of delay and vexation to turn them into the courts of this city where their claims may never be decided. This is a departure from the well established methods of procedure in the Department of the Interior for adjusting such cases. There is no necessity for it and no good will come from it. The mode of procedure in the courts and rules of evidence applicable to trials there of causes between individuals are not applicable to these cases. It is a system that has grown up in the Department, and unlike anything or any other tribunal in this country, but admirably adapted to the settlement of all questions arising upon applications to enter public lands. These questions belong to the executive department of the Government and it should be required to settle them in accordance with present law and the regulations now in force.

We have had no trouble in the settlement of these matters heretofore except from delay, and if this amendment is not agreed to and this bill ever becomes law it will add to the hitherto long delays, and will also give an advantage to parties who are able to go to the courts over those who are poor and not able to follow them to this city. If they must go to the courts at all, let us do them the justice and fairness to open the courts having jurisdiction over the litigants and the subject of the litigation. Why should such jurisdiction be conferred upon the supreme court of the District? It is a wrong upon the bona fide settlers for which there is no excuse whatever, and I am surprised that there is such provision in the bill.

Mr. PICKLER. Mr. Chairman, the amendment of the gentleman from Arkansas is identical with the one that I offered on yesterday. But there are other reasons why, in my opinion, that portion of the bill should be stricken out.

The land laws, as at present in force, are amply sufficient for the disposition and settlement of such questions as may arise under this bill at any time. Now, it is provided here that after a contested claim from Oklahoma is followed through all of the local land offices, then to the Commissioner of the General Land Office, and, finally, to the Secretary of the Interior, and a decision is made by him, then that the parties may have the case certified to the Attorney-General of the United States, and have it tried here in the supreme court of the District of Columbia. What is the object of that? Why not allow these people in Oklahoma to take their lands and have the contest settled as in any other Territory of the United States? Why should there be a difference in that regard?

But, Mr. Chairman, the point about this provision, which we desire to strike out, is directly in the interest of these men who entered that Territory contrary to the President's proclamation.

A MEMBER. The "sooners."

Mr. PICKLER. Yes; the "sooners." This is directly in their interest, or that is what it will result in. For, Mr. Chairman, if in the course of the settlement of these cases out there any one can get up a leading case that suits their views, these people will see that it shall be placed in the supreme court of the District of Columbia. So these men can combine together and say to the settler, "We will compel you to go to the District of Columbia or you will settle with us here." And so it will force the man who is unable to follow in this unnatural route, outside of the lines of the Land Department, in a line unprecedented, it will compel him to accept their terms. I believe that there is no other case in such contest between claimants to public lands provided in the States in this country, that places them in the supreme court of the District of Columbia.

Another thing, Mr. Chairman: if this obtains, if this provision is not amended and such case is certified (and the "sooners" will have such a case certified without doubt), the next move will be to order the local land offices and the contestants in the Land Department to wait the decisions of the court; and so the settlers of Oklahoma will be compelled to retain possession of their land and law it here at Washington in the supreme court of the District of Columbia.

Further than that, there will arise new rules of construction. We are dealing with public lands outside of the regular line now; and it seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that there will be interminable difficulties that it is not necessary to burden these people with. I think that amendment should prevail, to strike out this whole provision; and then, gentlemen, you leave the people there as in other land contests, just as they are left in the State of Minnesota and in the States of Dakota or any other Western State. I do not understand why this amendment should appear to impose restrictions on these people.

Mr. STONE, of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say just a word in addition, and in the same line as the remarks submitted by the gentleman from South Dakota. This legislation proposed in the proviso to this section is certainly exceptional and unusual. It is a radical departure from the rule that has heretofore obtained in the administration of the public-land laws. I am unable to conceive of any reason why the same rules of administration should not govern in the disposition of the public lands of the Territory of Oklahoma which obtain in the disposition of those lands elsewhere throughout the country.

But I desire to call the attention of the committee especially to this feature: I am advised there are tracts of land in this Territory which are embraced within the corporate limits as laid out and defined in towns; that persons who entered the Territory before they were authorized to do so by the proclamation of the President, and it may be those who entered afterwards, who have laid claim to those lands, in contravention of the law, as homesteaders, are now entering contests, claiming the right to carry them to patent.

Now, if this is permitted, Mr. Chairman, and if these claims can be carried into the Supreme Court and an adjustment of them delayed from year to year and almost indefinitely, the result will be that many people now settled upon these lands who have improved lots laid out upon these lands as part of a city will be compelled, in order to enjoy their titles and in order to utilize their titles, to go to these fraudulent claimants and buy them out at such figures as they may be able to agree upon.

Now, it seems to me, sir, in view of that condition of things, that this provision ought to be eliminated from this bill, and contests of whatever character should be initiated and prosecuted to a conclusion under the law which obtains in reference to all the rest of the public lands of the country.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Arkansas.

Mr. SPRINGER. I desire to be heard.

Mr. PICKLER. I desire to accept the amendment of the gentleman from Arkansas.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment of the gentleman from Arkansas is the pending amendment.

Mr. SPRINGER. I move to strike out the last word. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman from Missouri who has just addressed the committee will suggest any amendment which will facilitate a more speedy determination of every question involved, I will, so far as I am concerned, take pleasure in supporting it.

My object in supporting this proposition is to favor such measures as will bring to a speedy determination the controversies in that country, and such a determination as will alone quiet everything—that is, a decision of the highest judicial tribunal in the land. I do not think that any gentleman here or any citizen of the United States can feel that his property rights will be jeopardized in the slightest by having a question relating to them submitted to the Supreme Court of the United States. I have differed with that distinguished tribunal on many occasions, but these occasions have related more to questions of public policy than to the law as it affects the rights of individuals; and I say here that I challenge contradiction of the statement, as to property rights that are involved in this country, they secure in the Supreme Court of the United States as near justice as can be hoped for in this world. Gentlemen who are afraid to trust controversies in regard to the laws and to homes upon the public domain to that tribunal must suggest some other way to me that will be better and further removed from prejudice before I will consent to deprive that great tribunal of the right to finally determine who is entitled to homesteads upon the public domain.

Mr. STONE, of Missouri. Just a moment.

Mr. SPRINGER. In a moment. Does the gentleman desire to ask me a question?

Mr. STONE, of Missouri. I desire to make a reply of one moment to your observation.

Mr. SPRINGER. I have not concluded my remarks. I may not have understood the gentleman. The object of this provision is not to take away from these people the right to have their cases tried and not to transfer them to the Supreme Court; but one case may be taken as a sample case:

Provided, That where the final decision of the Secretary of the Interior in any land contest arising in the Territory of Oklahoma will, in his opinion, affect a class of cases or furnish a precedent for the future action of the register and receiver of any land office therein, or of the Commissioner of the General Land Office, or of the Secretary of the Interior in relation thereto, the Secretary of the Interior shall, on application of the Attorney-General, on behalf of the United States, or of any party to such contest, if made within sixty days after the rendition of such decision, cause such case, with all the papers, proofs, and documents pertaining thereto, to be transmitted to the supreme court of the District of Columbia, and the case shall there be tried de novo on the record thus furnished as if originally commenced therein, with the right of appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States as in other cases, without regard to the value of the land in controversy.

Now, this case must, in the opinion of the Secretary of the Interior, first be such a one as to furnish a precedent in a large class of cases; otherwise it can not be taken to the Supreme Court in this way; and it is for the purpose of getting the decision of the highest court of the country and for the advantage of a large number of the people that this provision was inserted. It will entirely depend upon the discretion of the Secretary, because in the committee that was discussed, and the words "in his opinion" were inserted, so that if he were not of the opinion that it reflected a large number of cases he could refuse to certify the case to the Supreme Court.

Mr. McRAE. Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to the amendment to strike out the last word. As has been said by the gentleman from South Dakota and the gentleman from Missouri there can be no use whatever for this provision unless it be to enable the "sooners" to get their cases into the courts where they can freeze out, as it were, the poor men who have superior rights but less money. What is meant by a class of cases? What other class of people would make a case? The homestead law is the only public-land law that operates there, and certainly we do not need the supreme courts of this District and of the United States to settle the qualifications of applicants and to determine who applied first. The truth is there are certain parties who have claims that they know will not be recognized by the Department and they want a chance to litigate and delay in the hope of getting a compromise.

I believe that this is an effort, though not so intended by the committee who reported the bill, in the interest of those who have entries that they made in violation of the law and of the proclamation of the President. It is an effort and will have the effect to drag the people who are contesting those claims into courts they know nothing of and which they can not attend by reason of the distance. Justice delayed is justice denied; and to tell the honest settlers in Oklahoma that they can only get their homesteads at the end of contests that must or may go to the Supreme Court of the United States is in effect denying them their rights. It will cost them more than their claims are worth.

Why, sir, we all know that even individual litigants with means to go to that court and something to warrant litigation can not get their cases decided within three or four years; yet instead of relieving the court it is proposed by this to send them a new class of cases. Of all the courts in the United States I think the supreme court of the District of Columbia is the least fitted for such cases. I say this not because they are not able men and good judges, but because this court sitting here is composed of men who perhaps never saw an acre of public land, and who probably never had anything to do with a contested-land case as a court. Why, I ask, does the committee come so far in order to get this court?

Mr. PETERS. If the gentleman will allow me a suggestion, the supreme court of the District of Columbia is as far behind with its business as the Supreme Court of the United States is.

Mr. McRAE. I thank the gentleman for the information. That being so, it will be two or three years' more delay for such cases. That may be the reason for selecting this tribunal.

The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] talks about the learning and ability of the Supreme Court of the United States. No gentleman on this floor has more respect for that great court than I have, but I say it is a mockery upon justice to tell the settlers on the public lands in this new Territory that their titles must remain in dispute and clouded until their cases are reached upon the overcrowded docket of this court and decided. No, Mr. Chairman, let these people take their chances under the laws that were in existence at the time the entries were made, as other contestants must do, and abide the result. I repeat again that if there must be a court for this purpose give them a court where they live, and give them the right of trial by a jury of their peers.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. McRAE].

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I want to suggest briefly that the conditions under which Oklahoma was settled were rather anomalous, so that what is true of the growth, development, and settlement of other sections of the country is hardly true of Oklahoma. As is known to members of this House, the bill which provided that that country should be opened to settlement directed that the President of the United States should issue his proclamation and should designate a day and an hour at which settlers should be permitted to enter, to occupy, and possess these lands. Notice was given to all sections of the country of that fact and of that date, and settlers by thousands went there and waited upon the borders of the Territory for the time to arrive when they might enter and take possession, and, as a result, towns grew in the Territory of Oklahoma from nothing in the morning to a population of 10,000 when the sun went down.

Nothing like it ever occurred before in the history of this country, and, as suggested by one gentleman who has participated in this discussion, contests exist there between homestead claims and town sites which involve many thousands of dollars. Very important controversies exist there, involving very valuable property, controversies involving, perhaps, larger values than any which have ever heretofore arisen in an agricultural section of country. It was the judgment of the Committee on Territories considering this bill, in view of these conditions and facts, that certain test cases might be selected and that a decision might be obtained from some court of competent jurisdiction where these questions could be deliberately and judiciously settled, and settled—I will not say more intelligently, but perhaps more in keeping with the spirit of the institutions of our country than they could be in the Land Office or in the Interior Department.

It was in that view that the committee thought it was right and fair to authorize the Secretary of the Interior, where he found that a case involved many others of a like character, so that a test case could be made, to permit such test case to be taken to the supreme court of the District of Columbia, with the right of appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States. My own judgment as a member of the committee was that perhaps it would be better to send such cases to the courts of the Territories rather than to the supreme court of the District of Columbia or the Supreme Court of the United States; but the judgment of the committee was that, the records being here in Washington, the papers being here, the evidence being here, a test case could be sent to the court of the District of Columbia with less trouble and less cost to litigants than would be involved in sending it to the courts of the Territories. In that view this provision was incorporated in the bill.

Personally, I have no feeling whatever upon the subject. The committee thought, in view of the interests involved and in view of the value of some of the claims in dispute, that it was but fair and right that an additional investigation might be given to some of these cases as test cases, and a decision obtained which, as suggested, would be, perhaps, more in keeping with the genius and spirit of our institutions than a decision made in the Land Office or the Interior Department.

Mr. PICKLER. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. PERKINS. Certainly.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. PERKINS. I move to strike out the last word, in order that I may have an opportunity to answer the gentleman's question.

Mr. PICKLER. I desire to ask the gentleman whether it is not true that the only class of persons interested in contests, the only persons that can be properly denominated a class, and who might avail themselves of the benefit of this provision, are the men known as "sooners?"

Mr. PERKINS. Oh, no.

Mr. PICKLER. Who else are there?

Mr. PERKINS. The case of any man whose rights are affected by an adverse decision comes under this provision, provided the Secretary of the Interior on reviewing the case thinks that it may be made a test case, that many other cases of a like class will be affected by its decision.

Mr. PICKLER. One man would not be a "class." There is no class there except the class of "sooners."

Mr. PERKINS. There are many others.

Mr. PICKLER. Who are they?

Mr. PERKINS. Why, the honest settlers.

Mr. SPRINGER (to Mr. PICKLER). Why, the question of priority of location involves more cases than the question to which you have referred.

Mr. PICKLER. Priority of location is the very question adjudicated by the Land Department more than any other question coming to the Department from the States and Territories. Why should we want a different tribunal in this case?

Mr. SPRINGER. Because this is a different condition of things. The settlers there came into the Territory at a signal; people entered at one time all along the line for a mile.

Mr. PICKLER. This question of priority of location is one coming up in all matters of disputed settlement.

Mr. SPRINGER. But in none like this.

Mr. STOCKDALE. Mr. Chairman, I have not occupied the floor to any extent on this bill, and I desire to say a word on this amendment. I have always been in favor of the Oklahoma bill; voted for it in all its phases, and have always been here when it was under consideration. But with reference to this amendment I wish to say that with such a provision incorporated in the bill I certainly should hesitate to support the measure further.

It has been said by the chairman of the committee that the records concerning these land questions are here, and that a party could get into the courts of the District of Columbia more easily, perhaps, than into a court in Oklahoma. Is it to be said that it is easier to transport litigants from Oklahoma to Washington City than it is to send transcripts of the records from Washington City to Oklahoma? Cheaper! Why, there is not a transcript in any case to be tried there that will cost more than from $15 to $25. Now, a man can not come here from Oklahoma and get back home, living in the cheapest sort of a way while here, for less than $100.

Is it more in conformity with our institutions to try a man's case 1,400 miles away from his home than to try it where he resides? I hope this Government or this Congress will not assume for the District of Columbia that there is more virtue and more intelligence here than among the people of any State or Territory of the Union. There is too much of this sentiment growing up in the country already. Unless we are to legislate solely in the interests of the rich and powerful, it is time we should take into consideration somewhat the right of the poor man. The very circumstance detailed by the chairman of the committee—men going into that Territory by tens of thousands in a day—is a circumstance in favor of my position. We all know that men seeking to settle on these lands were hanging around the borders of that Territory until in their necessities they had disposed of almost everything they had except their fire-arms. They never disposed of them, although they were not in the South. Those men went in there and entered upon their land. Now powerful corporations or wealthy individuals come in and undertake to contest the title to these lands with a poor settler who has nothing but his teams and his wife and his children.

The representatives of these wealthy claimants say to this poor settler, "We will take you to the District of Columbia, to the Supreme Court of the United States to determine this question." The poor settler at once gives up to the rich and powerful contestant; the settler is turned off his land. And the Congress of the United States says, "This is more in keeping with the genius of our institutions!" If this practice proceeds it will be more in keeping with the genius of our institutions to oppress the poor in favor of the rich.

I am entitled to say this by another circumstance, one which occurred in this House a few days ago.

In a bill presented here establishing land offices there was a provision by which, if a poor man had not money enough to pay his witnesses, he would be enabled to compel them to attend at the land office and give in their evidence. More than half the States of this Union have statutes of that sort: to enable a poor litigant to secure a fair trial by compelling the attendance of witnesses, even if he is unable to pay them. But that provision was stricken out of the bill in this House upon motion, without debate. So by the action of this House it is provided that at the land offices in the Northwest a man who is able to pay his witnesses and keep them at the land office may laugh in scorn and derision at the poor man who is unable to pay the expense of the attendance of witnesses. Because he is poor the courts refuse to summon his witnesses, the sheriff refuses to serve the process, the witnesses refuse to attend. And that is the judgment of this House upon the conduct of land contests in the Northwest, and all over the Union, so far as that is concerned.

Now, there comes here an analogous proposition—a proposition that a litigant in any contest arising in this Territory may be compelled to come to this city, and to remain here at an expense of $1 a day while awaiting the slow processes of the courts of the District of Columbia and of the Supreme Court of the United States, where, as we know, cases remain on the docket unheard for years. We propose to say to the poor litigant, "You may have your land, provided you have money enough to pay for the transportation of witnesses or money enough to bring your transcripts here and fight your case." Under such circumstances the contest to the settler in necessitous circumstances is from the beginning hopeless, because he has neither the power nor the means nor the influence to contest his case in the courts.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. STONE, of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend by striking out the last word. I am unwilling to delay the passage of this bill by unnecessary discussion; but from reliable information coming to me from authentic sources I regard the feature of the bill now under discussion as of the very highest importance, and it ought to be understood by the House in its practical effect before we determine to retain it.

The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] occupied the greater part of his five minutes in pronouncing a eulogy upon the Supreme Court. There is no question about the capacity of the Supreme Court as our highest judicial tribunal to settle these questions as they ought to be settled; that is a matter which is not at issue here. This proviso simply proposes to change the general law as it applies to our public-land system throughout the entire country.

Mr. Chairman, in the State of Kansas or Nebraska, or in any of the Territories of the Northwest, if a contest should arise similar to such as may arise in Oklahoma, it is tried first before the register and receiver, then an appeal may be taken to the Commissioner of the General Land Office, and if the party is not satisfied with his decision an appeal may be taken to the Secretary of the Interior, whose conclusion is final. That is the general law applied in the administration of our public-land system from one end of the country to the other, and it has been the law for many years.

But here it is proposed, with reference to the public lands in the Territory of Oklahoma, and exclusively with reference to them, to authorize parties interested in land contests, after the Secretary of the Interior has made his decision, to carry the case to the supreme court of the District of Columbia, where a decision may be delayed three or four years, with a still further right of appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States, where the contest must await the slow and tedious processes of that tribunal.

Now, what is the practical phase of this question? The gentleman from Kansas in charge of this bill admits that contests have been initiated and are now being prosecuted in which persons claiming title under homestead entries come in conflict, not with one, but with many adverse claimants whose title rests upon town-site laws, laws of the municipality.

It is currently reported wherever it has found expression in this Hall, from authentic sources, from reliable sources, that the men who are endeavoring to establish these homestead entries are persons there with fraud upon their titles, "sooners" many of them are termed.

What is going to be the result if we give them this extraordinary privilege? Some gentlemen here may claim a lot in one of these towns, and may be brought into conflict with one of these "sooners." One hundred men claiming one hundred titles to one hundred lots may be brought into conflict, and there should be some provision in order to avoid delay on the part of these one hundred men claiming these one hundred lots, and in order they may put mortgages on them if they so desire or may dispose of them if they so desire. Instead, these men are compelled to wait eight or ten years before they can obtain possession by settling the dispute, or they must go to the "sooner" and make some contract with him by which he will quit-claim the interest he has to the lot or which he pretends to have to it.

I can see no reason why we should depart from that practice, which has been established by long usage in the country and which has been approved by many years of administration. Many have gone into that Territory, not only without authority of law, but in defiance of the very letter of the law itself.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. PETERS. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment to offer which I think will take precedence of the motion to strike out, as it is to perfect the words to be stricken out.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by inserting, after the word "its," in line 12, section 11, the following words: "Involving property exceeding $5,000 in value."

Mr. PETERS. Mr. Chairman, I think there is some good reason for an appeal in certain cases, but the great objection which has been made, and the great objection in my mind in regard to allowing an appeal, is that it places the homesteader, whose claim would not in any event for the first three or four years exceed the sum of one thousand or two thousand dollars, at the mercy of the man who has time and money to appeal to the higher court and thus invoke the law's delay.

The amendment I propose would exempt all that class of cases, and only allow an appeal in cases where the property in value exceeded the sum of $5,000.

I am also opposed to taking the appeal to the supreme court of the District of Columbia. If this amendment is adopted I shall offer another, proposing to strike out the words "the District of Columbia," and make the appeal to the supreme court of the Territory.

I do not believe there is any reason why the appeal should be taken to the supreme court of the District of Columbia. That court, as stated by the gentleman from Arkansas, is behind with its regular business, as I understand, about three years, and it would be almost an absolute denial of justice to provide for an appeal to the supreme court of the District of Columbia and from the supreme court of the District of Columbia to the Supreme Court of the United States. That would mean a delay which could not be avoided of from five to six years.

And I think, as stated, there are cases arising in town sites where there is a large amount of property involved and where there are intricate questions, which cases necessarily should be passed upon by a court. The questions involved in the settlement of these cases should be passed upon by a regular tribunal. Certainly it will not provoke delay to provide for appeals to the supreme court of the Territory of Oklahoma. That court when created will have but little business and it can dispose of it rapidly. Those familiar with the Land Office here know that, by making a showing that the disposal of one case will dispose of a large number of other cases, a person can have it made special and passed upon at once. So in this class of cases there need be no delay in the Land Office or in the office of the Secretary of the Interior by reason of lack of business, and there need be no delay in the supreme court of the Territory of Oklahoma.

I believe, therefore, that all those who are in favor of striking out the section ought to first try to amend it by limiting the amount as proposed to $5,000, and then, if possible, further amend it by making the appeal to the supreme court of the Territory, and then, if not even satisfied with that, move to strike out the whole measure when it is thus perfected.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Chairman, I rise to oppose the amendment. I think the gentleman from Kansas misunderstands the scope of this proviso. If the object, as suggested, is to settle a class of cases, manifestly it does not matter whether the case appealed involves a hundred, a thousand, or five thousand dollars of value. It should be settled all the same, because the case involved may settle a class involving hundreds of thousands or even millions of dollars, while the case itself might involve but $500. For that reason the amendment of the gentleman ought not to be agreed to.

Now, in reply to the remarks of the honorable gentleman from Missouri [Mr. STONE], whom I do not now see in his place, I fully agree with the objects which the gentleman desires to accomplish, namely, to secure a speedy determination of every important fact involving land contests everywhere; and, strange to say, the Committee on the Territories, after hearing all persons interested down there, were unanimously of opinion that this was the very way to secure a speedy and satisfactory determination of the legal questions involved.

Now, if we have mistaken the situation and the language we have used does not express in clear terms what we desire to accomplish, and what the gentleman from Missouri also desires to accomplish, from his remarks, then I urge my friend, who is a member of the Public Lands Committee, to formulate a proposition which will bring it about in a simple and more speedy manner; and I assure him that I will heartily co-operate with him in any proposition which will bring, at the earliest time, a satisfactory and final decision of the questions involved.

Mr. STONE, of Missouri. Will the gentleman permit me a moment?

Mr. SPRINGER. With great pleasure.

Mr. STONE, of Missouri. I think, in response to the gentleman's statement, that by adopting the amendment of the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. McRAE]—that is, by striking out this proviso and leaving the settlement and adjustment of these contests in Oklahoma to be determined by the same law and procedure that applies in all other cases—you will secure a complete and early settlement of the question.

Mr. SPRINGER. Very well. Now I am glad the gentleman has so stated. I want to inform the gentleman what the present law is, and that is just what we desire to improve. It is first a decision of the land officers, second an appeal to the Commissioner of the General Land Office at Washington, and from him to the Secretary of the Interior. That is the present course. Now, these cases are not heard as a judge trying a case at law. The Secretary of the Interior refers the case to his law clerk, and in a private room an entirely ex parte proceeding and hearing is had, and the Secretary's decision is simply perfunctory, his name being appended to the decision of his law clerk.

Mr. PETERS. The gentleman from Illinois is mistaken in that.

Mr. STONE, of Missouri. The gentleman does not state the case fairly.

Mr. SPRINGER. Let me ask the gentleman, Does the Commissioner of the General Land Office or does the Secretary of the Interior make a personal and official examination of the matter, or does it not take the course I have stated?

Mr. STONE, of Missouri. Upon a trial before a register or receiver both parties are heard, and when an appeal is taken the entire testimony is sent up to the Commissioner of the General Land Office, as it would be sent to one of these courts, and there the whole case is examined from the papers and passed upon by the officers.

Mr. SPRINGER. That is exactly what I said.

Mr. STONE, of Missouri. And I do not see why there should be an exception in the case of Oklahoma?

Mr. SPRINGER. The gentleman simply repeats what I have said, and has taken up a good deal of my time unnecessarily. The gentleman does not controvert the statement that the Secretary of the Interior does not examine these cases personally, but that they are committed to the law clerks to pass upon the question from the testimony presented.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. No member here is more anxious to protect the honest settlers of Oklahoma than are the members of the committee reporting this bill. I would not knowingly consent to any provision that is likely to embarrass them in their settlement, or efforts to settle, in a fair and judicial way the controversies and disputes that are almost certain to arise in that new Territory. I would not personally consent to anything that would embarrass them in their efforts to secure title to their homes, and a permanent settlement of the various controversies arising, at the earliest possible day. I know the embarrassment now existing. I know what difficulties the settlers have to encounter. I know, as suggested by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. STOCKDALE], that many settlers are poor and have gone there to better their condition in life, with the hope of securing, expeditiously, and with the expenditure of a small amount of money, their homes, and I do not want to embarrass them or delay their chance of securing titles.
